NORTHWEST Allied this week undertook a look around to se if any of the major distributors were violating the anti-consent decree state law in selling 1941-42 product. Through its legislative and executive committees Allied is considering means of checking sales of new season product. The distributors have given no word on what procedure they are adopting to license pictures in their first blocks-of-five.

"Citizen Kane" meanwhile has been booked into the Orpheum theatre in Minneapolis. Paramount and RKO have both made several deals in Minnesota, it is reported. However, Paramount is affiliated with the Minnesota Amusement Corporation circuit, and RKO is interested in operation of Mort H. Singer's Orpheum theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul. Through booking deals and a three-year franchise MGM has also supplied some pictures to the two chains.

Although surveying the situation Allied will take no action, it was indicated, until the St. Paul district court rules on the majors' injunction action against the state law.

Hanson Resigns

ANOTHER shift in the recently kaleidescopic Canadian film industry situation, enlivened at first by a theatre buying race between comparatively new Odeon and the long established Famous Players Canadian Corporation circuits, occurred Wednesday in Toronto with the resignation of Oscar R. Hanson as president of several distributing corporations, and his withdrawal from the Odeon circuit.

The move followed a meeting of Odeon chiefs last weekend, at Toronto, out of which, it was reported at the time, a "policy disclosure" was to come.

Mr. Hanson had been director of theatre operations for Odeon.

Press-edent?

THIS week, Monday, the Warner publicity department in Hollywood announced that, "for the first time since its inception," the Hays office had gone on record with a letter selling a motion picture to the motion picture industry.

Beating the drum for Warner Brothers' "One Foot in Heaven," Mrs. Thomas Winter, director of studio and public service of the MPDDA, Tuesday started mailing the first of more than 3,000 letters to every top-flight executive, player, director, writer and correspondent in town, it was announced.

On Tuesday the same Warner publicity source said, "The Hays office has gone all out in endorsement of "One Foot in Heaven." Acting on instruction from ex-Maine Gov. Carl Milliken, director of the Community Service Department of the MPPDA, Mrs. Alice Field, assistant director of studio and public service in the Hollywood office, will leave Wednesday for a series of talks with leading Methodist clergymen and executive heads of women's organizations in the northwest territory. Mrs. Field will visit Seattle, Spokane, Portland, Oakland and San Francisco on her trip, arranging private screenings for influential groups in each community well in advance of the picture's play date. In all instances some speaker of note, in no wise connected with the industry, will address groups on the merits of the picture."

Tuesday's Warner announcement did not refer to the letter mentioned in Monday's announcement.

Late Tuesday Mrs. Winter said the mailing of the letters alluded to had not commenced and would not commence "for a couple of days or so" pending settlement of some details.

Bank Nights Out

BANK NIGHTS are bowing out in Kentucky theatres. The games have already been dropped at most houses, and others are being rapidly forced to discontinue.

The statewide deathblow to the games came this week when the Schine Circuit at Louisville agreed to a consent judgment with Hubert Meredith, attorney general, in the State's suit to halt the games as a violation of the state constitution and statutes. As soon as the consent settlement is signed Mr. Meredith will issue warning to all theatres in Kentucky that they face legal action if they continue 'bank nights" or similar games.

The state's action against Schine, which controls all Louisville houses, asked forfeiture of the circuit's charter and fines covering the entire five years in which the games were operated. The circuit has now agreed to stop the games and the state has promised action against other theatres which persist in their use.

Peace, It's Wonderful

"ONE SLAP FLYNN" won't hit Air-gossiper Jimmie Fidler again.

At least, that's what the Robin Hood of Hollywood promised Judge Cecil D. Holland in a Los Angeles court Tuesday, in the aftermath of the night club fracas of two weeks ago that netted both national wire news service coverage, and which came as Mr. Flynn's tangible expression of his dislike of Mr. Fidler's testimony against the screen at the Senate hearings in Washington.

Errol Flynn, in the cafe, had defended the film industry with a mighty thwack called a punch by some, but modestly a slap by Mr. Flynn, who Tuesday told the judge "everything went black" when he saw Mr. Fidler, and who added:

"Here is a man allowed to live on the garbage of the business; and here he sets himself up as an expert on what is a good and a bad picture. I guess that drove me out of my mind."

Mr. Flynn referred thus obliquely to the Fidler testimony before the Senate Committee, Washington, on "propaganda" in pictures.

Fidler had gone to court for a peace bond to be put up by Mr. Flynn. Judge Holland called the two together for an amicable peace and in dismissing the complaint cautioned the star against further public outbursts advising him to have his fights in private hereafter.

Note to Editors

THE dawn of a new day looms now in the world of motion picture publicity as a result of the signal enterprise of Warner Brothers in the employment of a Powers model for contact work in New York with reference to the slick paper magazines, fashion arts, rotogravures and other vulnerable desks—not, it seems, including the trade press. Representations on trade practises are likely to be made to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers as a consequence.

It seems that Miss Josephine Caldwell, who is also the wife of Dr. Gilbert Barron, a Philadelphia interne, being of Philadelphia and the Caldwells, graduate of the University of Pennsylvania '40, also Phi Beta Kappa, majoring in literature, editor of Bennett News, college paper, president of Kappa Gamma Gamma, "Queen of the May," model for covers on McCalls, Redbook, etc., Miss Fashion Future at Mayor LaGuardia's show to make New York a style center, determined to invade the motion picture.

So it came that on the occasion of the last Warner convention in Chicago she made application at the publicity office which at the moment was filled by S. Charles Einfeld and Mort Blumenstock. She got the job. It is alleged that she has refused three offers of screen tests.

WARNER, ZANUCK TELL SENATORS THE INDUSTRY MINDS ITS OWN BUSINESS

EMPHATICALLY Harry M. Warner and Darryl F. Zanuck late last week at Washington told the Senate subcommittee investigating propaganda that the motion picture industry minded its own business, and that that business was supplying the screen demands of the American public.

There is no conspiracy to "pump war propaganda to the public" from the screen, as has been charged by isolationist Senators, the president of Warner Brothers and production head of 20th Century-Fox, told the committee in their testimony on Thursday and Friday. The pictures which the committee has cited as war propaganda are true to fact and accurately mirror public interest and concern in world affairs, they testified. The public, both men emphasized, has shown its interest in and support of the pictures at the boxoffice.

If the screen did not accurately reflect current public interests, it was asserted, it would fail in its responsibility to the public. If it was forced to do otherwise it would mean the loss of a fundamental American right of freedom of expression, they said.

With its future activities seen in Washington quarters as beclouded with uncertainties the Senate subcommittee this week was in recess. Official explanation was the absence from Washington on a speaking tour of isolationist Senator Charles W. Tobey, of New Hampshire, who with Chairman D. Worth Clark have been one of the principal interrogators for the group.

Senate Aroused

Unofficially, Washington reports indicated mounting sentiment within the Senate itself for a showdown on the activities of the subcommittee, appointed without direct authorization, by Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. The expense of the subcommittee, up for approval by the Senate Audit and Control committee also appeared likely to lead to a Senate test of the continuance when Senator Scott W. Lucas, chairman of the Audit group, indicated that he would refer expense vouchers to the floor of the Senate for approval.

The only non-isolationist member of the subcommittee, Senator Ernest W. McFarland, of Arizona, indicated that he too would seek a Senate show down on continuing the inquiry. He asserted that the investigation had completely wandered from its avowed purpose, interjecting racial prejudice, the hiring policies of the British Purchasing Commission and other extraneous topics into the hearings through "hearsay evidence."

Almost totally abandoning its original objective of determining whether there was propaganda in some 18 pictures which had been named to it the committee in four days of hearings last week explored practically every tangent that was suggested. This elicited the sharp warnings from Senator McFarland that he would take the issue to the Senate floor. He and Chairman Clark and Senator Tobey clashed frequently over the manner of calling and examining witnesses.

So incensed did Senator McFarland become over the unsupported and unproved charges which were bandied about, particularly by Senator Tobey, that last Friday he threatened to ask the Dies Committee on un-American Activities to investigate the investigators.

In eight days of hearings since the subcommittee first met on September 9th witnesses have been questioned on the subjects of war debts, freedom of the seas, Hollywood gown shops, racial discrimination, hiring policies of the British Purchasing Commission, speeches by Anthony Eden, newspaper advertising, the Legion of Decency, espionage, communism, monopoly, censorship, use of Army and Navy personnel and equipment and, occasionally, propaganda.

This list does not include the matters touched upon in side comment such as the charge Wendell Willkie will make for his services to the industry, or the accuracy of quotations from his campaign addresses, or other statements.

Warner, Zanuck, Balaban On

The industry rebuttal was continued at the hearings on Thursday and Friday, September 25th and 26th, through frequent digressions, by Harry M. Warner, Darryl F. Zanuck, and, briefly, by Barney Balaban, president of Paramount. They followed Nicholas M. Schenck to the stand and all were equally firm in reiterating his denial of any conspiracy within the industry, or of government pressure to make pro-war films. (The texts of Mr. Warner and Mr. Zanuck's statements are printed in adjacent columns).

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., was the last industry witness called by the committee Friday, before adjourning until October 6th. His testimony occupied only a few minutes, Chairman Clark apologizing for not having questions to put to the Paramount head. The Senator explained that the previous witnesses, Nicholas Schenck, Harry Warner, and Darryl F. Zanuck had already explained the corporate set-up and the production routine of the major companies satisfactorily.

Mr. Balaban explained, in answer to questions, that Paramount concentrated on musical, comedy and action films and had not undertaken topical subjects such as the pictures cited by the committee as "propaganda." In 1939, Mr. Balaban reported, the company considered making topical pictures, including several on war themes, but decided against doing so. He said that the Paramount leadership felt that the company's talent and staff were better adapted to the lighter type of film fare.

"We were just coming out of a slump," he said, "and doing well with the pictures then in progress, and we continued to go along on that basis, and we have done so well since that we have never changed."

Senator Clark expressed himself satisfied with the explanation of the Paramount policy, then added "I feel a little bit guilty about having called you, Mr. Balaban." The committee

HOLLYWOOD REFLECTS, SAYS ROSTEN

Dr. Leo G. Rosten, director of the Motion Picture Research Project, has completed a four-year study on the subject of Hollywood, the findings of which will be published in a book, "Hollywood: the Movie Colony, the Movie Makers," now in preparation for November release by Harcourt, Brace and Company.

The book was completed before the Senate subcommittee began inquiring into alleged war propaganda of the motion picture industry.

Dr. Rosten says, "The influence of Hollywood is immense and persuasive. It is an influence which transcends differences in languages, or customs, age or creed."

The sociologist points out, however, "This is not meant to imply that Hollywood creates its own values, or that Hollywood invents stereotypes with single-handed omnipotence, or that Hollywood causes the public acceptance of banal homilies. The movie makers are in many ways compelled to feed a popular diet to a public which is in firm possession of deplorable tastes—tastes derived from sources far older, deeper and more potent than Hollywood. The very success of Hollywood," Dr. Rosten declares, "lies in the skill with which it reflects the assumptions, the fallacies and the aspirations of an entire culture."

In the preface of his book, Dr. Rosten says, "Hollywood has often been attacked on irrelevant grounds, indicted with slipshod materials and generally harrassed by irresponsible commentators. It is one of the ironies of this state of affairs that many of the facts about which movie people have been most defensive are, in reality, neither as damaging nor as embarrassing as they fear. In few areas of American life is there such a miasma of myths and misconceptions as that which surrounds Hollywood."

then launched into an examination of reports, originating with Senator Tobey's secretary, that a Washington business school had been ordered by the British Purchasing Commission to exclude persons of German, Irish or Jewish ancestry from application for employment.

Warner Calls Films Topical

On Thursday, Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, in a full day on the witness stand, vigorously denied that his company had sought to make pictures to arouse war fever or hatred in the public. Citing four pictures, "Sergeant York," "Underground," "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" and "International Squadron," as typical, he reviewed in detail their foundation in historical fact and the routine through which they reached screen production.

"They were factual accounts of actual happenings, or the product of a consistent company production policy of dramatizing topical events," he said.

Personally, Mr. Warner said, he is in full accord with the President and the country's foreign policy. He expressed deep-rooted personal opposition to Hitler and Naziism, but denied that his convictions determined company production policy. He cited Warner's contributions to defense activities and a long-standing policy of producing patriotic films. Censorship of films, he concluded, would strip the screen of freedom of speech. Warners, he said, will not alter its policy of making accurate pictures.

Incidental to his testimony Mr. Warner also revealed that Senator Gerald P. Nye, one of the authors of the inquiry resolution, had himself approved "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" in 1939.

Mr. Zanuck, who followed Mr. Warner on Friday, attacked the charges voiced by the subcommittee as a step towards censoring the screen. He asserted that they would deny motion pictures the freedom of speech enjoyed by the theatre, magazines, book publishers and press.

Books, Magazines Are Sources

Twentieth-Century Fox, he told the inquisitors, based its attacked films on published books or magazine stories, substantiated by fact. Many stories were suggested by newspapers, he said. The "propaganda" charges he scored as "condemnation without an attempt to investigate the facts." To restrict screening of stories touching world upheaval, he added, would thwart the screen's service to the public as an entertainment medium and leave it sterile.

Personally, as did Mr. Warner, he expressed support of the Administration foreign policy, but also denied that this governed his studio's choice of production subjects.

Following Mr. Zanuck to the stand on Friday, James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner, described an alleged attempt by the manager of an MGM theatre in Nashville to censor Jimmie Fidler's column. He substantiated a letter of protest over the "censorship" incident which he had sent to Will H. Hays, after MGM had withdrawn advertising from his paper. He added, however, that the advertising had been quickly restored and the local theatre manager repudiated. Howard Dietz, director of Metro advertising, had previously characterized the incident as a "tempest in a teapot."

The hearings recessed Friday after hearing testimony from Senator Tobey's son, Charles W. Tobey, Jr., his secretary, Robert D. L'Heureux, and Mrs. Penny Adams and Mrs. Charlotte Oehman, employes of the Boyd Secretarial School, which has supplied help to the British Purchasing Commission in Washington.

Seenators McFarland and Clark clashed bitterly over calling the last witnesses who testified to discrimination against Irish, Jewish, and German descendants on the part of the British agency.

Senator McFarland declared that he had the right, as minority member, to know the names of witnesses a day in advance. The chairman overruled him and the Arizona Democrat directly accused the majority members of using the hearings as a sounding board against the Administration. He also attacked the initial charges by Senator Nye which prompted the inquiry and hinted that he would ask the Dies committee to investigate their origin.

The sessions adjourned soon afterwards, until next Monday, October 6th. At that time Charles Chaplin and Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will be called, Senator Clark predicted.

Wendell L. Willkie, counsel for the industry on Friday characterized the inquiry as one of the first attempts to dictate what America should read or see as entertainment. The investigation, he asserted, is a serious threat to free speech. He compared films with book publishing and noted that 36 out of 40 best sellers in the last two years could be called anti-Nazi or pro-British by the committee's standards.

Mr. Willkie also won an apology from Senator Clark who had attacked the former Republican presidential candidates' statements, asserting that his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had admitted they were "just campaign oratory." The Senator admitted he had incorrectly quoted the record.

As the investigation entered its fourth week it continued to attract more condemnation than support from the editorial columns of the press, civil liberty groups, labor unions, the American Legion, Better Film Councils and individuals.

"The Fight for Freedom" committee at New York, in a study of newspaper editorials found that comment was overwhelmingly against the inquiry, as a threat to free speech, and as a misapplication of Senatorial powers of investi-

Harry M. Warner Tells Committee Personal Views, Industry Stand

Following is the text of the statement read by Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., in testimony at Washington on September 25th before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee's subcommittee investigating allegations of war propaganda in motion pictures:

I have read in the public press the accusations made against the motion picture industry by Senator Gerald P. Nye and others. I have also read the testimony of Senators Nye and Bennett C. Clark and others before your committee. After measuring my words, and speaking with full sincerity, I want the record to show immediately that I deny, with all the strength I have, these reckless and unfounded charges.

At various points in the charges, Warner Brothers and I have been mentioned specifically. The charges against my company and myself are untrue. The charges are either based on a lack of information or concocted from pure fancy. Yet the gossip has been widely disseminated.

I am opposed to Naziism. I abhor and detest every principle and practice of the Nazi movement. To me, Naziism typifies the very opposite of the kind of life every decent man, woman and child wants to live. I believe Naziism is a world revolution whose ultimate objective is to destroy our democracy, wipe out all religion and enslave our people—just as Germany has destroyed and enslaved Poland, Belgium, Holland, France and all the other countries. I am ready to give myself and all gation. The Anti-Nazi League of New York repeated its request to the committee for a chance to testify against the exhibition of pro-German films here. The American Civil Liberties Union accused the Senators of concealing their motives with facts from the testimony.

Condemnation of the inquiry, plus a demand hearings be stopped, was voted by the California Federation of Labor, meeting in San Francisco. The resolution was presented by Pat Somerset of Screen Actors Guild.

The Screen Writers Guild again asked that its representatives be permitted to testify. The Los Angeles Labor Council voted a condemnation of the inquiry tactics. Two members of Congress attacked the subcommittee. Representative Emanuel Celler of New York in a radio address over station WMCA said that the committee sought to establish a congressional censorship of film subjects. Congressman John M. Costello, of Los Angeles, also characterized the inquiry as an attempt at censorship and said the whole procedure had failed in the objects set up for it by isolationist sponsors.

The Atlanta Better Films Committee called the proceedings "ridiculous" in a letter to the committee and the films council of the California Federation of Women's Clubs called the hearings an "unwarranted and discriminating attack on one industry."

Stage Group Forms Stop Film Censorship Group

Representatives of the New York theatre, church, labor and civic organizations gathered Monday at the Martin Beck theatre with leaders of the stage to organize a national campaign against the subcommittee. Bert Lytell, president of Actors' Equity, and chairman of the new Stop Film Censorship Committee, presided. Mady Christians, actress; Brock Pemberton and Herman Shumlin, producers; Mr. Lytell; the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, who represented the Right Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York; Thomas Murtha, president of the Central Trades and Labor Council, A. F. of L., and Stanley Isaacs, Borough President of Manhattan, addressed the meeting.

A resolution condemned the hearings as "an immediate threat to free thought, free speech and to the very fundamentals of liberty."

A permanent administrative committee of 22, headed by Mr. Lytell and Frank Gillmore, president of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, was appointed. Mr. Gillmore will serve as honorary chairman; Mr. Lytell, chairman; Elmer Rice, president of the Dramatists Guild, as treasurer, and Joseph Gould, president of the Screen Publicists Guild, as administrative secretary. Other members are Thomas J. Lyons, Thomas Murtha, Dr. George Counts, Hendrik William Van Loon, Miss Christians, James Reilly, Lillian Hellman, Mrs. Alice Duer Miller, Herbert Bayard Swope, Lawrence Tibbett, Miss Margaret Webster, William Morris, Jr., and Walter White.

The following organizations were represented: New York State Federation of Labor; Lawyers' Guild; Jewish War Veterans; the Friars; Local 802, Musicians' Union; Painters' District Council No. 9; Friends of Democracy; American Civil Liberties Union; Newspaper Guild of New York; United Mine Workers; Hadassah, Jewish women's organization; Screen Actors' Guild; Amalgamated Clothing Workers; American Federation of Teachers; Central Trades and Labor Council; Textile Workers; United Parents Association; International Ladies Garment Workers Union; Ministers Union, and the United Electrical, Radio and Machinist Workers Union.

my personal resources to aid in the defeat of the Nazi menace to the American people.

I realize that my convictions of themselves, are unimportant. However, I am proud of them. As a matter of fact, I have never made a secret of them. I have always believed that every citizen has the right to express his views. I have done so both among my friends and associates and publicly to the press. I stand on my public record of the last eight years. But for the record of the hearings and to avoid misrepresentation, I should like to summarize my convictions. They are not newly found convictions. They are deep-rooted.

Shortly after Hitler came to power in Germany, I became convinced that Hitlerism was an evil force designed to destroy free people, whether they were Catholics, Protestants or Jews. I claim no credit as a prophet. Many appraised the Nazis in their true role, from the very day of Hitler's rise to power.

I have always been in accord with President Roosevelt's foreign policy. In September 1939, when the second World War began, I believed, and I believe today, that the world struggle for freedom was in its final stage. I said publicly then, and I say today, that the freedom which this country fought England to obtain, we may have to fight with England to retain.

Supports President

I am unequivocally in favor of giving England and her allies all supplies which our country can spare. I also support the President's doctrine of freedom of the seas, as recently explained to the public by him.

Frankly, I am not certain whether or not this country should enter the war in its own defense at the present time. The President knows the world situation and our country's problems better than any other man. I would follow his recommendation concerning a declaration of war.

If Hitler should be the victor abroad, the United States would be faced with a Nazi-dominated world. I believe—and I am sure that the committee shares my feeling—that this would be a catastrophe for our country. I want to avoid such a catastrophe. as I know you do.

I have given my views to you frankly and honestly. They reduce themselves to my previous statement. I am opposed to Naziism. I abhor and detest every principle and practise of the Nazi movement. I am not alone in feeling this. I am sure that the overwhelming majority of our people and our Congress share the same views.

Public Approves Pictures

While I am opposed to Naziism, I deny that the pictures produced by my company are "propaganda," as has been alleged. Senator Nye has said that our picture "Sergeant York" is designed to create war hysteria. Senator Clark has added "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" to the isolationist blacklist. John T. Flynn, in turn, has added "Underground." These witnesses have not seen these pictures, so I can not imagine how they can judge them. On the other hand, millions of average citizens have paid to see these pictures. They have enjoyed wide popularity and have been profitable to our company. In short, these pictures have been judged by the public and the judgment has been favorable.

"Sergeant York" is a factual portrayal of the life of one of the great heroes of the last war. If that is propaganda, we plead guilty. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" is a factual portrayal of a Nazi spy ring that actually operated in New York City. If that is propaganda, we plead guilty.

So it is with each and every one of our pictures dealing with the world situation or with the national defense. These pictures were carefully prepared on the basis of factual happenings and they were not twisted to serve any ulterior purpose.

Screen Is Accurate

In truth, the only sin of which Warner Brothers is guilty is that of accurately recording on the screen the world as it is, or as it has been. Unfortunately, we cannot change the facts in the world today. If the committee will permit, we will present witnesses to show that these pictures are true to life. I am certain that we can easily prove to you that Warner Brothers has not duped its patrons but has, in fact, kept its obligation to the movie-going public.

Apparently our accusers desire that we change our policy of picturing accurately world affairs and the national defense program. This, Warner Brothers will never do. This, I am sure the Congress would not want us to do. This, I am certain the public would not tolerate.

As I have said, reckless and unfounded charges have been made before your committee against Warner Brothers and myself. These charges are so vague that, frankly, I have great difficulty in answering them. However, they have been widely disseminated and may be believed by the uninformed. I have tried to summarize the charges. They seem to divide into four allegations, as follows:

Summary of Charges

1. That Warner Brothers is producing a type of picture relating to world affairs and national defense for the purpose allegedly of inciting our country to war.

This, we deny. Warner Brothers has been producing pictures on current affairs for over twenty years and our present policies are no different than before there was a Hitler menace. . . . The pictures complained of were prepared under similar studio routine to all Warner Brothers productions.

2. That the Warner Brothers pictures concerning world affairs and national defense are inaccurate and are twisted for ulterior purpose.

This, we deny. The pictures complained of are accurate. They were all carefully researched. They show the world as it is.

3. That Warner Brothers is producing pictures that the public does not wish to see and will not patronize. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. All of the productions complained of have been profitable. To the point is "Sergeant York," which, I believe will gross more money for our company than any other picture we have made in recent years.

WARNERS' HISTORY, POLICY TOLD

4. That, in some mysterious way, the government orders us to make this or that type of picture.

This, we deny. We receive no orders, no suggestions—direct or indirect—from the administration. It is true that Warner Brothers has tried to cooperate with the national defense program. It is true that Warner Brothers, over a period of eight years, has made feature pictures concerning our Army, Navy and Air Force. It is true that we have made a series of shorts portraying the lives of American heroes. To do this, we needed no urging from the government and we would be ashamed if the government would have to make such requests of us. We have produced these pictures voluntarily and proudly.

How Company Operates

To disprove these silly charges and so that your committee may have all the facts, I would like to explain to you how our company came into existence; how our policies are established; how the company operates; and particularly how certain pictures were selected and filmed. I want to explain in detail, so that you may know the truth. I want to tell you these things so that you may no longer be dependent for your information on the half-truth and the misinformed witness.

Our company is managed by my two brothers and myself. Jack L. Warner is in charge of production. Major Albert Warner is in charge of distribution. I am president.

It is pertinent to tell you how our company started. We are not newcomers in the business. We helped pioneer the motion picture industry. We are not interlopers who seized control of a large company by some trick device. We were the first to accept the talking picture and out of our decision grew the large company of today.

How Warners Grew

The motion picture business began 45 years ago in the now famous Koster & Bial's Music Hall in New York City. Of course, the pictures of that day were nothing like the talking pictures of our era. Ten years after this historic event my brothers and I started on our motion picture career. If I may have the indulgence of the committee, I will take you back to 1906, when motion pictures consisted of a short flickering movie without plot.

We were then living in New Castle, Pennsylvania. There was no nickelodeon in the town. We began to think how one could be started. I had my eye on an empty store on the main street of New Castle. Fortunately, next door there was an undertaking establishment where it was esay to borrow the necessary chairs. I shopped around for a projection machine and finally discovered a second hand one that could be purchased cheaply. The question of employees was easy. Rose, my sister, could play the piano. Sam, my brother, soon learned how to run a projector. Albert, another brother, sold the tickets. My brother Jack sang with the illustrated slides. I, of course, being the eldest, asserted myself and took on the job of arranging for the show and the pictures. Our nickelodeon in New Castle was successful.

With the capital we saved from our profits, a year later our modest business venture began to expand. We opened other nickelodeons and the growth of Warner Brothers followed closely the growth of the motion picture industry. Soon, we expanded and began to produce our own pictures.

By 1920 we had produced such pictures as the dramatization of Sinclair Lewis's books, "Main Street" and "Babbitt;" Charles Norris' book "Brass," and many others. Today, pictures of this type are accepted in the trade, but not 20 years ago when producers feared to venture outside of the field of western thrillers and slap-stick comedies. I would like the committee to note that as long ago as the 1920's Warner Brothers was pioneering by portraying the world of that era.

The important historical point in the history of Warner Bros. came in 1926. I was invited to the Bell Laboratories to witness one of those experiments that most people say can never be done and yet which are ultimately always done. This time "the fool inventors" had a device to synchronize sound with silent pictures. The idea had been peddled far and wide within the motion picture business and had been discarded. I listened to the device and was impressed. The thought occurred to me that here was the opportunity for every theatre in the country to have a musical accompaniment to its pictures.

Tells of Sound Development

At the time, as you will remember, only the theatres in large cities could afford symphonic orchestras. But in the back of my mind there was also the hope that the day had now come when the motion picture screen would actually speak—when that which was only possible for the legitimate stage could be brought to the millions of patrons who were going to the movies.

Again, I lay no claim to being a prophet. But I tell you frankly that afternoon in the Bell Laboratories thrilled me. I thought I had seen the most important development since moving pictures were first thrown on the screen. Yet I could not help but hesitate. The larger motion picture companies directed by men much more successful than I had already turned down the new contrivance.

But after talking it over with my brothers, we decided to enter upon the venture. I agreed with the Western Electric Company to sell the sound machines, under the trade name of Vitaphone. The next 12 months were feverish. We worked day and night preparing for the launching of pictures with sound and in August, 1926, the Warner Brothers presented for the first time a complete Vitaphone show. We gave to the public the music of noted artists. It was nothing like the motion pictures of today, but it was the beginning of the talking picture.

Its reception exceeded our greatest expectations and we immediately began preparation for the first feature sound picture, "The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson. I need not recall to you the success of that picture. Our theatre could not accommodate those who wished to see it. With this event, the talking picture had become an accepted part of American entertainment.

Serve American People

Perhaps I have seemed immodest, in telling you so frankly the contribution that my company made to the motion picture business. But I am very proud of it. You and I both know what talking pictures have meant not only to Americans, but to the citizens of every land in the world. These pictures have done much to entertain and inform all types of people, whether living in the city or on the farm.

From the New Castle days when the first Warner Brothers theatre was manned by my brothers and my sister, it is a far step to the Warner Brothers of today, which employs personnel numbering 13,000. It is a far step from the nickelodeon seating 99 persons to our 4,000-seat theatres and from our silent films, which cost but a few hundred dollars then, to our $2,000,000 talking pictures of today.

Policy Not Changed

But essentially there has been no change in our policy. When we showed our first picture, 35 years ago, we wanted to please, entertain and inform our fellow-townsmen. Today that is the objective of our studios, on a national scale.

In order that I may show how prejudiced and misinformed are the charges against us, I would like your indulgence again to explain in some detail how Warner Brothers operated. I as president of the company wish to assume the full responsibility for the pictures we produce. That is a responsibility that should be mine, and one from which I do not shirk. However, I would not be telling you the truth if I left you with the impression that I personally select or supervise the pictures that we make. To be successful, a motion picture company must utilize skilled men both in the selection and production of pictures. I would never be qualified for such an intricate and delicate job.

Our company has been successful, I believe, because we have recognized that motion picture production cannot be dependent upon the feelings, intuition or knowledge of any one person. Instead, we have assembled the best talent available. Their job is to select from the huge amount of material that is presented to us, the subject and stories in which they think the public would be interested. Their job is to present it on the screen in a way that will attract and please the public.

Explains Story Selection

I have the idea that our accusers believe that I, together with one or two others, sit down in secret conference and plot the kind of pictures which we propose to make. Nothing could be further from the fact. Our success does not depend upon my personal opinions; it depends upon millions of Americans who find entertainment and enjoyment in pictures.

This, then, is the cardinal principle of Warner Brothers—that we produce motion pictures of all kinds, with the one objective of giving to our customers a wide variety of the kind of entertainment they want.

But again I want to be frank with this committee. As I have indicated, our company has pioneered what, for a better phrase, I will call "action" picture. By that I mean, we have tried to portray on the screen current happenings of our times. We have tried to do this

EQUITY ORDERS "ISM" BALLOT

The council of Actors Equity at its meeting on Tuesday appointed a committee to draft the text of a referendum to determine whether a constitutional amendment to bar Fascists or Communists from holding office in the union should be submitted to the membership. The action followed a recommendation at the quarterly membership meeting on Friday that the council take action against sympathizers with the "isms."

If the referendum is approved another committee will be appointed next month to draft the proposed amendment which in turn will be sent to the membership for approval.

SAYS PICTURES RECORD HISTORY

realistically and accurately and over a long period we have discovered that the public is interested in and grateful for this type of picture. Perhaps I can explain what I mean better by listing a few of these pictures.

We produced "British Agent," which was an expose of Communistic Russia based upon the book by Bruce Lockhart. We produced "Black Fury," which was a factual portrayal of conditions in the coal mining industry. We also produced many realistic biographies of such great world figures as "Pasteur," "Juarez," "Dr. Ehrlich" and "Zola," who aroused the conscience of the world in behalf of Dreyfus, the victim of religious bigotry.

Screen Records History

I have no apology to make to the committee for the fact that for many years Warner Brothers has been attempting to record history in the making. We discovered early in our career that our patrons wanted to see accurate stories of the world in which they lived. I know that I have shown to the satisfaction of the impartial observer that Warner Brothers, long before there was a Nazi Germany, had been making pictures on topical subjects. It was only natural, therefore, with the new political movement, however horrible it may be, that we should make some pictures concerning the Nazis. It was equally logical that we should produce motion pictures concerning national defense.

At the risk of being tedious—and only because I believe the issue is so fundamental not only to the motion picture industry but to all mediums of information, I ask your indulgence in considering in detail four of the pictures, which have been complained about. I know that the committee will want a complete background of how these pictures happened to be filmed, in order that the Senate may evaluate whether the allegations against them are correct. After you hear the history of these pictures, I am sure you will agree with me that it was both proper for Warner Brothers to present them to the public and that, rather than exaggeration, they are understatements of the events that they describe.

Record on "Nazi Spy"

I have no desire to infringe unduly on the time of this very preliminary hearing. I should like to read to you the case history of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy." I have prepared similar summaries on "Sergeant York," "Underground" and "International Squadron." I will not take the time to read these latter summaries, but I would like to present them for your record.

"Confessions of a Nazi Spy" was exhibited to the public beginning April, 1939, or six months before the outbreak of the Second World War. The plot was not the creation of a fiction writer. Nor did we sit down to devise a story to show the dangers of Nazi espionage. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" correctly portrays the operation of a Nazi spy ring in this country, as this operation was disclosed at a Federal trial which convicted the conspirators.

In June, 1938, certain persons were indicted in a New York Federal Court, charged with being Nazi spies and with violation of U. S. espionage laws. The spy ring was revealed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the charges attracted great attention in newspapers throughout the country. Before the trial began, the New York Post announced that it would publish a series of daily articles on the spy ring, authored by Leon G. Turrou, a former FBI agent, who was active in developing the case.

We have in New York a story department, whose responsibility is to report to our West Coast studios on articles, plays, books or any other literary material which might be adaptable to the screen. Mr. Wilk, our New York story editor, noted the announcement of the New York Post articles and relayed this information to Jack L. Warner, who is in charge of production. The idea received a friendly reception in our production department and Wilk was authorized to inspect Mr. Turrou's material, with a view to making a motion picture. Mr. Turrou's material was impressive and we purchased the motion picture rights.

The New York Post articles were postponed until after trial, which began on October 14, 1938. The defendants were convicted in a New York District Court on November 29, 1938, and sentenced on December 2nd. The Turrou articles were then printed by the Post and syndicated in many newspapers.

As the Federal trial progressed, the testimony was used by our company as a practical basis for the picture. In addition, our script writers had the Turrou articles which described in detail the FBI investigation preceding the trial. For additional facts, our writers referred to a great many current books, magazines and newspaper articles, particularly an article in the American Magazine, written by Joseph F. Deneen and captioned 'An American Fuehrer organizes an Army,' and articles in the Chicago Daily News written by John C. Metcalfe. Mr. Metcalfe was not writing hearsay. As a reporter for the Chicago Daily News, Mr. Metcalfe joined the German-American Bund, in order that he might have first-hand knowledge of the Bund's operation.

Checked for Accuracy

The final script was rechecked for accuracy and the resulting effort was a carefully prepared picture, portraying—on the basis of factual happenings—Nazi Bund espionage within this country; the semi-military German-American camps within the United States and the tie-in of these bunds with Nazi Germany.

We gave the public a dramatization of a Nazi spy ring. But I repeat, the dramatization was not the creation of our imaginations. The facts had been unfolded before Federal Judge Knox; they had been recorded in daily newspapers and magazines; they were well known in local communities where the German-American Bund was operating.

I can not conceive how any patriotic citizen could object to a picture accurately recording a danger, already existing within our country. Certainly it is not in the public interest for the average citizen to shut his eyes-ostrich-like to the attempts of Hitler to undermine the unity of those he seeks to conquer. The experience of Norway and its Quisling, and the sad fate of too many other countries is too recent not to be in our memories. And we certainly have no apology for producing "Confessions of a Nazi Spy."

There has been a great deal of loose talk that we are producing pictures, such as "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," that the public does not wish to see. Civic, patriotic and labor organizations endorsed this picture. Hundreds of thousands of movie patrons paid to see it. Contrary to rumors, the picture made a sizeable profit. So much has been made of this point, that I have brought with me 550 letters, telegrams and postcards from 110 cities congratulating us on "Confessions of a Nazi Spy." I offer these documents as proof to offset the hearsay on the picture's "unpopularity."

(Mr. Warner here read into the record several comments on the picture printed in pro- and anti-Nazi German American newspapers.)

Nye Also Approved Film

But I am willing to rest my case on one reaction alone—that of Senator Nye. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" was privately shown in Washington on May 11, 1939, and Senator Nye attended the preview. I want to read you a telegram which was sent to our New York office, at that time, by Mr. Ed Harrison of our advertising staff, who talked with Senator Nye after the Senator saw the picture. The telegram follows:

"Senator Nye said quote The picture is exceedingly good. The cast is exceptionally fine. The plot may or may not be exaggerated, but is one that ought to be with every patriotic American. As for myself I hope there may be more pictures of a kind dealing with propaganda emanating from all foreign lands. Anyone who truly appreciates the one great democracy upon this earth will appreciate this picture and feel a new allegiance to the democratic cause.' "

You will note that Senator Nye said of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy": "Anyone who truly appreciates the one great Democracy upon this earth will appreciate this picture and feel a new allegiance to the Democratic cause." On this, I agree with Senator Nye.

I now would like to put in the record the summaries on the history of "Sergeant York," "Underground" and "International Squadron." If the committee would like similar information on any of our other pictures, I should be delighted to prepare the information.

(Mr. Warner submitted seven pages on the history of the three pictures cited, along with press and other commentaries on them.)

I have selected these four pictures to give their case histories because they have been publicly criticized and because they vary sufficiently to give a cross-section of alleged propaganda films of all types.

Cites Production Statistics

I want to point out that, although we have produced 140 features pictures in the last two and a half years, only seven have been alleged to be propaganda. These seven pictures include the four I have descvribed. The others are a picture detailing the founding of Reuters News Service in Germany and England; a minor mystery spy melodrama and a picture called "Dive Bomber," dealing with the strain of pilots of military bombing planes. "Dive Bomber" is one of a series of 11 pictures we have released since 1933, portraying the American Army, Navy and Air Force. We have no reason to fear the judgment of the public in our self-imposed task of picturing our defense forces.

Every year, more than 9,000 pieces of literary material are submitted to Warner Brothers as possible picture material. Yet we only produce 50 feature pictures a year. As I have said, the work of deciding upon a picture is not a job for a few people, but for a large specialized organization. We have a story department in New York and one in Hollywood, whose task it is to mull over thousands of plays, books, articles and ideas for picture possibilities. Synopses of attractive stories are turned over by these scouts and readers to our associate editors. If their approval for a picture is obtained, the story is then circulated among our 14 associate producers. If one of them likes the idea, he takes it to Hal Wallis, executive in charge of production. The pictures are finally approved by Jack Warner. As can be easily seen from this brief description, pictures are not made as some people seem to think, on the basis of whim and fancy.

QUOTES NYE'S APPROVAL OF 'SPY'

If Warner Brothers had produced no pictures concerning the Nazi movement, our public would have had good reason to criticize. We would have been living in a vacuum and dream world. Today 70 per cent of the non-fiction books published deal with the Nazi menace. Today 10 per cent of the fiction novels are anti-Nazi in theme. Today 10 per cent of all material submitted to us for consideration is anti-Nazi in character. Today, the newspapers and radio devote a good portion of their facilities to describing Naziism. Today, there is a war involving all hemispheres except our own and touching the lives of all of us.

Produce Patriotic Shorts

Warner Brothers produces no news reels. Besides feature pictures, we produce and distribute approximately 100 short subjects a year. These shorts vary greatly in theme and character. But there is one group of shorts, to which I call attention, the so-called Warner Patriotic Shorts. They portray great events in the history of our country, such as the writing of the "Star-Spangled Banner;" the purchase by President Jefferson of the Louisiana territory; President Lincoln's delivery of the Gettysburg Address; high-lights in the life of President Theodore Roosevelt.

These shorts are accurate recordings of historic events in the making of America. Besides being shown in theatres, they are made available without charge to schools and colleges, patriotic groups and societies. There has been a great demand for them. Endorsements and commendations for these pictures have come from 25 national civic groups, 12 national patriotic organizations, 15 national magazines, thousands of schools, educators, libraries and public spirited citizens.

I submit for the record the list of organizations that have endorsed these pictures. Also I include a few typical letters of commendation, including one from the American Museum of Natural History and the President General of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

I am hopeful that these shorts, recording important events in American history, will help, in a small way, to keep alive in our citizens an appreciation of the blessings and liberties under our form of government. Unfortunately, many of us now take these liberties almost for granted.

No Profit Motive Abroad

There is one last charge against the motion picture industry that I have not mentioned. It is repugnant to me. In essence, it is that we support Britain and oppose Naziism because we have a financial stake in Britain. Warner Brothers receives a net revenue of approximately $5,000,000 a year from Britain. If we were to stop receiving this revenue, we would continue to operate, just as we did in 1932 through 1934, when our gross revenue declined by $50,000,000. If we were able to adjust our affairs to offset this loss in revenue, then I certainly am not worried about a drop of $5,000,000. In truth, this charge challenges our business judgment and our patriotism.

No one with any business judgment could possible have acted on the assumption that the policy of this country towards England would be influenced by the relatively small investment of our industries in England.

Warner Brothers has certainly not acted on the theory that our government would pull our chestnuts out of the fire. When we saw Hitler emerge in Germany, we did not try nor did we ask our government to appease him. We voluntarily liquidated our business in Germany. Business is based on keeping contracts, and Hitler does not keep his contracts with men, or with nations. No one can do business with Hitler's Germany. If, God forbid, a similar situation should arise in Britain, we would follow the same course as we did in Germany.

We never ourselves or through our government will try to save our profits at the expense of other people's lives and liberties. That would be as short-sighted a business policy as it is a national policy.

I am an American citizen, and I bow to no one in my patriotism and devotion to my country. Our country has become great because it is in truth, a land of freedom. No one can take these freedoms from the American people. The United States has always been a united nation of free people living in tolerance and faith in each other. We have been able to achieve this unity because of the freedoms of the individual.

In conclusion, I tell this committee honestly, I care nothing for any temporary advantage or profit that may be offered to me or my company. I will not censor the dramatization of the works of reputable and well informed writers to conceal from the American people what is happening in the world. Freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom of enterprise cannot be bought at the price of other people's rights. I believe the American people have a right to knew the truth. You may correctly charge me with being anti-Nazi. But no one can charge me with being anti-American. Thank you, gentlemen, for your courtesy in listening.

Darryl Zanuck Cites Story Sources as Accuracy Proof

The statement by Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production of the twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, before the Senate Subcommittee concerning alleged propaganda in motion pictures follows:

At the outset, it seems necessary to state my personal background. I was born in Wahoo, Nebraska, September 5, 1902. At the date of my birth, Wahoo had a population of approximately 891 people. It has become famous as the birthplace of one of baseball's immortals—"Wahoo" Sam Crawford. My mother and father were both born in the United States of America. My grandparents, on both my mother's and father's side, were born in the United States of America. My parents and grandparents were regular attendants and lifelong members of the Methodist Church.

I left Wahoo at the age of 15 years and enlisted as a private in the United States Army, in the first World War. I served overseas during that conflict and rose to the rank of Private First Class.

Senator Nye, I am sure, will find no cause for suspicion or alarm in that background.

Various charges have been made and published in the course of this inquiry. In order to avoid misunderstanding, I would like to make my position clear on a number of these points.

In respect to my personal opinion regarding the entry of the United States into the war at the present time: I want to say first that no man who was in France during the last war can look upon war with anything but the deepest abhorrence. I wish our country would never have to fight another war. I want this country to go to war only if that is an absolute necessity either to defend ourselves now or to prevent a future attack.

In this time of acute national peril, I feel that it is the duty of every American to give his complete cooperation and support to our President and our Congress. To do everything to defeat Hitler and to preserve America. If this course of necessity leads to war I want to follow my President along that course.

It has been further charged that Hollywood has been asked to make propaganda pictures designed to arouse a war spirit in the United States. This is not so. I assure you that no representative of the government has asked me directly or indirectly to make pictures for the purpose of getting this country into war.

We have been asked by the government to make training pictures for the United States Army. We have made these pictures at cost and without profit as a matter of patriotic duty. I am happy to say that Chief of Staff, General Marshall, has told me that these films have done an immeasurable amount of good in saving manpower, material and time in organizing the defense of America. As this committee doubtless knows, these pictures are of a strictly educational nature. I cannot believe it is an offense either for the government to ask for this service from the industry, or for the industry to comply with such a request.

Cites Films

Senator Nye has charged that several pictures made by Twentieth Century-Fox are so-called propaganda pictures. I presume he refers to "Man Hunt" and "The Man I Married." The first, "Man Hunt," appeared in book form under the title of "Rogue Male," which was published by Little, Brown and Company. It also was serialized in the Atlantic Monthly. As for "The Man I Married," it was published under the title "I Married a Nazi," in Liberty Magazine and in book form under the title of "Swastika." Both were widely read.

To condemn the motion picture industry for dealing with subjects as timely, as vital and as important as the current upheaval in the world is to subject the industry to an impossible censorship. It would deny us access to the same vital developments which today fill our newspapers, magazines, books, the radio, and the stage. It would prevent us from giving to the people of America subjects that fill their newspapers, their books and their minds. It would leave the American motion picture as worthless and sterile as those made in Germany and Italy.

The daily newspaper has always furnished me and my associates ideas for motion pictures. I made the first gangster pictures which helped uncover the rottenness of the underworld in our various cities. Perhaps some of you saw "Public Enemy No. 1," which was the first expose on the screen of the underworld. We received many protests against that film. I suppose the underworld thought this was unfair propaganda against the gangster, just so some now feel our war pictures are unfair propaganda against Hitler.

Hollywood didn't create the underworld, nor did it create Hitler and the Nazis. We have portrayed them no differently than they are pictured daily in newspapers, magazines, books and all other mediums of expression. In fact we have merely portrayed them as they are.

The pictures, regarding which so many reckless and unfounded charges have been made, represent only a very small fraction of the Hollywood picture output. It is indeed strange that much effort and public money is being spent at such a crucial time over such a minor part of the industry's program. Nothing at all has been said by this Committee about the vast number of historical, patriotic and religious films the industry has been turning out each year. No word of praise is given for a service that should fill every American heart with pride.

Hits "Sabotage" Charge

Senators Clark and Nye have both made the charge that Twentieth Century-Fox deliberately sabotaged a picture called "The Great Commandment" because this film preached peace and good will. The fact that both Senators Nye and Bennett Clark have taken pains to put this charge into the record, without the slightest attempt to secure facts, easily available to them, which utterly refutes their charge, indicates the unfairness of the methods being used in this hearing. In reply to this charge let me give you the uncontrovertible facts:

We purchased this picture because we felt it had a message—the message of peace and good will—in which the American people would be interested. We paid Reverend Frederick and his clerical associates $150,000, which included a profit to them. We planned to make the picture as a great feature and at great cost. About this time we had released another picture based on a religious theme—"Brigham Young." Our experience with that production convinced us that the public was not in the mood to patronize a religious picture. This despite the fact that "Brigham Young" had the endorsement and official sponsorship of the Mormon Church. We made some changes in the "Great Commandment" and then engaged in a vigorous and expensive campaign to sell it to exhibitors.

The "Great Commandment" has played to date in 1,087 theatres in the United States. Last week it played in 49 theatres in 49 different communities, and it is now being booked regularly in an average of 30 theatres per week. We staged an elaborate world premiere at the Uptown Theatre in Kansas City and we secured the sponsorship of almost all of the religious organizations in that city. The box-office result of this showing was the most pitiful in the history of the Uptown Theatre. On Friday, Saturday and Sunday we played to a total admission of $1,010. An ordinary film will usually play to this amount in one day alone without any special exploitation.

To cover the Kansas City premiere we sent a special exploitation man who worked there in advance of the opening, and we spent, in addition to the usual theatre advertising, $320 for additional company paid advertisements. The theatre lost money and we ended up by receiving only $350 as our entire share for the engagement at the Uptown Theatre.

If you will look at the review of the opening in the Kansas City Times, you will see that we treated the picture with utmost care and exploitation the same as we gave to any of our pictures.

We have an investment of $200,000 in the "Great Commandment." Despite unusual efforts we have received back from the American showing less than $33,000. Any statement that we have suppressed this film or the theme it presents, is unqualifiedly false.

I would like also to call attention to Senator Bennett Clark's testimony before this Committee. He said that our industry was determined to wreak vengeance on Adolf Hitler by plunging this nation into war in behalf of another ferocious beast, referring to Stalin.

Undoubtedly Senator Clark has overlooked the fact that Stalin and Hitler were pals, joined in a non-aggression pact, at the very time all of the pictures belaboring the totalitarian ideology were being made.

The Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is exceedingly proud of its record of picture making and cooperation with its government. I am here to represent it in all of its production phases. I also offer myself as a personal exhibit of one who was able to make among the best of motion pictures as an independent producer. I shall be happy to answer your questions.

U.S. ISSUES OFFICIAL RULES FOR EXHIBITORS UNDER NEW WAR TAX

Treasury Reminds Exhibitors Increase Started at 12:01 A.M., October 1st; Managers Responsible for Learning Scale

Regulations covering the changes in the new Federal war-and-defense admission tax provisions which went into effect "as of the first moment of October 1," were issued by the U. S. Internal Revenue Bureau this week in the form of a mimeographed letter to all collectors of internal revenue, signed by Commissioner Guy T. Helvering.

The new tax is one cent on each ten, beginning with the first ten. Heretofore all tickets of 20 cents or less were exempt.

The reminder that the changed levy became effective at the "first moment"—12:01 A.M. of October 1 was interpreted as aimed at theatres throughout the country which remain open until the small hours of each morning to catch "night shift" patronage from defense plants, also theatres which run midnight shows.

Collectors were urged to circulate the information regarding the new situation to all persons concerned, in order that there might be no misunderstanding of the Government's requirements. It is the understanding, however, that it is the personal responsibility under the law for each exhibitor to acquaint himself with the specific tax requirements. Official text of these requirements appear in adjoining columns.

New Forms Prepared

Revised forms for the reporting of tax collections are now being developed and are to be ready for use next month when exhibitors prepare their October returns.

Attention was particularly called by Washington to the fact that free or reduced rate tickets allowed certain classes of customers are now taxable only on the actual amount for which sold, if any charge is collected, but other recipients of such tickets must pay the same tax as if they were bought at the established price.

Exhibitors whose admission price of not exceeding 20 cents has heretofore exempted them from the tax requirements now are required to collect taxes from their patrons, and the letter to collectors explained that, where there is delay in securing new tickets, properly printed to show the tax, they will be permitted to use tickets on hand, provided they are properly overprinted or overstamped to show the price and tax.

Exhibitors Ponder Admission Tax Action

Meanwhile, at mid-week, as the new Federal admissions tax became effective, exhibitors all over the country were pondering what to do about it—many raising admissions to conform with the tax, many absorbing it, and hundreds of others were conferring independently on the subject or at organizational meetings.

At the Savery Hotel in Des Moines on Monday, 150 exhibitors of the Iowa and Nebraska Independent Theatre Owners met and decided to increase adult admissions to provide for the Federal tax. Admissions will be increased from 16 to 20 cents; from 21 to 25 cents and from 26 to 30 cents. Children's admissions will be 10 cents, including the state sales tax, it was voted. Attorneys for Tri-State Theatres, Inc., who had worked on price scales with state and Federal attorneys, led the discussion on the tax question. Leo F. Wolcott, president of the ITO, presided.

More than 100 exhibitors, representing some 200 theatres in the Buffalo area also met on Monday at a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York, at 505 Pearl Street, MPTO headquarters. The decision was to add the new Federal tax to the admission price, rather than increase admissions. A. Charles Hayman, MPTO president, presided.

First run theatres in Cincinnati, it was reported this week, will not revise their admissions for adults because of the new tax, but price for children will be increased from 15 to 17 cents. Revised scales for the subsequent run houses will be determined at meetings now in progress by the Greater Cincinati Independent Exhibitors League.

Last week, however, Pete Wood, secretary of the Ohio ITO, issued a bulletin advising theatre owners to consider a general increase in admission prices as of October 1st. He pointed out that exhibitors should bear in mind that the Federal admission tax amounts to a minimum impost of 12 per cent upon the box office receipts. Ohio has a 0.3 per cent tax. Mr. Wood also said that "every exhibitor should dispel the thought of adjusting his price scale to absorb the tax. As a matter of fact, the law is worded so as to give every theatre owner a legitimate reason for passing the tax on to the patron."

In Detroit, representatives of more than 100 theatres including the Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, and many independents, informally

Treasury's Instructions on New Tax

Changes with Respect to the Taxes on Admissions and Dues Effected by the Revenue Act of 1941. . . . Collectors of Internal Revenue and Others Concerned:

The Revenue Act of 1941, approved September 20, 1941, effected certain changes with respect to the taxes on admissions and dues, and it is believed desirable that appropriate information regarding these changes should be circulated at the earliest practicable moment to all persons in your districts who may be concerned with the collection of the taxes on admissions and dues or the taxes applicable to cabarets and similar places of amusement.

All of the changes in the existing law with respect to the taxes on admissions and dues which are brought about by the Revenue Act of 1941 are effective as of the first moment of October 1, 1941 (10 A.M. of October 1, 1941, in the case of cabarets, roof gardens, etc.).

Section 1700(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by section 541 of the Revenue Act of 1941 so as to make the present rate of tax on admissions applicable to the amount paid for admission to any place regardless of the amount of such admission charge, except that any admission charge of less than 10 cents made to a child under 12 years of age will be exempt from the tax. Under the amendment all persons admitted free, or at a reduced rate (except bona fide employes, municipal officers on official business, children under 12 years of age, members of the military and naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps when in uniform), are liable for a tax based on the established price of admission to other persons for the same or similar accommodations. Therefore, employes, municipal officers on official business, members of the military and naval forces of the United States and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps when in uniform are not liable for tax if admitted free, and if admitted at a reduced price are liable for tax on the reduced price. The exception with respect to free or reduced-rate admissions to spoken plays is eliminated.

Section 1701 of the Internal Revenue Code, under which there are a number of exemptions such as where the proceeds of the admissions inure to religious, educational, or charitable organizations, agricultural fairs, Veterans' organizations, etc., and admissions to certain concerts, is repealed in its entirety. Consequently, no further exemptions shall be allowed for entertainments to be held on or after October 1, 1941, regardless of the disposition which may be made of the proceeds from the admissions. If any exemption certificates have already been issued by your office for entertainments to be held on or after October 1, 1941, the appropriate parties should be advised that they will be required to overstamp their tickets and to collect and account for the tax on all admission charges collected on and after October 1, 1941. This information should be given the widest publicity, particularly as to churches, schools, posts of the American Legion, and other organizations which have heretofore been entitled to exemption in respect of admissions inuring to their benefit.

Section 1700(e) of the Internal Revenue Code, under which a tax was imposed on amounts charged at cabarets, roof gardens, etc., has been amended in three important respects, namely, (a) the tax rate will be 5 per centum of the total amount paid for admission, refreshment, service, or merchandise, if the amount so paid, or any portion thereof, entitles the patron to be present during any portion of a performance at a roof garden, cabaret, or similar place furnishing a public performance for profit, (b) the provision exempting the admission charge if the amount paid was 50 cents or less (that is, if the amount paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise was under $2.50) has been eliminated, and (c) the tax is imposed upon, and shall be returned and paid by, the person receiving such payments. This tax is not required to be collected from the patron, as heretofore, but there is no objection to the cabaret, etc., passing it on to the patron if billed separately and in the exact amount.

Since there are a number of motion picture theaters, skating rinks, dance halls, etc., the admissions to which were not taxable before October 1, 1941, but which will be taxable on that date and thereafter, appropriate information should be circulated to such theaters, skating rinks, dance halls, etc., at the earliest practicable moment; and they should be advised that all admission charges are subject to the tax except in the case of admissions of less approved a price boost for practically all local houses, as of October 1st. All exhibitors agreed, however, on adding rather than absorbing the tax. As the meeting covered only key and subsequent-run houses, this move is dependent upon action to be taken by first and second-run houses which were to meet on Tuesday. Subsequent-run houses asked that the present 10-cent spread between second and key-runs be increased to 15 cents with the present split price of 44 cents for second-run admissions the key to the situation.

From New Haven early in the week reports indicated that downtown houses would pass on the one cent tax on 10-cent admissions to children. The Paramount, which has raised children's admissions to 15 cents on Saturdays after four o'clock and all day Sunday, had not definitely set its policy on adding or absorbing the two cents tax on this scale. Fairmount, New Haven, the Capitol, East Haven, and the White Way have been charging 15 cents for children for some time and it is believed they would continue. The leading subsequent-run houses in New Haven: Dixwell, Strand, Howard, Lawrence, Whalley, Whitney and Westville, will ask the children to pay 11 cents, while 15 cent afternoon admissions will be raised to 20 cents including tax, and 20 to 25, including tax.

Meanwhile, in Milwaukee, Warner's decreased by five cents admission prices to their Granada and Milwaukee theatres. "Early bird" admission prices were decreased from 20 to 15 cents. At Fox's recently acquired Garfield theatre, 20-cent matinees were inaugurated. Fox's Modjeska has a 30-cent matinee policy.

The Philadelphia Showmen's Club has elected Charles Goldfine president. He operates the Alden Theatre. In the elections, Monday, others elected were Meyer Adelman, Stand-In (vice-president); Charles Stiefel, Yes Man (secretary); Sam Rosen, Banker (treasurer); Joe E. Sapsis, Script Man (financial treasurer); D. M. Kirby, financial secretary; David W. Yaffe, Fixer (attorney); and for the Board of Producers (directors)—Edgar Moss, Ben Biben, Dave Rosen and Oscar Neufeld.

Form 729 used in reporting the tax on admissions will be revised at the earliest practicable date in order to incorporate the changes made necessary by the Revenue Act of 1941. It is expected that the new forms will be available in time for taxpayers to prepare their October returns and file them with the Collector by the end of November.

With respect to admission tickets which were previously not taxable, either by reason of the fact that the admission charges were under 21 cents, or due to the exemptions formerly allowed by section 1701 of the Internal Revenue Code, the following procedure has been approved:

(a) In all instances where it is practicable new tickets must be provided or the tickets on hand overprinted or overstamped, to show the established price and the tax applicable thereto.

(b) Section 1702 of the Internal Revenue Code specifically provides that the price for which every admission ticket or card is sold shall be printed, stamped, or written on the ticket. Accordingly, in every case where the established price of admission is changed new tickets will have to be provided or the tickets on hand must be overprinted or overstamped.

(c) Where the established price is not changed, for a limited time until properly printed tickets can be obtained, the use of tickets now on hand which do not show the tax due under the Revenue Act of 1941, will be permitted. However, the manager or proprietor must keep conspicuously posted at the outer entrance and near the box office one or more signs accurately stating each of the established prices of admission, and in the case of each such price the tax due and the sum total.

Social, athletic, and sporting clubs in your districts should be advised that under sections 1710 and 1712 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 543 of the Revenue Act of 1941, all dues or membership fees paid on or after October 1, 1941, are subject to the tax of 11 per cent, if the dues or fees paid by active resident annual members are in excess of $10.00 a year; and that amounts paid as initiation fees are taxable if such fees are in excess of $10.00 a year, or if the dues or membership fees of active resident annual members amount to more than $10.00 a year.

The various clubs should, likewise, be notified of the change in the meaning of the phrase "dues or membership fees" which now include any charges for social privileges or for golf, tennis, polo, swimming, or other athletic or sporting privileges or facilities, if made for any period of more than six days.

Dear Congress:
We urge you and every American to investigate this Sensational Motion Picture!

It is outright pro-movie propaganda.

It is obviously designed to win new followers for the screen.

It will stir up intense national feelings of excitement, emotion, pity and pride.

Its insidious purpose is to convince people that pictures can be both completely different and completely entertaining.

It will arouse tremendous sentiment in favor of the great director who produced it, the brilliant author who wrote it, the fine cast who play it.

It is just a simple story of what happens when a man turns from all that love can give to All That Money Can Buy... But it is one of the greatest motion pictures ever made.

FIRST CASE COMBINING SPECIFIC RUN CLEARANCE COMPLAINTS FILED

Jersey City Independent Asks Reclassification of Run and Clearance Adjustment; First New York Case Under Sec. X

The first arbitration action to combine both clearance and specific run complaints was filed on Tuesday with the New York tribunal of the American Arbitration Association by Jack Fields, president of the Rosyl Amusement Corporation operating the Cameo theatre in Jersey City, N. J. It names all five consenting distributors and five Jersey City theatres, including the Apollo, operated by the Skouras circuit.

The complaint is Mr. Field's second. In March he filed a clearance action against the same parties, but withdrew it a month later, announcing that he would wait until Section X of the decree became effective September 1st, permitting a direct request for a specific run.

The new complaint asserts that the Apollo receives a second run by reason of its affiliation with the Skouras circuit and asks that its run be reclassified with the Cameo, receiving a maximum clearance of seven days after the Apollo and the Fulton. Also named are the Orient, Rialto, Strand and Tivoli theatres.

Paustan Wins Reduction

The Paustan Amusement Company, operating the West End theatre in Newark, N. J., Thursday won a clearance victory over the Warner circuit's Ritz theatre when Michael N. Chanalis, arbitrator, reduced the margin from 14 to seven days and abolished the clearance held by the Savoy theatre over the West End for pictures which the Ritz does not play.

Costs of the action were apportioned among the defendants and intervening Stanley Company, Warners' subsidiary.

The award restores the clearance which the West End enjoyed until December, 1928, when Warners took over management of the Ritz. Mr. Chanalis found that there had not been any substantial change in the neighborhood character of the West End, while the newer Ritz drew from a more metropolitan audience. The contention that the clearance had remained in effect for 13 years the arbitrator called "without merit, for it is obvious that the complainant could do nothing to change the clearance prior to the Consent decree except to go out of business."

Washington received its eighth case last week when the Linden Theatre Company of Baltimore operating the Linden theatre, new 850-seat neighborhood house, filed a clearance action against Warners, Paramount, and RKO. The Metropolitan, Fulton and Rialto theatres were named as interested parties.

The complaint sets forth that the Linden now plays 14 days behind the Metropolitan and day and date with the smaller and older Fulton and Rialto. It asks that the present clearance be termed unreasonable. James V. Hayes and Robert Sher, former Department of Justice attorneys, are attorneys for the Linden. Previously they won a reduction of clearance for the Apex in Washington.

Philadelphia's 13th case, a clearance complaint, was filed on Wednesday by Columbus Stamper, operating as the Sansom Theatre Company, for his Rivoli theatre. It is his second complaint. His first, Case No. 8, on clearance for his Great Northern theatre opened Tuesday before Walter H. Robinson.

The Rivoli complaint is against the consenting distributors and Warners' Imperial-60th St. Commodore theatres and involves the independent Overbrook, Sherwood, Ambassador and Byrd theatres. It asks that the Rivoli be awarded (1) Availability of seven days after the Commodore and/or first run on Baltimore Avenue; (2) the right to play no later than 28 days after first run in West Philadelphia.

At San Francisco Gerald Hardy, operator of the Piedmont theatre, Oakland, ended reports of a settlement of the tribunal's fourth case when he announced that he would carry through his clearance action against the Big Five and downtown Oakland and Piedmont first-run houses, and the Fox West Coast circuit.

Referring to section eight of the consent decree, Mr. Hardy charged that clearance granted Oakland's first-run houses over the Piedmont is unreasonable and that the five distributors should be compelled to re-compute the time intervening between moveovers. He asked that clearance for his theatre be fixed following the first-runs and that the arbitrator fix a maximum clearance among the various Oakland theatres. Donovan O. Peters has been selected as arbitrator. Hearing dates have not been set.

Hear Philadelphia Case

Hearing on Case No. 9 at Philadelphia the clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis, for his Broad theatre, opened Monday and continued through the late evening hours until testimony was completed so that the clearance complaint of Columbus Stamper (Case No. 8), for his Great Northern theatre, could be started on Tuesday morning as originally scheduled. Testifying all day, Mr. Ellis asks arbitrator Calvin H. Rankin, Wharton School professor, to set clearance for pictures of defendants RKO and Paramount at seven days following Warners' Logan, Bromley and Grange theatres, similar to the clearance he gets from 20th Century-Fox. Vitagraph was originally named as defendant, but was dropped when Stuart Aarons, counsel for Vitagraph and Warner theatres, argued that under Section 16 of the consent decree, the distributor has the right to set his own terms in selling to affiliated houses.

Harry Pimstein was legal representative for RKO and Herb Lazarus for Paramount. Albert M. Cohen represented Mr. Ellis.

Three declarations of intervention have been filed with J. P. Nelson, clerk of the American Arbitration Association in Portland, Ore. They ask that the demand filed by Graeper's Egyptian theatre for reduction from 91 to 45 days clearance following showing of first-run pictures, be dismissed. The declarations were filed by the Rainier Theatres Corporation, operating the Hollywood and Oriental theatres; the Paraport Theatre Leasing Corporation, operating the Paramount theatre, and the Multnomah Theatres Corporation operating the Orpheum and Liberty theatres.

BASEBALL ADS BRING PROTESTS

Los Angeles exhibitors protested the display of a night baseball advertisement sandwiched between motion picture ads on the amusement page of a local newspaper. The exhibitors pointed out they are regular advertisers and that night baseball is competitive and should be displayed on the sports page and not on the theatre amusement page.

Detroit

In Detroit the United Detroit Theatres and Michigan Cooperative circuits joined the first specific run action when they intervened this week in the complaint filed by Erving A. Moss, operator of the Parkside theatre, against the Big Five. It is reported that the circuits and the downtown first-run theatres named by Mr. Moss will fight the demand of the new east Detroit house.

Philadelphia

Hearing on Philadelphia Case No. 10, the clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis for his Liberty theatre, Camden, N. J., scheduled for October 7th was postponed for a second time until October 17th. The complaint, directed against Metro, RKO, Warners and Paramount, with Warners' Stanley, Grand and Lyric theatres, the intervening parties, is one of three similar complaints filed by Mr. Ellis.

Wednesday Robert A. Callaghan, arbitrator, dismissed Warners under section 16 of the decree which protects clearance arrangements between distributors and affiliated circuits.

Hearing on Case 8, opened on Tuesday, was continued until Friday. Arbitrator Walter H. Robinson, local attorney, reserved decision on a motion to dismiss Mr. Stamper's complaint for his Great Northern, made by Stuart Aarons, counsel for Warners' Strand and Keystone theatres, on the ground that the complaint seeks a change of run, not clearance. George P. Aarons, United MPTO counsel representing Mr. Stamper, argued that the arbitrator could consider the case under Section X.

New Haven

At New Haven-College Open Air theatre's "some run" complaint against the consenting distributors comes before Herbert MacDonald, arbitrator, at 10:30 A.M., October 6th. This is the fourth complaint to be filed in the district. Decision in the New Newington clearance complaint is expected in October.

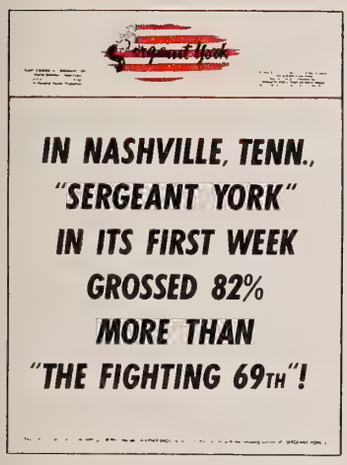
Chicago

The Portage theatre clearance complaint in Chicago has been deferred until October 27th. It is the fourth postponement. Settlement discussions are reported.

At Chicago the Monroe Amusement Company, operating the Monroe, joined the list of intervenors in the clearance action of the downtown Oriental theatre.

Buffalo

After one afternoon hearing testimony Michael Catalano arbitrator of the Dipson Theatres Company clearance complaint at Buffalo on Friday adjourned the hearing until October 8th. The Dipson asks the Big Five to restore the clearance held by the Bailey theatre before Dipson purchased it from the Shea circuit.



Omaha

Omaha's first case, clearance action of the Strand theatre, Council Bluffs, Ia., will be heard by E. F. Leary, Omaha attorney, on October 14th.

Court Dismisses 'Separate Defenses' In Trust Case

Operators and owners of the Pickwick theatre in Greenwich, Conn., plaintiffs in the $5,452,575 anti-trust suit against the eight major film companies, were granted their motions to dismiss the defendants' "separate defenses" in the United States district court in New Haven on Tuesday. The "separate defenses" in turn moved for dismissal of the entire action on the grounds that one of the plaintiff corporations was a foreign corporation "without legal capacity" to sustain the action.

Judge Carroll C. Hincks ruled that the General Statute of the state of Connecticut limiting the rights of foreign corporations which had not qualified with the Secretary of State, applied to state actions, but not actions in the Federal court, and only in contract rather than tort action. Defendants in the case were granted subjoenas duces tecum, which will require the plaintiffs to exhibit their records.

Await Crescent Action

The Government's trial of the Schine Circuit anti-trust suit at Buffalo, N. F., will await completion of the Crescent case at Nashville, Tenn., it was indicated by Department of Justice sources in Washington, D. C., this week.

Final argument in the Crescent trial is scheduled to start December 1st. It was pointed out that Government attorneys handling the Crescent case would not be available for trial of any other film cases until after its completion.

Meanwhile, industry attorneys at the Crescent trial reported being informed by Government attorneys that they would seek to have the Schine case go to trial in mid-November, if possible.

Portage Case Postponed

The Portage theatre versus the five consenting companies clearance case which was scheduled to be reopened September 29th, has been postponed until October 27th. Edmund Adcock of Spitz & Adcock, attorneys for Paramount and Balaban & Katz, the intervenors, requested the delay due to other commitments.

A stipulation, filed jointly in the Albany county clerk's office September 30th, put an end to the friction existing over the prior delivery of product by film companies to the Warner Circuit's new Delaware theatre ahead of the Eagle theatre, operated by Abe Stone, an independent.

In August Mr. Stone brought a suit for temporary injunction against Vitagraph and 20th Century-Fox, the latter settling out of court by stipulation, due to substitution of the Delaware for the Albany's run. The temporary injunction was denied by Supreme Court Justice Harry E. Shirick.

This week's stipulation, submitted by Leonard Rosenthal for Mr. Stone and by Sam Aronowitz for Warner Brothers, provides that the Colonial and Delaware will be seven days behind second run but in no event will the Eagle need to wait more than 21 days after prior run availability.

In effect, the Eagle will have availability 35 days after the second run Madison theatre.

THEATRE TAX BILL IN ST. LOUIS

A bill was introduced last week in the St. Louis Board of Alderman to provide a one per cent tax on gross receipts of nearly 90 theatres in that city. The measure, if passed, is expected to yield about $1,100 a week to the city's treasury.

Fred Wehrenberg, head of St. Louis' Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, immediately announced a campaign would be launched to defeat the measure, pointing out that a similar campaign waged several years ago was successful when a two per cent tax was proposed. At present all St. Louis theatres pay a flat $150 fee a year.

Alderman Edward L. Duke who introduced the new measure told reporters he had no idea what the aggregate weekly gross of theatres was, and he admitted that he had not consulted the Comptroller's office regarding the bill, a customary procedure on new tax measures.

Government Takes Altec Engineer

E. S. Seeley, development engineer of Altec Service has been granted a leave of absence to take up scientific research activities in submarine detection with the National Defense Laboratories, in association with U. S. Navy scientists at Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn. Mr. Seeley invented and developed many of the electrical devices by which sound engineers detect the presence of incipient dislocations in motion picture sound mechanisms. Most recent of Mr. Seeley's inventions is the direct-reading reverberation meter, introduced to the scientists of the motion picture industry at the Rochester meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Mr. Seeley is the sixth Altec engineer who has been requisitioned for research activities in connection with national defense.

Judge Peter Schmuck directed that Barney Balaban, president, Austin C. Keough, general counsel, and Stanton Griffis, chairman of the Board of Paramount, appear with records of the English deal on October 8th for examination by Saul E. Rogers, Mr. Blumenthal's attorney.

INDEPENDENTS RALLY TO ALLIED'S PLAN FOR INTRA-INDUSTRY UNITY

Nine Units Approve Plan Rejected at Convention in Philadelphia; MPTOA Moves to Forestall Court Actions

A majority of National Allied States Association's regional units approve the "liaison committee" for industry unity, advocated by the board two weeks ago at the Philadelphia convention, and rejected at that time by the delegates. The national board disclosed this at Washington on Tuesday afternoon, after virtual completion of the special "plebiscite" it had ordered immediately after the convention.

The vote is a virtual vote of confidence in the Allied leadership, inasmuch as the board declared the convention poll unrepresentative, and is appealing directly to state units for support of its idea—the rejection of which led Allied officers to resign.

That resignation, incidentally, is not effective, inasmuch as the board asked the officers, led by president H. A. Cole, and general counsel Abram F. Myers, to "carry on for the time being."

Approved by Nine

Meanwhile, on Tuesday, the board's "liaison committee" proposal had received the support of the New Jersey Allied, Allied of Illinois, Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, Eastern Pennsylvania Allied, Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, Allied Theatre Owners of the District of Columbia, New York State unit of Allied. The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio was to consider the proposal Thursday, with approval expected. Allied of Connecticut, Tuesday, voted against the unity proposal, but voted unanimous confidence in Allied's officers.

New England Allied was to meet Thursday, and its disapprobation was anticipated; inasmuch as it was Nate Yamins, of Fall River, a national director, who led the fight at the convention, against the proposal for a "National Joint Conference Committee" as the group was to be called.

In this connection, Mr. Yamins, in New York, Friday, September 26th, called the plebescite illegal. He said the national constitution required that special board meetings be held only after directors have received ten days' notice by letter or wire. This rule was certainly not observed when the board met immediately after the convention, he said.

Mr. Yamins said, however, that he did favor a special board meeting, but that it should not be rushed, and that a resolution should be framed by it with proper discussion by all.

The New England leader also assailed the board's attack upon the validity of the convention vote. He said it endangered other exhibitor conventions.

Unity is good for the industry, if it does not hurt the independent exhibitor, whom he represents, Mr. Yamins asserted, adding he did not want a "unity" imposed by the distributors, whose influence he suspected.

He also added unity in the film industry was possible without such a committee, inasmuch as the organization already had committees enabled to cooperate with other film industry units.

Meanwhile, approvals of the state units were not without qualifications. Some came from the New Jersey Allied, which stated its confirmation of the committee was subject to three provisos, as follows:

"1. That such committee shall report back to the national board of directors of Allied any action, proposed by the committee, for approval or disapproval by the national board before it can become binding on Allied.

"2. That all action taken by the committee and reported out as an act of the committee must be by unanimous vote of all groups represented, presupposing that each group will be entitled to one vote on every question. We do this for the purpose of assuring ourselves that Allied will not be out-voted at meetings of the committee.

"3. That adequate safeguards be set up to protect Allied from receiving adverse publicity through all actions taken by the committee or permanent organization."

The general membership of the unit met in New York Monday.

The Illinois Allied's ratification meeting was held in Chicago Wednesday, September 24th, attended by 65, representing 155 theatres. The members also reaffirmed their confidence in officers and directors of the national association. Jack Kirsch, president, noted that the proposed "liaison committee" was merely exploratory, its decisions would not bind the national board.

50,000 ADMISSIONS FOR ARMED FORCES

The defense recreation committee of New York City plans to double the distribution of free tickets to members of the nation's armed forces, stepping up the present rate of 20 to 25 thousand to 50,000 weekly. The tickets will admit men in uniform to motion picture theatres, stage plays, sporting events, radio stations and places of interest where admission is charged. However, only one ticket will be issued to each man.

The men will receive their tickets from the various morale officers or at the committee's headquarters at 99 Park Avenue. Men visiting the New York area from out-of-town camps also will be given tickets.

MPTOA Names Three To Meet Distributors

Meanwhile, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America last week moved to maintain industry harmony by preventing lawsuits from developing. Edward L. Kuykendall, president, announced a three-man committee to confer with distributors "in the hope of avoiding the courts and promoting a better relationship." The men are Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia, chairman; Max A. Cohen, New York; Herman Levy, New Haven.

The committee's first meeting was held Thursday, in New York, with Herman Wobber, Twentieth Century Fox's general sales manager.

Mr. Kuykendall added he had appointed the committee "Due to the fact that we are receiving many bitter complaints from exhibitors in widely scattered territories, regarding prevailing sales policies on the part of certain distributors, especially concerning the unfair practice of holding out pictures that have been bought in good faith and re-allocating them at increased rentals."

Mr. Kuykendall also said: "Surely we can work out our differences among ourselves. There never was a time when we needed industry unity more than the present. Now when we hear so much about industry coordination, and all industry committees for the common good, why don't we play a little give and take and demonstrate sincerity of purpose by a spirit of fairness. Storm warnings are out—will the industry heed them?"

PCCITO Assails High Rentals and Decree

The trustees of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners last week assailed high rentals, and also the consent decree, which, they said, was not preventing those rentals. They also noted that three majors were not affected by the decree; and, hence, could ask for films what they wanted. Additionally, the PCCITO representatives hit MGM's new sales policy as unreasonable.

The resolution of assailment mentioned sales policies of all distributors.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, met last week, on film rentals, and quality of current and forthcoming films. The meeting was an open forum. However, members' opinions were not disclosed.

Disclosed was the slowness of ITOA member film buying this season.

The New York Allied is expected to convene next Monday in Albany to organize formally and elect officers.

The Allied MPTO of Western Pennsylvania will have its annual convention October 22nd and 23rd at the Hotel Roosevelt, Pittsburgh, with Morris A. Rosenberg, past president, as chairman.

The Conecticut MPTO will hold its regular luncheon meeting next Monday at Ceriani's, New Haven, with buying, new taxes, rules about old tickets, and other matters on the discussion agenda.

Interstate Employees Get 7½% Raise

All full time employes of the Interstate Circuit, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., including craft employes, have been given an average wage increase of 7½ per cent effective September 15th. Karl Hoblitzelle, president and R. J. O'Donnell, vice-president and general manager, announce that the higher scale is the result of rising living costs. Employes getting under $25 a week in salary received an increase of 10 per cent in wages; $25 to $50 a week, increase of 7½ per cent and over $50, a raise of 5 per cent.

RKO's Telegraphic Match

The RKO fall golf tournament with entries confined to home office employees was held on Saturday, September 27th, at the Elmsford Country Club in Westchester, N. Y., and featured an eight-man-team golf match, the east against the studio. The winner was determined by comparative individual scores.

Pitch Tent 25

With the formal pitching of Variety Club Tent 25 in the Cocoanut Grove of the Ambassador Hotel on Monday evening production took its place at long last beside exhibition and distribution in the movement inspired by a Pittsburgh foundling thirteen years ago Christmas Eve.

As told by Variety Club founder, John H. Harris, Jr., to the two hundred charter members of the aborning Southern California unit and their one hundred seventy-five guests of the evening, the history of the organization came as news to many in an area notoriously preoccupied with its own interests and now made abruptly self-conscious of its isolation. Bespeaking the response of the assemblage, chief barker Charles P. Skouras in his induction address pledged Tent 25 to set a record of charitable achievement surpassing any that has been recorded.

Toastmaster General William McGraw, introduced by organization committee chairman Duke Clark, mixed sincerity with humor in a distinguished handling of the occasion.

Greetings were extended by the Reverend Dr. Donald Tippett, First Methodist Episcopal Church, Los Angeles.

Induction of officers and members was conducted by James G. Balmer.

Founder Harris presented the charter.

Invocation was by Rabbi Sidney I. Goldstein and benediction by the Reverend John J. Devlin, O. P.

Red Skelton emceed an entertainment program offering Ted Rio-Rito and orchestra, The Merry Macs, Virginia O'Brien and Ann Miller.

Permanent quarters of the Southern California Tent are being prepared in the Ambassador Hotel.

HAL ROACH, his confidence in his Streamlined Features as the solution of the double-bill problem confirmed by trade and public response to "Tanks a Million," the first, has increased by 20 per cent the budget under which the second group of five will be produced.

The first five were filmed for approximately $1,000,000. Production of the second five starts October 6th.

United Artists, distributor, is offering the ten for bookings.

RAY MCDONALD, son of WILLIAM MCDONNELL, Circulation Director of Quigley Publications, is to be co-starred with JUDY GARLAND in MGM's "Very Warm for May," a musical to be produced by Arthur Freed. Making his first appearance in "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," and going thence into "Babes on Broadway," now in production, the young man has set something of a record for advancement in a crowded field.

JACK BURNHARDT will produce Universal's "Dr. X" with WILLIAM NIGH, recently recruited by the studio, directing.

BILLY LEISER has been appointed Business Manager and Public Relations Director of the Society of Motion Picture Art Directors, to whose service he will bring experience ripened by his years of association with Electrical Research Products and a number of major studios.

EDWARD SMALL has appointed ED MARIN to direct "Heliotrope Harry" in which MIRIAM HOPKINS has replaced ILONA MASSEY as star opposite BRIAN DONLEVY and PRESTON FOSTER.

JO GRAHAM, promoted by Warners from dialogue director to directorship, has been given "Always In My Heart" as his initial assignment.

LARRY DARMOUR, no longer content to have his Columbia serials regarded as merely something extra for exhibitors to run off for the kiddies on Saturday afternoons, is conditioning his forthcoming "Holt of the Secret Service" to the objective of restoring one-time adult interest in the chapter-film.

JACK HOLT and EVELYN BRENT are to be starred.

Budget and shooting-time are to be increased.

Humour is to be emphasized and the script is to be written in such a manner that persons who catch the serial in mid-course, or witness only one episode, will find each installment tantamount to an entertainment entity complete in itself. (Showmen who remember the profits netted by "Million Dollar Mystery," "Adventures of Kathleen" and "Diamond from the Sky," which had the adults lined up in queues reaching from here to there, will be wishing the producer well.)

WHAT'S IN A NAME IF IT NETS YOU FAME?

His name is Paul Mercurio.

Her name is Alexis Smith.

He is, fittingly enough, president of the California State Fireman's Association which, 1,000 strong, held its annual convention in Pasadena last week.

She is a Warner star.

He, in his official capacity and an asbestos suit (says the official report in hand) presented her with a silver-plated fire hose nozzle and acclaimed her "The Flame Girl."

Hollywood Scene's informant's name is Robert S. Talpinger!

Nip & Tuck

Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer and Warner Brothers went into a tie for first place in the standing of studios producing pictures for showmen and their customers this week, each organization having eight films in shooting stage.

Warners had reduced its going enterprises from ten and MGM from nine the week before.

Twentieth Century-Fox was in next place with five productions on its stages, RKO-Radio following with four and the other companies sharing the remainder of the 44 projects in progress.

Texas

Super Western

"Texas" is a western that has all the sweep, immensity and grandeur of the state from which it derives its name. There is enough material, action and plot development to make three westerns.

Painted on the immense canvas of Texas in the post Civil War period, with the transportation of cattle the motivating theme (synopsis appears on Page 181 of the Product Digest) the picture tells of the careers of William Holden and Glenn Ford. Starting out as friends, they have exciting adventures together, but their paths and then their ethics diverge. Holden falls on the wrong side of the scales of justice and pays for it with his life. Ford attains respect, admiration and the girl.

Other members of the cast are Claire Trevor as the girl who is loved by both men, George Bancroft and Edgar Buchanan, but it is William Holden who is the focal point of interest. His is a fine performance. The "Dan Thomas" he portrays is more than just a typical bad man of the West: he is a human being. Edgar Buchanan is interesting as a dentist-villain, synonymous terms. Some of the events that take place in his dentist's chair will strike a familiar chord in one's teeth.

Deserving special mention is a prizefight between William Holden and an opponent. Lasting a mere thirty-five rounds, it is an exhibition of brute strength, power and realism, something in the nature of a classic. In addition, there is a stage-coach hold-up, action, shooting, double-crossing, narrow escapes, love scenes and a stampede of cattle at the finish, all photographed in sepia.

Samuel Bischoff, producer, and George Marshall, director, have fashioned a western of large-scale proportions that has much to offer to exhibitor and audience alike.

Mob Town

Crime Prevention Melodrama

The East Side Kids and the Little Tough Guys commit more than the usual amount of knocking about and also more than the usual amount of entertainment in this elaboration of the "Crime Does Not Pay" theme. The film offers some opportunity for showmen to enlist exploitation support of the police department in that it features the success of the big-brother type of endeavor on the part of policemen in the education of juveniles on the evils of criminal association.

Although emphasizing a moral, the film as produced by Ken Goldsmith and directed by William Nigh abounds in action ranging from street fights to hold-ups, murders and motor chases through city streets with guns blazing. Outcome of the story is not too clearly forecast at any point and considerable suspense is generated.

Billy Halop heads the juvenile contingent. Dick Foran and Ann Gwynne carrying on the slight romantic interest.

Pittsburgh Sees Big Stage Season

With 19 weeks already booked for the presentation of stage productions and $29,000 grossed during the opening week, Sam Nixon, manager of the Nixon theatre in Pittsburgh, predicts the biggest legitimate stage season since the 1920's.

Katherine Cornell in "The Doctor's Dilemma" topped her previous appearance in that city by several thousand dollars, despite lukewarm critical notices, during the week of September 15th, the earliest opening week in years. Advanced sales for the coming season have totaled more than $14,000 and more than 4,000 American Theatre Society subscriptions have already been sold, compared to 2,800 sales during the corresponding period last season, Dorothy O'Connor, secretary of the organization, has disclosed.

Following Ed Wynn in "Boys and Girls Together," the Nixon's revised schedule will present "Native Son," Al Jolson in "Hold On to Your Hats," "Separate Rooms," "Meet the People," Ethel Barrymore in "The Corn Is Green" as the first ATS play, then two weeks each for "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Panama Hattie," "My Sister Eileen," "Pal Joey," "Claudia" and "Louisiana Purchase."

The Senator theatre, ordinarily for motion pictures exclusively, will be converted into a legitimate house for two weeks beginning November 17th to present "Life With Father." The original date, a fortnight earlier, was changed when film bookings became so crowded due to continued delay on Alvin theatre rebuilding that a product pileup of the Harris booking office necessitated more time to clean up some of its pictures. Reconstruction of the Harris Alvin, downtown sister house to the Senator, has been held up due to difficulty in securing building materials because of defense priorities, John H. Harris stated.

Former Manager Ed Shafer of the Casino, now with the Gayety in Albany, said last week that his theatre will be changed into a legitimate house for two weeks of legitimate stage.

RCA "Magicote" Lens Process Is Announced

RCA's Magicote process is ready for application to motion picture projector lenses, after having been employed in Hollywood for some while, in improving the light transmission and brilliance of camera lenses, the parent company announced from its Camden, N. J., headquarters, through Edward C. Cahill, division manager of RCA Photophone.

The field force of the latter unit will handle the new service for exhibitors. The lenses will be shipped by the field force to the RCA factory at Indianapolis, where the company has a special air-conditioned laboratory.

The Magicote process is the application of a thin, durable, transparent film to glass-to-air surfaces of anastigmatic lenses, cutting down light reflections, which normally reduce lens speed.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The physiognomy—face, to you—of Zorita, 23-year-old dancer, is a vivid scarlet, and it isn't through makeup, either. She is still mad, plus. Another, Zorina, also is a dancer, of the more classical, but, unlike Zorita, will be remembered as a dancer of stage and screen.

This shapely and curvacious exponent of the poetry of motion, or, more apropos, the rhythmic manipulation of torso, whose terpsichorean specialty is accomplished by various degrees of dishabille, was confronted with imposition of the maximum penalty of $200 fine, plus days in durance vile while incarcerated in the city bastile, for what a Toledo, Ohio, jury, tried and true, agreed was the indecent exposure of person at a night club.

"It isn't the penalty as much as the inconsistency of the thing," says Zorita—privately Mrs. Ada Rubenstein—who adds that only a short time ago the Toledo bluecoats, who are presumed to be guardians of the city's morals, desiring to feast their eyes on the human form divine, endeavored, for a stipulated monetary consideration, to negotiate for her services to consist of a performance at one of their stag functions. And now, she complains, she was the victim of both bluecoats and bluenoses, who must have dug up a blue law, because of which she is blue, in addition to the aforesaid red.

Her perturbed equanimity is further accelerated by the fact that the jury who decided that her exposure exceeded the bounds of even the so-called modern propriety, consisted of 11 women and one lone male. Had it been a jury of 12 men, the verdict would have unanimously been "not guilty," she opined.

Cincinnati exchangemen recently found humorous mental diversion from problems of trade showings, sales quotas, the international situation, and what have you, by the visit of a small town exhibitor, new to the business, who was in Cincinnati for the first time.

"What the heck," asked the exhibitor, "do the names of "HE," MAW," and "PAW" mean in the telephone book?"

Investigation developed that he had searched the telephone directory to locate numbers of the film exchanges, and had encountered abbreviations of the telephone exchanges, "HEmlock, MAin and PAarkway.

Paul L. Specht, that old maestro, in a new book, tells "How They Become Name Bands." He tells, also, what aspiring musicians should do in conduct and deportment to reach the big-name business of popular orchestra performance.

Chapter 6 of Mr. Specht's book is especially unique. It is titled, "Be Sober!" "Booze hounds," he warns, "never get to the real top-flight name-band class."

"And the same deductions," he adds, "apply to addicts of the 'mogul-smoking' variety"—mogul-smoking being the inhaling of marihuana.

A Cincinnati exhibitor, unable to obtain prompt delivery of material wanted in his remodeling program, wrote the supplier a rather pointed letter, and received this poetic response:

Keep your temper, gentle sir,
'Cause we, as manufacturer
Know your order's overdue
For a month, or maybe two.
We can't help it, please don't swear,
Labor's scarce, and metal's rare.
Can't get steel. Can't get dies.
These are facts. We tell no lies.
Harry's drafted, so is Bill,
And all our work is now uphill.
So your order, we're afraid
May still be a bit delayed.
But you will get it, don't be vexed.
Maybe this month, maybe next.
Keep on hoping. Don't say die
And we'll fill your order bye and bye.

The baby chick industry, like the motion picture business, is making fine progress with its new code of fair practices. The only basic difference between the two is that the baby chick people voluntarily adopted its code, whereas the United States Department of Justice sort of "invited" the movie magnates to codify.

The baby chick code is really strict. The marketers, for example, cannot use guarantees of baby chicks such as "Guaranteed to Live," or misrepresent any egg-laying potentialities.

Oscar, The Penguin, co-star with Wallace Beery and Marjorie Main in MGM's recent "Barnacle Bill," now has a regular theatrical entourage, menage and agent. Although this was Oscar's screen debut, and until then he had been an inmate of a public zoo, paid off in dead fish for personal appearances, he now has a Hollywood estate of his own, complete with swimming pool, private fishpond, lackeys, and a manager-lawyer-agent. Oscar accidentally popped into fame when he inadvertantly speared Wally Beery in the pants-pocket. Wally immediately saw comedy possibilities, and in "Barnacle Bill," by the simple device of keeping a piece of fish in his pistol pocket, he got Oscar to spear without hesitation. The pants were lined with sheet-iron, a trick Beery learned after Oscar's first shot.

When Miss Dorothy Goodman, manager of the Coronet Theatre, San Diego, Cal., saw playing kids rolling old tires, like the hoops of old, down San Diego streets, she thought that the kids were having a dangerous time in view of the traffic. So she figured and figured, and the result was 'Worn-Out Tire Day' at the Coronet. Every child bringing a worn-out tire was admitted free to the show. Result was 551 worn tires piled high in front of the Coronet.

Miss Goodman, by the way, started as a cashier at the Coronet in 1939 and is now manager—although she's only 18 years.

Letters from Readers Department, to the New York Daily News:

BRONX: I suggest that to get better motion pictures the producers shoot fewer pictures and more actors.

ANN KIRSCH.

Flagstaff, Arizona, set a new record for willingness to cooperate with the motion picture industry. The Southwestern town offered to sacrifice a bridge costing $150,000 if Paramount wants to use it for the climax scene in "For Whom the Bells Tolls" now in the making, and in which Ernest Hemingway's hero, Robert Jordan, dynamites the structure to help his side in the Spanish civil war—says Paramount.

Flagstaff's 150-foot bridge, which is said to resemble the Spanish one described by Hemingway in his novel, was offered to Paramount through Leo Weaver, secretary of the city's chamber of commerce. Although the voluntary wrecking of the bridge would represent a great sacrifice, Mr. Weaver declared that the community felt that the publicity and fame resulting from having the picture filmed in and about Flagstaff would make the project worth while.

The mountain may have come to Mohammed, but for Paramount it will soon do more than that and go blackface! Further plans for the filming of "For Whom the Bell Tolls," brings up another problem, how to get black mountains for the Spanish background of the story.

Research revealed that most Rocky Mountain gorges contain limestone, which photographs white, while the mountains of Spain, locale of the Hemingway war novel, are granite and photograph black. In the interests of authenticity, Paramount says it has begun to work on a plan for painting some Western mountain black to resemble the Iberian original.

Reminiscing about 'the good old days,' 'Senator' W. P. (Bernie) Bernfield, pioneer press agent, exhibitor and film salesman, told the story, in New York, the other day, of his visit years ago to a backwoods, down-at-the-heels movie house in Kansas, to sell film to a woman exhibitor.

"How's business," asked Bernie.

"Terrible," replied Mrs. Exhibitor. "Look at those empty seats. People just won't come to my show."

"Madam, your trouble is pretty plain," observed prankster Bernfield, looking in the direction of the screen. "I do believe the pictures are sticking too long to the screen."

Mrs. Exhibitor looked back and viewed the screen critically. "What shall I do?" she asked.

"Just get some heavy oil and rub it over the screen surface," Bernie advised as he sauntered off leaving the old gal pondering deeply.

Bernie remembers the days when they called movie ushers, seatin' sitters, seat butlers, seatin' directors, seat tellers, seat-pointer-outters, seat-stander-uppers, et al.

Bob Burns' first name is Robin. His theatrical career, which has taken him to screen and airlanes, started as a mandolin player with the Van Buren Queen City Silver Tone Cornet Band, down in the hillbilly country of Arkansas. He was with the U. S. Marines in World War I, emerged as gunnery sergeant and champion No. 1 rifleman of the AEF. Now he grows alfalfa, sugar beets, corn, pumpkins, beans, birds and bees, in California's San Fernando Valley. Also, he's still on the air and on the screen.

Wilkes-Barre Hits Games

A municipality last week smashed chance game operation on Sundays. It is Wilkes-Barre, and the ban came from Mayor Charles Love and after a two month police investigation of the persons conducting the games; also, after Bishop William J. Hafey, of the Scranton Diocese, of the Catholic Church, made a diocesan ruling against Sunday Bingo games.

Meanwhile, in New York State Supreme Courthouse, Buffalo, a move was expected this week, for trial of two corporations and four persons for violating the state's anti-lottery laws by operating Bingo. The corporations are the Old Vienna, Inc., which operated the Gayety, and the Jay-Phil Corporation, operating the Academy.

Cincinnati reported an increase in gross and net proceeds of chance games during August. Attendance at 235 games that month was 279,276.

The Empress Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has begun "Book Night." Admissions certain days also bring gift certificates. The certificates, plus some money, bring the patron one volume weekly of a 20 volume encyclopedia.

Fox Wisconsin's Lloyd Theatre, Menominee, that state, has discontinued the chance games it featured Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, following a critical resolution by the Twin City Ministerial Association.

Tampa Burlesque Shows Raided

About three weeks ago, following a protest by the Tampa Ministers' association, the police of Tampa, Fla., cracked down on two theatres presenting burlesque shows, arresting the managers of the Broadway and Rialto, as well as a number of performers appearing in the shows, charging them with allowing and presenting "indecent" performances. Fines were imposed on the managers and performers but B. E. Gore, manager of the Rialto theatre and eight members of the cast at that house, appealed.

Both theatres are regular motion picture theatres and are operated by the B. E. Gore company. The burlesque shows were presented only as special "midnight" attractions at which "adults only" were admitted.

Holt to Los Angeles

Nat Holt was to have arrived in Los Angeles this week to take over the management of the western theatre division for RKO. This position was formerly held by Charles W. Koerner, now general manager of RKO theatres in New York. Mr. Holt has been switched from a post as division manager in Cleveland and Columbus. Before he held this midwest position, he was stationed on the west coast at both San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Zischank Promoted

George Zischank has been promoted from the managership of the new Fox West Coast Grove Theatre in Redlands to the larger Studio theatre in San Bernardino. Charles Long moved from the Studio theatre to the California theatre in San Bernardino.

Games, Duals, Other 'Schemes' Cut Patronage in Ohio, Survey Shows

Bank nights, too many trailers, and double features keep 30.2 per cent of Akron, Ohio, adults and 35.6 per cent of the Kent State University, Kent, Ohio, students from attending movies more frequently, according to a survey by Dr. Harry Deane Wolfe, Director of the Bureau of Business Research at Kent University. 1,013 Akron adults, proportioned according to economic classes, and 692 students, ranging from freshman to graduate students, were queried.

Our findings of the study were:

1. 76.3 per cent of adults and 77.8 per cent of students prefer programs which last two and one-half hours or less.

2. 58.9 per cent of adults and 41.3 per cent of students feel that the motive behind patriotic pictures should be, "to build up our defense."

3. The vote on double features ended in a draw. 35.5 per cent approved, 36.2 per cent disapproved, and 28.3 per cent "don't care". The figures for adults were closely matched by the students.

4. 60.3 per cent of adults go to see the picture itself, with 36.8 per cent influenced because of the star. The student vote was slightly stronger for the picture, 65.9 per cent casting their ballots for the picture against 30.1 per cent for the star.

5. Light comedy and musical plays were most highly favored both by adults and students.

6. Men attend movies more frequently than women.

"Night of Stars" Plans Progress

The preliminary arrangements for the eighth annual "Night of Stars" show were outlined last week by the producing committee at the office of Marvin Schenck, chairman. The show, to be held November 26th at Madison Square Garden in New York, will be similar to its predecessors, with top-ranking radio, screen and stage personalities appearing.

Members of the committee are Robert Weitman, Don Albert, Philip Bloom, F. William Boettcher, Leo Cohen, Ruby Cowan, Ernest Emerling, S. Hurok, Lester B. Isaac, Benn Jacobson, Harry Kalcheim, Jesse Kaye, Arthur Knorr, Richard W. Krakeur, Leon Leonidoff, Harry Mayer, Sidney Phillips, Larry Puck, Frank Roehrenbeck, Harry A. Romm, Max Wolf, John Shubert and Allan Zee, Al Altman and Nat Kalcheim.

Governor Herbert H. Lehman and Mayor F. H. LaGuardia will be honorary chairmen of a sponsoring committee for the affair, it was announced this week by Nathan Strauss, chairman.

Honorary chairmen of the production commitee will be Barney Balaban, David Bernstein, Nate J. Blumenberg, Jack Cohn, George J. Schaefer and Albert Warner.

Three Firms Incorporate

Michael F. Walsh, Secretary of State in Albany, N. Y., has issued papers of incorporation to three motion picture concerns to do business in the state. They are:

Circle Panoram Soundies Corp., motion picture parts, $20,000 capital stock by Michael Popper, filing attorney, Philip Wiltchik and Betty Meyers, 475 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Irmay Amusement Corp., 200 shares, no par value, by Irving Jacobson, May Jacobson and Benjamin Schoenfeld, 166 Second Avenue, New York. Papers were filed by Morris Honig, 99 Wall Street.

Co-Venture Productions, Inc., 400 shares, 200 preferred at $5 par value and 200 common, no par value, by Norman Zeno, 1501 Broadway, Blevins Davis, 117 West 58th Street and Ralph McBain, 70 West 55th Street, New York. Papers were filed by Murphy and Romanow, 1501 Broadway, New York.

Theatre Deal Reported

The second big downtown San Francisco theatre deal in a month has been reported, with Irving Ackerman, for many years a principal in the firm of Ackerman & Harris, taking over the old Casino on a twenty-year lease from Hibernia Savings and Loan Bank. Approximately $90,000 will be spent completely remodelling the house for a Thanksgiving Day opening. The deal follows by a few weeks the sale of United Artists Theatre by Herman Cohen to United Artists Corporation, for a price of $150,000. The Casino, to be renamed the Downtown, will be operated by the Downtown Theatre Co., Inc., in which Mr. Ackerman will be associated with Otto Grossman and Charles De Hess. Improvements planned include installation of 2,000 new loge seats, a new ventilating system, and a ladies' parlor planned for spaciousness and beauty.

Theatre Has Short Subjects

Sherrill Cohen, manager of the Orpheum theatre in downtown Los Angeles, is producing a series of short subjects with Manchester Boddy, publisher of the Los Angeles Daily News, as commentator. The subjects are to be booked into the News-View theatre, Hollywood, and the Newsreel and News-Palace theatres, all operated by Cohen Brothers.

Church Shows Films

A new feature has been introduced at the Ninth Street Baptist Church, in Cincinnati, with the showing of the sound picture, "Barabbas," as a part of an experiment in the use of religious stories, based on Biblical incidents, for inspirational purposes.

Roach Budget Increased

Hal Roach plans to increase the production budget 25 per cent for his second group of streamlined features. "Hayfoot," an Army comedy, first of the new group, is scheduled to go before the cameras October 6th.

DRIVE-INS BECOMING MULTI-MILLION DOLLAR BRANCH OF U.S. EXHIBITION

Distributors More Willing to Sell Product as Circuits and Leading Exhibitors Experiment; Fifty New Units Now Building

Drive-in theatres, which eight summers ago started to combine the American pastime of a ride in the family automobile and an evening at the motion pictures, but only in a handful of places, are fast becoming established as a permanent branch of the entertainment business.

A steady increase in the number of the outdoor parking space-theatres and business in them during the season now ending, by far the most prosperous to date, seem to indicate that the drive-in theatre has passed the novelty stage. Distributors and circuit and independent operators who classed the drive-ins as "freaks," or unfair competition, almost from their inception, are now giving them considerable attention.

Opposition to them seems to be weakening today. Product is more readily available from the major distributors and some even admit, though cautiously, that there is a profitable market for their pictures among the drive-ins. Many established exhibitors, particularly in the South and California where year-long operation is possible, are themselves opening parking theatres. Several of the larger circuits are experimenting with the project, and sizeable independent drive-in circuits have been organized in Massachusetts, California and Florida. There are promises of others.

50 In Construction

Sixty-five additional drive-ins were in operation during the summer season just past. Another 50 are either under construction or have reached mature planning stages. Between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 has been invested in land, equipment, and improvements for drive-ins over the last eight years. Variation in the value of land used for the projects makes an exact estimate of the total investment difficult.

Control of technical features through a patent covering the arrangement of automobiles on curved ramps for unobstructed sight lines, is held by Park-In Theatres, Inc., of Camden, N. J. Richard Milton Hollingshead, Jr., paint and polish manufacturer who invented the drive-in arrangement during mid-depression, and his cousin, Warren W. Smith, own 85 per cent of the Park-In stock. Mr. Smith is in active charge of the corporation, while Mr. Hollingshead continues at the head of the R. M. Hollingshead Company, manufacturer of automobile polishes.

Drive-in operators are licensed by the Park-In corporation and for a royalty of five per cent of the weekly gross are permitted to use the Park-In patent. It permits the arrangement of cars in semi-circular tiers, the front ends tilted by a slight ramp, facing a screen from 30 by 40 to 50 by 60 feet. Individual speaker systems bring the sound to the parked automobiles. Projection is usually from a booth sunk in the ground 125 to 250 feet from the screen. Licensees now total 104.

The first drive-in theatre was constructed by Mr. Hollingshead as an experiment, near Camden. Initially it used large speakers on top of the screen for sound. Protest from neighboring residents and business firms, however, led to the development of individual speakers that are either placed inside the parked car or are buried in manholes in the adjacent ground. The system is reported to give better sound fidelity than the large horns.

Cost of erecting a drive-in theatre, exclusive of the purchase or rental of the six to 15 acres of land required, runs from $20,000 to $165,000, it is reported. The figure varies according to size, equipment, and local labor and building material expenses. Largest of the drive-ins is the 1,160-car theatre near Evanston, Ill., opened this spring by Nate Barger, former Chicago burlesque operator and independent exhibitor. The theatre occupies a 20-acre tract at Waukegan and Golf Rds. near the rich north Chicago suburbs. It is reported to have operated at close to capacity since opening.

At the Chicago house two shows are given nightly. Prices are scaled at 40 cents for adults, 10 cents for children. The scale is well above the 25 to 30 cent admission prevalent in most drive-ins. During the best weeks Mr. Barger is reported to have grossed close to $15,000 a week. The estimate figures three persons per car. Hot-dog, soda, and oil and gasoline service are operated as a sideline.

The average drive-in theatre, however, typical of new construction in Florida and the Southwest, accommodates about 400 cars in 11 parking tiers. The smallest construction has an area for 145 vehicles. About a mile of gravel blacktop or bituminous pavement is used in each average theatre. Projection equipment, using special wide angle lenses and the largest projectors is estimated to cost a minimum of $15,000 for each installation.

Four or five automobile parking theatres have been opened in various sections of the country without applying to the Park-In corporation for a patent license. The company is currently engaged in litigation charging infringement and the most recent constructions have adopted the Hollingshead patents and equipment, manufactured by RCA.

At Los Angeles in July M. A. Rogers, operator of the drive-in theatre at Colton, Calif., won a victory in U. S. District court when he secured a dismissal on technical grounds of an infringement suit by the Park-in interests. Appeal is pending however.

Summer Shows Only

The drive-in theatres, with the exception of installations in Southern California and the deep south operate only during the warm summer months. Although operation is possible during rainy periods, weather is an important factor in the success or failure of a drive-in season. In Massachusetts this year an unusually cool June almost crippled the outdoor theatre season at the start. About 47 theatres operate all year.

The theatres are reminiscent of the "airdromes" popular during the early 20's when silent pictures were exhibited in roof gardens or in other outdoor locations. Most of these, however, were in conjunction with a regular year-round theatre, or were operated seasonly in resort sections not served by other film theatres, Mr. Hollingshad reports, however, that the idea was not inspired by this precedent. Reflecting during the depression of the early '30s upon what luxuries people would forego most reluctantly he decided that the family automobile and motion pictures were the last sources of relaxation to be cut from family budgets. Their combination in the drive-in plan followed.

The Camden theatre, erected by Mr. Hollingshead was successful almost from the start, and was in continuous operation at the same location until moved this spring to a new situation several miles away at Union, N. J., on Route 29, main artery to the Jersey beaches.

Product Is Problem

Chief difficulty in the operation of the drive-in theatres has been obtaining first grade current product. Many have been forced to operate with pictures from one to two years old. Others have relied on the output of the smaller producers, plus reissues and foreign product.

Until recently many distributors have refused to classify drive-ins in the same category as established theatres operating throughout the year. They have insisted in protecting all subsequent run accounts from the drive-ins and in most instances set clearances ranging from 30 to 180 days after the last subsequent run. With most drive-ins located in metropolitan areas where they can draw on heavy auto traffic this has placed their product up to a year behind release date.

There are signs, however, of a relaxing of

SIDELINE SERVICES IN THE DRIVE-INS

Sideline services, offering drive-in theatre patrons food, drink and complete service for their automobiles, are an important part of the outdoor theatre operations. At the Barger Drive-In theatre in Chicago salesgirls in white satin hop from car to car with soft drinks, hot dogs, and what have you. Gas and oil is available at an entrance service station.

Night clubs are also part of the drive-in sideline. The Fabian circuit at Albany will erect an "after-the-show hot spot," with dance floor and cafe for patrons of its new drive-in. The night club can be operated all winter long. In Stewartsville, N. J., Harry Bannister, ex-Broadway producer and Ann Harding's ex-husband, has added an open air cafe to his drive-in near Easton, Pa. Customers may leave their cars and watch the films from tables laden with food and potables, Mr. Bannister reports. There is no cover charge.

Milton Harris, managing the Harlem Road drive-in at Buffalo, has installed a 30-acre picnic ground behind his theatre. He invites clubs, kiddies and family parties to use the rustic tables and shaded groves during the afternoons or before the evening film.

At Cleveland the West Side drive-in, adjacent to the airport, supplies cars for patrons. So plane passengers may see the show while waiting for connections, ushers park their cars in the first rows. If he is in a rush they even drive the customer across the road to his plane.

DRIVE-INS ATTAIN REGULAR STATUS

the ban on product which the auto theatre operators have faced. Prompted variously by the interest of affiliated circuits in drive-ins, the increasing number of experienced exhibitors and circuits who have been experimenting with the theatres and the possibility of extensive revenue from them most of the major eight distributors and all of the smaller product sources are showing more interest in selling to and keeping drive-in accounts.

A possible factor also in the changing attitude towards drive-ins has been the threat of anti-trust actions, or arbitration proceedings under the New York consent decree voiced towards the distributors by some drive-in operators.

All of the major distributors are currently selling to drivein theatres. In some cases not more than half a dozen are on the account lists. In other companies the majority of the 65 drive-ins now operating are receiving product.

Key to the sales policy in most instances lies in the clearance given established theatres over the drive-ins. Most of the sales managers appear to place the drive-ins behind the last subsequent run, but where they meet admission and other standards are willing to sell.

Percentage Sale Only

Most major distributors currently will sell to drive-ins only on a percentage basis. Generally they ask 35 to 40 per cent of the weekly gross as film rental. The relatively high price, for subsequent run, has been the cause of many complaints from drive-in operators. In reply distributors assert that overhead at the plants is 40 per cent less than in a regular theatre and claim that the higher rental is fair protection for other accounts.

RKO, according to a company spokesman, is and has been for the past year, selling drive-ins current product, subject to local clearance situations, ability to pay, and contracts with regular subsequent theatres in the area. Previously the company had restricted drive-in sales to two-year-old product.

MGM commenced sales to drive-in theatres during the 1940-41 season. It had restricted its product formerly to established theatre operations. A sales department executive reported that the company now sells to the parking theatres without prejudice, usually on percentage. Regular admission scales, and a ban on "2-for-1," "children free" or similar cut rate practices are a condition of sale, however. Metro, although requiring admissions for all patrons, does not set any specified prices for the drive-ins.

Many Use "Revivals"

A Metro spokesman, admitting that most pictures playing the drive-ins are a year or more old, said that metropolitan clearance scales were responsible, but noted that many drive-in operators prefer to operate on a "revival" basis. Frequently, he said, the drive-in operations have proved more profitable using "return engagement" pictures a year or more after release, than when they operated with newer products.

At Universal an official of the company said that as long as drive-ins charge "legitimate admission" and are established operations they are handled the same as any other subsequent run.

Columbia Pictures, according to A. Montague, sales manager, treats each drive-in application for product the same as any other subsequent run. Terms, clearance, and other factors are determined locally as with other contracts.

Twentieth-Century Fox, according to a company executive, as selling to almost all drive-in theatres. Again contracts are localized and terms depend upon the branch salesman and local clearance scales. "They are treated just like regular theatres, and the price they can pay and the local situation are the dominating factors" as with most accounts, he indicated.

Warner Brothers executives were reluctant to discuss sales to drive-ins remarking that it was company policy not to discuss any product deals or terms. From the field, and from the home office it was learned, however, that Warner product is generally available, in subsequent run to the drive-ins. Exchange or district managers in most instances are responsible for the decision to sell or not to sell.

Paramount, a number of whose partners, including the Wilby and Kincy circuit, Richards, Sparks, Great States and Balaban and Katz circuits are operating or building drive-ins, is also selling a considerable amount of product to other drive-in operators. It is generally understood that Paramount has been granting the most favorable run of all distributors to drive-ins engaged in year-long exhibition, particularly in the south and in California. Like other distributors it sells chiefly on percentage and insists on minimum admission prices and operating practices.

Vigorous opposition to drive-ins has been voiced by many independent exhibitor organizations, with several attempts to invoke building codes, zoning laws, and other measures against the drive-ins. In most cases the efforts to close the theatres have failed.

CUT-RATE RIDES TO MOVIES QUESTIONED

The Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission has been called upon to decide whether residents of Norristown, which keeps its motion picture theatres closed on Sundays, should be given bargain bus transportation rates to attend the theatre in Conshohocken, which does a thriving business in its one cinema palace, operated by Harry Fried.

The Schuylkill Valley Lines has an arrangement with Norristown theatres whereby bus passengers from Conshohocken get a round trip plus admission to the theatre for 40 cents. The regular price for a round trip is 20 cents and the regular movie admission is 30 cents. Since that arrangement exists on weekdays, Mr. Fried sought to make a similar arrangement that would bring Norristown citizens to Conshohocken on Sundays.

The bus company was agreeable to such arrangement on weekdays, but refused the terms on any Sunday operation on the grounds that the sentiment of Norristown, as expressed by voters, was against Sunday movies. As a result, Mr. Fried, who operates a string of theatres in the Philadelphia suburban area, has appealed to the Public Utility Commission.

A drive to persuade distributors that some run for drive-in theatres should be one year after the completion of runs at regular theatres was launched last spring by Allied Theatres of Illinois headed by Jack Kirsch. Prompted by drive-in construction near Chicago the theatre group complained that drive-ins were not subject to many fire and building regulations, licenses and other curbs on theatres and were able to operate seasonally with an unfair competitive advantage.

The Ohio Independent Theatre Owners, through P. J. Wood, secretary, recently asked members to report instances of cut price operation at drive-ins and had reported to sales managers, with protests, all "children free" or other cut rate admission plans.

Not Under Building Code

At Middletown, Conn., in June the College Open Air theatre operated by Salvator Adorno won a victory in the state Supreme Court which upheld a lower court ruling that it was not subject to building codes. Edward J. Hickey, commissioner of state police had instituted the suit against the drive-in in an effort to establish that it was subject to the state building code. The theatre, built in 1939, opened for regular operaion for the first time this summer. Currently it is complainant in a some run arbitration case demand against the Big Five.

Chicago and its surrounding suburbs this summer was one of the most active centers of drive-in construction. In addition to the Barger drive-in outdoor theatres operate at Idylwood Park and Michigan Shores with construction planned in the northwest and at nearby Gary, Indiana.

A drive-in and a 900 seat enclosed playhouse is part of a $500,000 suburban shopping, residential and amusement center planned by the H. & E. Balaban Corporation, composed of Harry and Elmer Balaban, younger brothers of Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, Inc. The project, to be known as Drive-In Park, will cover 88 acres just east of the new $31,000,000 Buick aircraft engine plant in Melrose Park. Construction is expected to get under way by the first of the year with the drive-in theatre opening about May 1, 1942.

The drive-in theatre will have several innovations. Besides parking for 1,000 cars it will have 600 fixed seats. In the winter this seat area will be flooded for skating. The back of the high screen structure will have a floodlighted water curtain. The project, designed by Hal and W. L. Pereira, will include a department store, a super-market, bowling alleys, night club, nine store units, gas station and 100 homes costing around $6,000 each.

Grading has been started near East Chicago by the Indiana Drive-In Theatre Corporation, B. A. Lucas, president, for an 800 car drive-in to be constructed this winter for a May 1, 1942, opening. Known as the Star-Lite Drive-In Theatre, it will be located on a 37½ acre site, 12½ miles northeast of Gary, Indiana.

U.S. CHARGES UNION LEADERS WITH EXTORTING $1,000,000 FROM MAJORS

Circella, Kaufman Are Named Co-conspirators with Browne, Bioff by U. S. Grand Jury; Assessment Records Studied

George E. Browne and Willie Bioff, IATSE executives, have been named a second time in an indictment returned by the New York Federal Grand Jury investigating racketeering in the film industry.

Slated for trial next Monday in New York Federal Court under a jury indictment for extorting $550,000 from Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warners, and Paramount, the two men, president and West Coast representative of the IATSE, respectively, were named Monday as co-conspirators in another indictment bringing in two more IATSE figures, Nick Circella (alias Nick Dean), Browne's Chicago representative, and Louis Kaufman, Newark IATSE business agent.

The new indictment raised the sum alleged to have been extorted from film companies under threats of paralyzing strikes by IATSE and allied union members. It charges that Circella and Kaufman helped Browne and Bioff obtain "upward of $1,000,000."

As their international chiefs were meeting disaster, business agents of the Alliance studio locals met this week in New York with Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, over new wages and hours scales, following the IATSE's failure to reenter the basic studio labor pact and bargain for all its locals.

Disappeared July 3rd

Circella, previously wanted as a material witness by the jury that indicted him Monday, disappeared July 3rd. His police record includes convictions and prison terms for robbery, for murderous assault, and for parole violation. Matthias F. Correa, United States District Attorney, in charge of the investigation, said Monday Circella, 43 years old, had also operated Chicago night clubs, among them the Yacht and Colony.

Mr. Correa charged Circella received money from Browne, out of the funds resultant from a special two per cent assessment against the weekly wages of 125,000 IATSE members; an assessment vague in purpose, the proceeds of which were controlled solely by Browne, with no accounting.

Kaufman, 50 years old, business agent of the IATSE Newark local 244, disappeared August 14th, when he, too, was sought by the grand jury as material witness. He surrendered Monday afternoon.

Mr. Correa described Kaufman's way of living. He had three expensive cars, one for himself, one for his wife, another for his children. He received approximately $1,000 per month from his union, collected since his disappearance by his wife.

On surrendering Monday afternoon, Kaufman supplied the required $15,000 bail promptly. At arraignment Tuesday, he pleaded not guilty, and Federal Judge John W. Holland ordered trial to begin October 27th.

Specifically, Dean's police record is this: 1915, guilty plea to robbery charge; 1916, guilty plea to murderous assault charge—sent to reformatory; 1919, released, then reentered as parole violator; 1923, released; 1930, arrested in Miami with Al Capone, in police drive against undesirables.

UNION BECOMES WAGE GUARDIAN

To curb salary "kick-backs," the Philadelphia musicians' local has become cashier for its membership. All salaries, except those paid by theatres, are to go directly to the union—and 25 per cent of each salary will be held in escrow until the musician completes his engagement.

On Wednesday last, September 24th, Browne brought the records pertaining to the two per cent assessment into the New York Federal Court for grand jury inspection after a subpoena which he and his attorneys bitterly protested as a violation of his constitutional right not to be made to "testify" before trial. However, the U. S. District Attorney's office noted the jury investigation of racketeering in the film industry was special, related only somewhat to the Browne-Bioff indictment and Judge John W. Holland refused to allow Browne to be questioned beyond bounds of the financial records produced that day.

The Government estimated, last week, that the yearly total of the assessment was $6,500,000.

IATSE Expected to Aid Locals in Negotiations

Despite the refusal of IATSE locals to allow the international organization to represent them in the studio labor basic pact, renewed two weeks ago by seven internationals—a refusal which barred Alliance reentrance into the basic pact—the business agents of the locals this week asked the International for aid in negotiating with Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, it was reported in New York.

The business delegates, meeting Friday at the International's New York headquarters, were said to have decided to request assistance from the International officers, among them Lou Krouse, general secretary; Richard Walsh, vice-president; Carl Cooper, West Coast representative; and Steve Newman, former Coast agent.

On Monday agents for Local 44, property men, and Local 80, grips, met with Mr. Casey. It was said that day that six locals had, to then, submitted their demands and four more were expected to do the same. Negotiations are not to begin until all demands are before Mr. Casey and the producers.

On Tuesday, the cameramen and sound technicians presented their demands, completing the list.

Pursuing its suit in the New York supreme court to restrain James Caesar Petrillo and the American Federation of Musicians, of which he is president, from barring AGMA members from employment in radio, concert halls and recording studios, the American Guild of Musical Artists Tuesday moved to examine Mr. Petrillo before trial.

The AFM has ordered AGMA members to join, or suffer AFM punitive action.

In New York also, last week, the Screen Publicists Guild filed with the National Labor Relations Board a petition for certification as the bargaining agency for the advertising and publicity workers in Republic Pictures' home office, in that city.

The unit met Wednesday night, September 24th, to hear the advantages of American Federation of Labor affiliation outlined by Edward K. Flaherty, AFL organizer. This followed a previous meeting, at which CIO advantages were delineated. The Screen Guild Council, of New York, of which the Publicists Guild is a member, has advised CIO affiliation; and officers of the Guild favor it.

Meanwhile, Universal's exchange and home office workers have won a 10 per cent increase in wages, in the new contract signed with their company by their union, the American Federation of Office Employees, AFL. The contract runs from September 1st, for 18 months.

The company's employees are the only ones affiliated with an AFL union. Union movements in home offices of the other film companies disclose tendencies toward the CIO United and Professional Office Workers of America.

The NLRB last week ordered a bargaining agency election in Warners' home office. Petitioner was the Warner Brothers Associated Office Employees of Greater New York.

In the same city Monday, the Harris Circuit won its restraining suit, in New York Supreme Court, against arbitration by Local 306, projectionists' union, of a wage increase. The court stated: "A perusal of the contract of March 23rd, 1938, which sought to establish a 10-year relationship, failed to disclose any right in the petitioners to demand the arbitration."

The Pennsylvania State Labor Relations Board, after reviewing testimony taken at a hearing in Tamaqua, Pa., has decided that P. A. Maguzzi, owner of a theatre circuit in the Pennsylvania anthracite region, did not refuse to bargain collectively with Local 218, Motion Picture Operators, of Pottsville, Pa. The charges involved only the Ritz Theatre in Port Carbon, Pa.

William Sharp, secretary of Local 37, International Alliance of Billposters, Billers and Distributors of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., for many years, has been reelected to his third consecutive term as second vice-president of the international.

The New Haven officers of the Mullin and Pinanski, Warners, and Loew-Poli circuits have signed new contracts with stagehands and projectionists' locals in Springfield and Worcester, with projectionists only at New Haven, and with stagehands only at Hartford. Negotiations had occurred since Labor Day.

Projectionists Ask Increase

The Chicago projectionists' union, asking a 10 per cent wage increase, at mid-week awaited decisions of independents and circuits, after setting a deadline. What punitive action would follow failure to observe the deadline, was not disclosed at mid-week.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

Fisticuffs

In an endeavor to instill a note of fistic authenticity into sequences in "The Young Mr. Pitt," Bombardier Billy Wells, ex-heavyweight champion of England, and whose manly torso is seen by screengoers every time the gong is rung on the main lead of G. F. D. releases, brought to the Shepherds Bush Studios of Gaumont British, the film of his fight with Dick Smith in 1915.

Wells is coaching Robert Donat and John Mills for a scene ostensibly outside Gentleman Jackson's Bond Street Boxing Academy where they have a set-to brawl. Scenes have also been shot inside the Academy.

The film has now reached its tenth week under the directorial eye of Carol Reed. Events of a recent kaleidoscopic week included Nelson nodding off to sleep in a country church, Fox abusing Pitt in the House of Commons, George III being stoned in his carriage, French revolutionaries grinding their scythes and sickles for the coming onslaught, Queen Charlotte buying a gown, Welshmen at election fever pitch, Napoleon reviewing his troops at Calais, peasants marching on Paris, and a firework display in honor of the intended invasion against England!

"The Young Mr. Pitt" is being produced for Twentieth Century by Edward Black, with Maurice Ostrer in charge.

Making the most of what sunshine yet remains out of the English year, the Leslie Howard Unit, making "First of the Few," the screen story built around the life and career of Reginald J. "Spitfire" Mitchell, has gone on location in the British Riviera at Cornwall. With them has gone Major David Niven, released from his military duties to take a leading role in the film. Niven plays two parts, that of test pilot—in the earlier sequences and a Wing Commander later in the story. Normally he would be engaged on special reconnaisance work with his regiment, the Rifle Brigade.

Leslie Howard not only produces the film and directs it, but also has the leading role, that of Michell, the aviation pioneer whose genius contributed so much to British air supremacy in the present war. Rosamund Johns, a latter-day discovery, has the role of Mrs. Mitchell.

October should see the film in the studio stage at Denham.

A Wellington bomber, which has done something more than its bit for Britain, is doing it in another way at Denham, just now, where it is being used for sequences in "One of Our Aircraft Is Missing," a British National film which Michael Powell is directing with the aid of cameraman Ronnie Neame. R. A. F. experts have assisted the filming.

Among those taking part in the film are many Dutch refugees to Britain who, on location at Spalding, Lincs, have played scenes against a background strongly reminiscent of their native land.

John Ojerholm, General Manager of Olympic Laboratories and who has one of the ripest American accents in town, has made his debut as a movie actor. He has played for a brief and glorious moment the role of newspaperman in Two-Cities "Unpublished Story," at Denham.

A. Havelock-Allan producer of the film wanted two men with genuine American accents to play a scene with Valerie Hobson and Richard Greene. Director Harold French spotted Ojerholm on the set with an American friend, a Lieutenant Alex Cherry, one of four Americans with his rank in the British Navy.

Both were persuaded to appear in the scene, Ojerholm as an American journalist and Cherry in uniform as himself.

Ojerholm ("Johnny's the name") says he still prefers the processing business!

Comedies Under Way

Taking off his comedy make-up, worn during the "Black Sheep of Whitehall," comedian Will Hay changed into a straight make-up and went on the set of Ealing Studios to play a dramatic role as skipper of a tramp steamer in Charles Friend's "The Big Blockade," which Cavalcanti is producing. Final sequences in the comedy cast Hay as a railway guard. The straight role is the first of its kind Hay has played on the screen.

Filmed during the week in "The Big Blockade" were Mr. David Bowes-Lyon, Leslie Banks, Robert Morley.

New title for the Soskin film, dealing with Fleet Street and the War, is "Fate Knocking at the Door," which has been suggested to Soskin by the opening chords of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. It is Soskin's intention to use the famous "V" symbol as one of the motifs in the picture.

The "V" symbol, short for "Victorie" and "Vrigheid," is also to form the subject for a film to be made at Ealing by producer Michael Balcon, who will dramatize the sabotage and revolt which are daily reported from Nazi-occupied territories.

Front line radio and vaudeville stars Elsie and Doris Waters, Cockney Gert and Daisy to their fans, have gone into their first picture at Welwyn, "Gert and Daisy's Weekend," which Maclean Rogers is directing under the Butcher-Empire mark. Gert and Daisy started their screen adventures by going to a Town Hall to complain about some fish, coming out as voluntary war workers in the evacuation department.

Triple Role

George Formby, Britain's Box Office Champion, undaunted as the "gormless lad," essays no less than three roles in his current production, "South American George," which first production, under his own Hillcrest banner, will be given world release by Columbia. Formby plays not only the role of the "gormless" ("Goofy") lad, but the same individual impersonating an Italian opera singer, and then the opera singer himself.

For this last role the toothy comic essays something new for him. Having in previous films braved the terrors of the "Wall of Death," ridden round race tracks on supercharged motor-cycles, and risked his neck—and other places—on a racehorse, he has now had his hair waved into elegant Marcelle curls.

The metamorphosis has been necessary for his role as Alfredo, the opera star, and every morning he has had to suffer the ministrations of the studio's lady hairdresser and her waving machine.

In one sequence Formby sings in the Violetta death scene of "La Traviata."

Marcel Varnel directs and Ben Henry is associate producer.

Losing no time in putting into practice his plans to ignore such incidentals as a shortage of technicians and the menace of a Blitzed Winter, 20th Fox producer Robert Kane has already, within two days of his arrival, announced that a location unit on his new British film—first of a series—"This Above All" is already getting ready for work.

Anatole Litvak is to direct, and Kane suggests that Margaret Sullavan may have the lead—much depending on exit permits, visas and other details of diplomatic and political machinery. Denham, says Kane, will be used for the studio sequences.

Nor is this his only baby. Kane intends to follow with "The Light of Heart" and Charles Morgan's "House of Peace." They all have English backgrounds.

Mercury Pictures is a new company whose first production will go out under the title "Occasionally Yours." Author of the film is Roland Pertwee and director Harold Huth. Clive Brook and Judy Campbell have leading roles in the film. It is being shot at Denham.

Cast in a vital role in the Gainsborough production "Hi Gang," in which Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon with collaborator Vic Oliver are the stars, is a 17½ cwt prize bull, "Bapton Air Pilot," owner of which is Mr. J. TECHNICIANS' DRAFT SPLITS BRITISH; EXHIBITORS DEMAND QUOTA REVISION

Protest Manpower Panel Report Which Recommends Calling All Men of Military Age; Changes in Films Act Sought

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

At no time more than the present has the production side of the industry here faced, as it is facing now, the problem of how it is to carry on in the future, to what extent and under what circumstances. Concurrent with the announcement of ambitious production plans on the part of American interests here has come a virtual threat of extinction, if Government plans to denude the industry of its technical men are fructified.

After five months or more of sitting, the Man Power Panel, representing the industry and the Government, has reached a stage in its proceedings which is near to final, has been astonished by the Government's interpretation of its deliberations as a virtual invitation to remove all its men of military age.

Facing this extraordinary situation, the industry has presented a somewhat confused front, with disunities not only as between section and section, but no less remarkably within individual groups themselves.

Quota Revision Demanded

Meanwhile British exhibitors, concerned only with the product available for their operation, have reiterated their demand that the Quota Act be amended, so as to reduce their commitments to a 15 per cent British quota, instead of the current 17½ per cent.

The Man Power Panel has sat, veiled in an air of obscurity and secrecy, since April last, hearing the views of Government departments and the Services and of the industry itself, on the question of manpower and the military responsibilities of its individuals, no less also on the personal needs of the production groups. After the deliberations, which have been veiled in secrecy, but which it was hoped would result in some equitable solution of the problem, in a compromise being struck between the industry's right to survive on the one hand and the services' need for men on the other, it has reached a stage in which a report has been drawn up by a Government official, Mr. Sharpe of the Ministry of Labor. The report is a preliminary draft from which a final version is to be derived and signed by all parties concerned.

The recommendations contained in the report, it is stated, intrinsically suggest the readiness of the industry to sacrifice its men on the altar of military necessity, propose the immediate withdrawal from the studios of technicians hitherto reserved below the age of 26. All other men employed in British studios in reserved categories of military age—under 42—would be withdrawn for service with the Forces in two stages, some later this year, others in the Spring.

The report as outlined has met with the immediate disapproval of most of the parties concerned. The labor unions, representing all sections of the industry, view it with serious concern, insist upon the retention of sufficient employees to undertake the necessary productions for the Services, Government departments and the industry itself. The Shorts Producers, upon whom has rested the main burden of propaganda on behalf of the British war effort, are no less concerned, ask that at least 100 trained technicians be retained to operate the vital services. Both these parties are unlikely to sign the report as at present outlined.

Against and in direct contradiction to this attitude has come, surprisingly enough, an official statement from the British Film Producers' Association, who not only generously and altruistically back up the Government's point of view, insist that everything must be done to assist the Government in finding men for the Services, but deprecate the views expressed by every other section of the industry that the call-ups proposed by the Government would denude the industry of its essential men and mean a shut-down of the major volume of production.

Opposition by Producers

The official B. F. P. A. attitude, however, does not represent the views of every individual producer. It is in direct opposition to those of leading producer Michael Balcon, sponsor of the theory of rationalization, who foresees a virtually complete cessation of production activity if the present drainage goes on unrestricted. Balcon himself, at loggerheads with other members of the association, has presented his own views to the Board of Trade in the form of a memorandum soliciting their intervention to prevent the industry being wiped out, does not at all speak for American producers here.

The British Film Producers' Association, who do not of course represent all British producers and represent no American producers, agree that the situation has been made difficult by the calling-up of men of military age, but insist that everything should be done by the industry to assist the Government in mobilizing its manpower. They are willing to collaborate, willing even to replace the younger men by women trainees, ask only that the older men shall not be called up until women have been trained to replace them in key positions.

It is the official view of the B. F. P. A. that the Government are fully aware of the important role which the industry is playing in the national war machine and they are sure that sufficient men will be left to operate it.

On the other hand, the Short Film Producers, on whom, as already suggested, has rested the main burden of propaganda of British war aims, not only in Britain but Overseas, take a directly opposite standpoint. Upon them and their personnel, who have in the main conducted screen propaganda on behalf of the Ministry of Information and other Government departments, who have assisted in making technical and training films for the three Services, they contend, the future presentation of the British case hangs. During the past few years the volume of short film production has swollen considerably, so much so that British short films are being produced highly in excess of the quantity called for by the Act.

A minimum guarantee of 100 men, they suggest, would be a guarantee that the Government's screen message would be projected and propagated for the course of the war. Otherwise pecially that for the Ministry of Information, will be brought to a standstill.

The industry has not yet, it would seem, got down to brass tacks on the mechanical process of training women to occupy technical positions in the studios. At Shepherd's Bush, one of the most constantly active of British studios, only six women have been trained, two as projectionists and the others as sound assistants and assistant directors.

Hollywood's Plans Set

Meanwhile, concurrently with this virtual ultimatum and the intrinsic suggestions to the industry that it shall capitulate its territory, American interests here have, probably coindentally, chosen the moment to announce imposing production programs in Britain. Robert Kane, on behalf of Twentieth Century-Fox, has this week arrived and announced three major films for production in continuity, the first of these to be launched at once. Teddy Carr, on behalf of United Artists, has announced plans for the spending of much of United Artists' frozen money in the making of British pictures in Britain, all these of an expensive caliber. On the tapis, too, is a Metro proposal to bring over Ben Goetz and Clarence Brown to revive their hitherto notable production activities at Denham. How far all these plans are likely to materialize, if the Government insists on taking away the technicians, it is extremely difficult to forecast.

Meanwhile, the exhibitors continue their pressure for the alteration of the Act, contending that there will not be sufficient product available for them to operate competitively. Their demand is that the Board of Trade alter the schedules of quota percentages so that the exhibitor is only compelled to find 15 per cent instead of the existing 17½ per cent. The Board of Trade has the power to alter the schedules of the Act without recourse to Parliament, but it must be done before the end of 1941, otherwise it cannot be tackled before 1944.

Any amendment of the schedules would apply for the year beginning October 1, 1942, and continue to apply during the two following years, years which may well prove to be the most difficult from the point of view of the industry and that of the war.

Fifteen per cent is the lowest figure to which they can reduce the exhibitors' quota.

The Films Council, which at the moment has not issued its report upon its last operative period, has recently been considering the question of individual quota defaults.

FILMS COUNCIL URGES PLANNED PRODUCTION

Surveying the British film industry situation in the light of the war year ended March 31, 1941, the Cinematograph Films Council in its third report, published this week, emphasizes the need of a planned scheme of British production. The report stresses as two main reasons for the present conditions the lack of finance and the lack of coordination between Government departments interested in films.

The Council rejects suggested cuts in quota percentages as not the basic solution and recommends that the Government materialize plans to preserve the nucleus of the industry at the agreed level.

The report recorded 12 quota defaults by distributors and 316 by exhibitors in the year ended March 31, 1941.

MEXICAN STRIKE AFFECTS TWO MORE U.S. MAJORS

Paramount, RKO Offices Closed in Mexico City; Withdrawal from Country Not Expected

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

The Mexican film workers' union on Monday extended its strike to Paramount and RKO, and these companies have closed their local offices. Five American companies are now affected by the strike which went into effect early in September against Loew's Warners and Columbia.

Union officials have extended the strike deadline against the remaining three major companies until October 14th pending further wage negotiations. The action against Paramount and RKO was taken following inability to reach an agreement, it was said.

Meanwhile, the 30 days of discontinuance of film service given Mexican theatres by the distributors was to expire on Thursday. The companies remaining open will not be required to service theatres thereafter.

Withdrawal Not Expected

The opinion is spreading in local film circles that Mexico will not be deprived of major American pictures. It is believed that the eight companies do not intend to withdraw from this country, though there have been reports for some time that they would. One theory is that the distributors would move to other cities where labor is not so strongly organized.

This plan, it is argued, is entirely feasible because distribution could be done here and elsewhere in the republic through agents with just a desk, a hat rack and perhaps a telephone. These agents, it is explained, could function easily by having the exhibitors call for the pictures, pay for them C.O.D., sign iron-clad contracts that they assume all responsibility for the films while they were in their possession, and return them to the agent. Likely spots for the Americans to hold forth under this arrangement are Puebla City, capital of Puebla state, and Toluca, capital of the State of Mexico, both of which are short distances from here. Monterrey, a little way down from Laredo, Texas, an important industrial center, is also mentioned in this regard.

Pessimism about the outcome of the situation continues among the exhibitors though the government has announced that it intends to provide sufficient films by stepping up domestic production and granting special import facilities for Spanish language pictures.

Leading exhibitors here have asked Municipal Treasurer A. Yañez to allow them a 25 per cent cut in their current civic taxes, explaining that their business has fallen off alarmingly since the troubles of the eight major Americans began because the public is not taking kindly, in number or enthusiasm, to present film fare.

The treasurer has taken this request under advisement.

The industry was jolted by the announcement of suspension of all its activities by German Camus y Compañia, the distributors headed by German Camus, a French-Mexican, that were pioneers in the field in Mexico. For nearly 30 years this company handled most of the European pictures, principally French, that were exhibited in Mexico. The firm enjoyed an enviable reputation. Lack of films because of the war and demands of its employees, similar to those made upon the American majors, forced the suspension, it was explained by the company.

The plan for a government bank here to finance the picture industry for greater and more rational production, distribution and exhibition that has been more or less dormant since it appeared four years ago has come to life again with the endorsement of ten prominent congressmen who are soon to present a concrete plan for the opening of such a bank to President Manuel Avila Camacho. The new plan calls for the government to entirely finance the bank, providing for it a capital of $415,000.

Sponsors of the proposition say it is entirely feasible and that the government would easily be able to amortize its investment within ten years from profits the bank would enable the Mexican industry to make.

Mexican film laborites have lost at least one strike of late with the declaration by the Sinaloa state work board that the closure of the Cine Teatro Rubio at Mazatlan, an important port of the Pacific state, was illegal. The board found that the workers had no reason for striking against this theatre, the biggest in the port, and ordered them back to work. The attaches promptly obeyed.

Mexican labor laws provide that when the labor authorities declare a strike legal, the employers are obligated to pay wages during the time of the shutdown. The strike against MGM and Columbia was declared legal.

As a tribute to his work for better pictures during the past ten years, Director Juan Bustillo Oro was awarded a special diploma of honor by "El Universal," important local daily newspaper. The prize remarked that Sr. Bustillo Oro had done particularly well in directing since 1938.

Miliza Korjus, the noted Polish grand opera singer and picture player, is here for the announced purpose of playing with Ramon Navarro the principal roles in a film, "Musica para la Emperatriz" ("Music for the Empress"), based upon the life in Mexico of the unfortunate Empress Carlota, wife of the Emperor Maximilian who, after a brief and bizarre career as Emperor of this country, died before a Mexican Republican firing squad on June 19th, 1867.

Importance of the picture industry to Mexican economy is demonstrated by figures showing that:

The industry directly supports 12,300 persons and has an average annual payroll of about $2,225,000; gross receipts of the 1,009 active theatres in the country total around $13,300,000 a year. It had been said that Mexico has 958 active theatres. The industry explains that the exact number is 1,009, of which 67 are in the Federal District, which includes this city. Investment in the industry for production, distribution and exhibition is calculated at upward of $13,300,000.

Picture exhibition in Mexico began in 1903 in a tent and with films that were advertisements for business houses. Theatres began to be modernized in 1916. But it was not until about 1923 that they began to be patterned along American lines.

Emilio Azcarraga, head of the company that operates the Cine Teatro Alameda, leading local first run theatre, and radio stations XEW and XEQ here, Mexico's largest stations, is a director of the Anglo Mexican Bank that British interests are to inaugurate here this month with an initial capital of $615,000.

Film Copyrights Before Lawyers

A report of its Committee on Copyrights was considered by the Section of Patent, Trade-Mark and Copyright Law at the annual convention of the American Bar Association in Indianapolis this week. The report was presented by Edward A. Sargoy, of New York, Chairman of the committee, and discussed a number of matters affecting the motion picture industry as well as other industries concerned with copyright. It dealt not only with proposals for the United States to join the International Copyright Union, but with some ten bills pending in the present Congress pertaining to copyright properties.

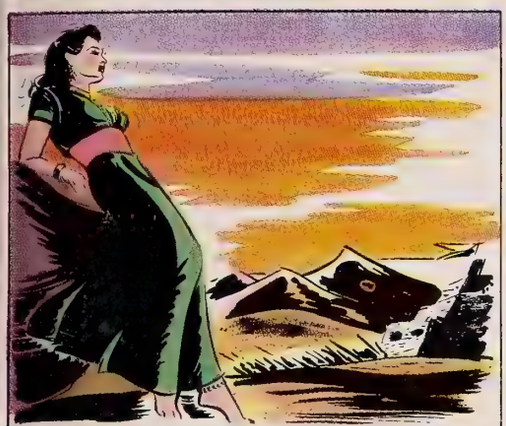
Among the legislative proposals disapproved by the Committee are: adherence at this time to the International Copyright Union; a uniform $2.00 registration fee; price fixing of musical performing rights by the Federal Trade Commission where licensed by a marketing combination; the elimination or reduction of the present pre-stated minimum statutory damage provisions; creation of five regional copyright libraries; making it a criminal offense to market or make recordings of radio programs without written consent of the performers; and calling for the deposit of copies in the U. S. Copyright Office at Washington not later than the date of publication.

The committee recommended approval of the Kramer-Bone bill which would permit the President to extend, by Presidential proclamation because of war emergencies, the time during which native and foreign authors may file renewals of copyright or applications for ad iterim copyright. Another Kramer bill which would permit the public to secure certified copies of registered prints and labels from the Copyright Office is also approved.

Mr. Sargoy, who is general counsel to the Motion Picture Copyright Protection Bureau, has been chairman of the aforementioned bar association copyright committee since 1938.

George Arliss Fined $18,000

George Arliss, British stage and screen star for more than 50 years and familiar to the audiences of this country for the many American made pictures in which he appeared, was fined approximately $18,000 in Police Court in London, England, last week for having failed to register holdings of American securities worth $52,640. He was also assessed $42 cost.



The prosecutor said that early in 1941 Mr. Arliss wrote that he was surprised that his full list of securities had not been registered, and that he said he had left everything to be done by his agent in the United States.

I. du Pont de Nemours and Company common and to dissolve Pathe Film, it was announced last Friday by Kenneth M. Young, president of Pathe.

Proxies in the indicated amount were received by the management in time to be voted at a special meeting Wednesday, in New York.

Under the proposal, Pathe transfers 3,500 shares of du Pont Film to E. I. du Pont, receiving in return 56,750 shares of E. I. du Pont common stock.

DANCING IN THE STREET FOR 'YANK IN THE RAF'

20th-Fox Premiere at Roxy, New York, Supported by Ball, Carnival; "Tarzan" Tour On

Twentieth Century-Fox, last Friday, figuratively moved Coney Island to Broadway, with carnivals and concessions to color the opening of its new "Yank in the R. A. F.," and with extra special attention coming from the Army, Navy and the Marine Corps, the press and people of British-American society. Proceeds from the $10-top tickets went to the British-American Ambulance Corps.

The trimmings put on for the world premiere, at the Roxy Theatre, drew 100,000 persons, according to a police estimate, as reported by Hal Horne of Fox's special promotional department.

NBC televised. The United States Army lit the sky with 800-million candlepower from anti-aircraft searchlights from Fort Totten. And the $10-per mezzanine sitters each received extra special invitation to a Midnight Military Ball held later in the large rotunda of the highly gilted Roxy Theatre. This event was attended by social registerites, commandants and their staffs of military posts in the eastern area, and a contingent of army, navy and air officers and officials from Washington, plus an assortment of state and city officials, Broadway names of stage, radio and screen, and executives from Hollywood and New York.

Before the showing the Roxy rotunda was jammed with ticket-holders who witnessed the regular Vox Pop broadcast, with guests Elsa Maxwell, Dorothy Kilgallen, Carole Landis and Tony Martin. Following this, celebrities were escorted to a regular studio set with full lighting equipment. Managing director Irving Lesser of the Roxy detailed six stalwarts of his uniformed staff to escort the "glamor" names. Besides, there was a detail of 200 soldiers.

The carnival in adjacent parking space was going until three o'clock Saturday morning, with 26,000 tickets at 25c each sold for more ambulances. Thirty concession booths occupied the "midway," where a stage was rigged up for the outdoor appearances of Joe Lewis, Miss America, Ella Logan, Art Greene, Ted Steele, Neil Farnsworth, Jimmy Savo and Dick Todd, et al. Casts of five Broadway shows did individual turns, from "A Lady in the Dark," "Panama Hattie," "Pal Joey," "It Happens on Ice," and "Hellzapoppin."

Fox points out that this was one premiere whose overflow failed to benefit opposition theatres, for the turnaways found excitement out front and in the carnival.

Nine Crummond fighter planes, in an aerial salute, flew over Broadway. The planes came from Floyd Bennett Field. Some 500 cadets and 200 officers from Fort Totten, Governors Island, Mitchel Field, Floyd Bennett Field and the First Army Area attended.

Among British and American officials invited were Air Marshal A. T. Harris, R.A.F.; Sir Vivien Gabriel, Read Admiral Henry E. Lackey, U.S.N. (retired); Hon. Leander McCormick-Goodhart, U.S.A.; British Consul General Lewis Bernays, of Chicago; Wing Commander Guy Du Boulay, R.A.F.; Admiral Sterling Yates, Jr., U.S.N. (retired), and Colonel W. Stewart Roddie, C.V.O.

A sponsoring committee, headed by Governor Herbert H. Lehman, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia and Under Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal, included figures in political, social and theatrical circles.

"Tarzan" Tour Starts

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "King Tarzan" national jungle tour got underway Wednesday in Wilmington, Del., as a highlight of the grand opening of Loew's Aldine theatre. The stunt, conceived by Howard Dietz, in charge of company promotion, and supervised by William R. Ferguson, will pre-sell the forthcoming "Tarzan's Secret Treasure," the new Johnny Weissmuller-Maureen O'Sullivan vehicle.

The itinerary thus far announced for October is:

October 1st, Wilmington; 6th, Easton, Pa.; 7th, Allentown, Pa.; 8th, Reading, Pa.; 9th, Harrisburg, Pa.; 10th, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; 11th, Scranton, Pa.; 13th, Bridgeport and New Haven, Conn.; 14th, Waterbury and Hartford, Conn.; 15th, Springfield and Worcester, Mass.; 16th, Providence, R. I.; 17th, Boston; 18th, Pittsfield, Mass.; 20th, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; 21st, Schenectady and Amsterdam, N. Y.; 22d, Utica and Rome, N. Y.

Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit territories will be next to see the caravan.

At each show "King Tarzan" ascends a simulated tree branch and traverses a 28-foot stretch toward a crouching painted figure representing the character played in the film by young Johnny Sheffield.

"Yank" on Double Bill

Twentieth Century-Fox double billed "A Yank in the RAF" at Loew's State theatre in downtown Los Angeles and Grauman's Chinese in Hollywood and presented the picture as a single bill in the Four Star theatre, situated midway in distance between the two theatres, simultaneously on September 26th pre-showing as a test for policy of booking into other key situations. The admission remained at the same level at all three theatres during the test.

If justified by results, this procedure will be tried with other Fox productions such as "How Green Was My Valley."

The innovation will not be continued if it results in losses, but if returns warrant it after the triple day and date test in the Los Angeles area, the experiment will be continued to test patrons preference for double bill and single bill policies. The suggestion was first made by Darryl Zanuck and was accepted by Charles Skouras and Herman Wobber. A full dress premiere was held on September 25th at the Chinese theatre.

"Heaven" Premiere Set

Martha Scott, who is co-starred with Fredric March in Warner Brothers screen version of the Hartzell Spence novel, "One Foot in Heaven," arrived in Washington, D. C., Tuesday to attend the world premiere of the film. Miss Scott flew east from the coast. On Thursday evening the picture was to have its world premiere in the nation's capital.

"One Foot in Heaven" was filmed with the assistance of a technical adviser, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, selected by a committee of representative Protestant clergymen, since the photoplay is the story of the family of a midwestern minister. Irving Rapper, who directed the film, Mrs. Fredric March and many persons of the entertainment and journalistic world will join governmental figures at the premiere.

The Hollywood premiere of "One Foot in Heaven" will be held at Warner's Hollywood and Downtown theatres upon completion of the run of "Sergeant York" at these two houses, according to present plans. Premiere of picture will be at a $2.20 top.

A single feature policy at both theatres will be adopted for the run of the picture. The premiere date cannot be determined at the present time due to unprecedented grosses being piled up by "Sergeant York" at the two theatres, with the length of the "York" engagement indefinite. It is probable that "York" will set a new mark for extended playing time in these two spots, Warners said.

"Sundown" Opening Set

The world premiere of Walter Wanger's "Sundown" will be held at the Four Star theatre in Los Angeles on Thursday evening, October 16th. The admission for the opening will be on a $2.20 basis, and the event will be attended by many of the film capital's personalities.

"Sundown" is the production based on the Saturday Evening Post serial by Barre Lyndon, and was directed by Henry Hathaway. Gene Tierney, Bruce Cabot and George Sanders are in the leading roles, with a cast that includes Harry Carey, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Reginald Gardiner, Joseph Calleia, Carl Esmond and Marc Lawrence.

"Blues" Opens in Memphis

The world premiere of Paramount's "Birth of the Blues," starring Bing Crosby, Mary Martin and Brian Donlevy, will be held in Memphis, Tenn., on Wednesday evening, October 31st. After much discussion this city was chosen over New Orleans as the "birthplace of American jazz music."

In choosing Memphis over New Orleans, Paramount intruded upon the controversy that has split the music world ever since jazz became popular enough to rate a history. The Tennessee city had claims as the home town of W. C. Handy, composer of "St. Louis Blues," and the locale of Beale Street, the special Tin Pan Alley of "hot music." The decision was arrived at after a special studio conference between Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity, and George Brown, west coast publicity head.

"Dumbo" Art Show

Exhibitions of Walt Disney originals from his forthcoming RKO Radio release "Dumbo" will be placed on public view current with local playdates in twenty cities over the country, it is announced by RKO.

The New York showings will be held at Harlow, Keppel & Co., and Kennedy Galleries. Following the showings in major key cities, the Disney originals will be routed to approximately thirty other cities.

In addition to the "Dumbo" originals, which will stress a marked surrealist note, especially in the Pink Elephant sequence, which is a highlight of the new feature-length cartoon, water colors and celluloids from "Fantasia," "Pinocchio" and other Disney productions will be included. Private collectors and museums consider Disney works among the most representative of contemporary Americana.

Dealers set to display the "Dumbo" array include Grace Horne Galleries, Boston; Arthur Ackerman & Sons, Chicago; Fine Arts Gallery and J. L. Hudson Company, Detroit; J. J. Gillespie, Pittsburgh, and the Whyte Galleries, Washington, D. C. Courvoisier & Co. is agent for the originals.

"Dumbo" will be released late in October by RKO.

"Freedom" Affair Set

Service men formerly employed in the theatre, motion picture and radio fields will be the guests of Fight for Freedom at "Fun to Be Free," the patriotic carnival, which the Stage, Screen, Radio and Arts Division of Fight for Freedom is staging at Madison Square Garden in New York on Sunday, October 5th, according to an announcement by Louis Schaffer, secretary of the group. Mr. Schaffer said that arrangements have been completed whereby tickets will be given free to those men in the country's forces who write in to Fight for Freedom, 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York City.

VAUDEVILLE IN FILM HOUSES IS UP AS MUCH AS 30% ON SOME CIRCUITS

Bookers Report Best Season in Years for Personality Shows; RKO Theatres Have Road Units of Stage Play

With the new motion picture season under way circuit bookers report that vaudeville booking for houses on a combination picture-show policy has increased over last year as much as 30 per cent. Bookers all agree that the new season promises to be the best the business has had in ten years but disagree in offering reasons for the upsurge. Some say it's just another indication of "good business" everywhere, as a result of the national defense production program; others think that the customers are indicating their boredom with "duals" by clamoring for "personalities" stage shows, particularly those migrants from Hollywood and radio and of course, the special "name bands." A few declared it was still too early to tell whether the new selling policy, under consent decree provisions, was a factor.

William Howard, chief booker for RKO, reported this week an increase of 30 per cent over last year in show schedules, listing the following theatres as having a regular picture-show combination: RKO, Boston; Palace, Cleveland; Shubert, Cincinnati; Colonial, Dayton; Empire, Syracuse, and Golden, San Francisco. In addition to these houses, RKO also will handle spot booking, one or two shows a month, for the Palace, Albany; Proctor's, Schenectady; Palace, Columbus and Temple, Rochester.

Revival in Boston

The RKO theatre in Boston returned to a policy of vaudeville and motion pictures on August 29th. Last season this was the only Hub house using stage shows. During the 41-week season the RKO took in almost $480,000 for 222 vaudeville days.

Some of the shows already booked for RKO theatres from now until January 1st include: "personalities" shows, which Mr. Howard believes are tops in audience preference with "name band" and girl units next; George White's Scandals: Earl Carroll's Vanities; Folies Bergere; Carmen Amaya; John Boles; The Three Stooges; "Hollywood Sweater Girls," a unit brought from the West Coast, featuring June Preisser and Barbara Pepper; Billy Gilbert; Brenda and Cobina of radio fame; Horace Heidt; Tony Pastor and the Inkspots.

At Paramount, chief booker Harry Kalcheim reported that his office was booking shows for the following theatres: Strand, Brooklyn, four days a week, on a "pool" basis with Warners; the Paramount, Toledo, all week; Olympia, Miami, four days a week; Metropolitan, Boston, which has not booked a stage show for more than a year, with exception of the Bob Hope appearance there last spring, is reopening this week with band shows; Michigan, Detroit, full week, closed to vaudeville for about six months, reopening this autumn; the Chicago theatre in Chicago, Paramount in New York and State Lake and Regal houses in Chicago, all booked for full week with name band stage presentations. Mr. Kalcheim's office also books spot shows for the following: Orpheum, Minneapolis; Orpheum, Omaha, and Buffalo theatre in Buffalo. These schedules, according to Mr. Kalcheim, indicate an increase over last year's bookings and point to greater box office receipts for Paramount houses.

At Warners', chief booker Harry Mayer announced that stage presentations this season would run approximately the same as last year, with bookings already scheduled for the Earle, Philadelphia; Earle, Washington; Stanley, Pittsburgh and the Strand theatres in Brooklyn and Manhattan. Warners' spot bookings are at the following theatres: in Pennsylvania, Capitol, Lancaster; Strand, York; Ambridge, Ambridge; Butler, Butler; Columbia, Erie; Manos, Greensburg; Majestic, Johnstown; Columbia, Sharon; Library, Warren and State, Washington. In West Virginia, Fairmont, Fairmount; Smoot, Parkersburg; Warner, Morgantown. In Ohio, Palace, Lorain; Leroy, Portsmouth and Madison, Mansfield.

Sidney Piermont, booker for Loew's, Inc., said his company's bookings for this season would have a few additions to last year's schedule: Loew's State in New York and Capitol in Washington, full week shows combined with pictures; spot bookings in Loew's, Richmond; State, Norfolk, and Broad, Columbus. Band show units and some personalities feature in stage presentations.

Predicts Good Season

As one booker for the William Morris agency, theatrical booking office, remarked, "The general outlook for stage shows this season is more promising than for the past few seasons. This can be attributed to certain aspects of the consent decree, also, the general upturn in business conditions throughout the country. Certain towns which have not had stage shows for some time or intermittently, such as Boston, Detroit, Syracuse, St. Paul, Interstate Theatres in Texas, Omaha, Minneapolis and several others, are now in the market for band attractions and screen and radio names. Our attractions have been booked up farther in advance this year than usually has been the custom this early in the season."

In discussing the Fanchon and Marco new season schedule, Jessie Kaye, chief booker, said: "For the first time in years, it's beginning to look as though vaudeville is coming back, but if motion picture houses are to enjoy a resurgence of the good old days, their chief problem will be to get the proper number of good performers. Good material is lacking. For the last ten years performers left the business and went into other lines or retired. Many acts went to Hollywood where they've been living in the hopes of getting one or two picture jobs a week. The increase of booking activity this year is a good sign and I hope it means that vaudeville will stage a come-back."

The Fanchon and Marco circuit for this year remains approximately the same as last year with shows going into the following houses: St. Louis, Fox; Paramount, Los Angeles, and Roxy, New York. Additional units are sent from New York to Warner's Earle theatre in Washington, and Fay's in Philadelphia.

Activity in the Field

M. M. Rubens, vice president, Publix-Great States circuit, Chicago, reported that his circuit played approximately sixty days more of stage attractions during the past season than it had for several years previously and that Great States intends to play as many top attractions this year as are available. For the coming season stage shows, bands and legitimate shows will be used at the circuit's Palace Theatre, Peoria, Ill; Orpheum, Springfield, Ill.; Rialto, Joliet, Ill.; Palace, South Bend, Ind.; Coronada, Rockford, Ill.; Palace, Danville, Ill.; Lincoln, Decatur, Ill.; Orpheum, Galesburg, Ill.; Genesee, Waukegan, Ill., and Paramount, Aurora, Ill.

In addition to Great States, other theatres outside of Chicago that plan band and show presentations whenever available, are the Bay, Green Bay, Wis.; Oshkosh, Oshkosh, Wis.; Kenosha, Wis., all of Standard Theatres circuit; Rio, Appleton, Wis.; Capitol, Madison, Wis.; Capitol, Manitowoc, Wis., operated by Bob Guiterman; and the Elco, Elkhart, Ind., an Indiana-Illinois chain house.

Other harbingers of renewed vigor in vaudeville bookings have come in from the field. In Pittsburgh, the Stanley theatre will handle acts booked through the National Theatrical Exchange, and Tri-State theatres are making stage dates available for their houses with district manager Harry Kalmine, of Warner's, reporting that suitable talent is scarce. Other cities in the area also will book shows with pictures, including the following spots: Johnstown, Butler, Altoona, Mt. Carvel, Mahanoy City, Williamsport, Sharon, Erie, Braddock, Greensburg, Cumberland, Wheeling, Washington and Morgantown.

Several Comerford houses in Pennsylvania already have resumed vaudeville, while at least one other is scheduled to inaugurate a stage policy this week. The theatres are: the Capitol, Binghamton, N. Y.; Lyric, Endicott, N. Y.; Capitol, Waverly, N. Y.; Enjoy, Johnson City, N. Y., and Keystone, Towanda, Pa. Three-day-a-week vaudeville will be started at the Colonial in Lebanon, Pa. The Irving theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has been running vaudeville for two consecutive years without a stop, while the Family in Scranton, Pa., and the Hippodrome in Pottsville, Pa., also have three-day-a-week policy.

In Detroit, the Fox and Michigan, which have not had stage shows in months, adopted a policy of playing stage attractions whenever suitable "name" bills can be booked. In addition, the Broadway-Capitol, a 3,500-seat second-run downtown house, operated by United Detroit Circuit, signed for regular shows using units and vaudeville acts whenever available. The Colonial, downtown 25-cent subsequent-run house, operated by Raymond Schreiber, signed to open this week with full-week vaudeville, using a trio of film stars including Michael

OLD FAMILIAR FACADES

Buffalo's 37-year-old theatrical landmark, Shea's Court Street Theatre, which has been dark since its last vaudeville program ten years ago, will be razed and its site at Franklin and Court streets used for a parking lot. Wrecking begins this week.

In its vaudeville heyday, Shea's was widely known in the show business and housed virtually every noted performer of today and of the last generation in dramatic, comedy and musical comedy fields. Motion picture and radio stars, at one time or another, frequently played at Shea's before the house ceased operations.

TREND TOWARD LEGITIMATE SHOWS

Whalen, Lya Lys and Isabel Jewell to open together with four other acts.

Edgar Bergen, heading a variety show, will open the winter season at the Shrine Auditorium, Des Moines, on October 3d. In Newark, N. J., the Adams theatre, at its reopening August 29th, presented Sonny Dunham's band and Dennis Day as the stage attraction. The second week included Rochester (Eddie Anderson), Dick Stabile's orchestra and Gracie Barrie. Eddie Duchin's orchestra came in the third week and Cab Calloway is slated for the fourth. The house will operate on a vaudeville policy on weekends.

In Fort Wayne, Ind., the Palace reopened with stage shows on September 5th. Jan Garber's band was the first attraction. Then Billy Gilbert, screen comedian, teamed with Reggie Child's band, followed. Tony Pastor appeared for one week and Raymond Scott was presented for four days beginning September 25th.

Glenn Miller's orchestra played a four-day engagement at Fabian's Palace, Albany, ending last Monday, the first time in months that this theatre has booked a stage unit.

Stanley Band Buildup

Pittsburgh's Stanley, a Warner theatre, probably will set a record this season for stage-show broadcasts when Glenn Miller's orchestra arrives at the house for a week's engagement. Four radio shows will be aired from the Stanley stage before the regular audience, three for bandleader Miller's commercial show over Columbia Broadcasting, via WJAS, and one a sustaining program for the National Broadcasting's Red network, via WCAE. Two additional broadcasts will emanate from the theatre's backstage.

Most name bands which appear at the Stanley, when booked for network broadcasts, play in local radio studios. On the few occasions when orchestras aired from the stage, Warner Bros. publicized the program in advance and discovered that box office receipts increased greatly.

Theatres which have not booked stage shows in years are resuming the film-vaudeville policy. The Palace and Loew's in Canton, Ohio, are reviving stage presentations after an absence of six years. Shows were dropped in both houses when the local musicians' union demanded a 100 per cent standby band in the pit. The union has now agreed to allow a 50 per cent standby band under a new set up which will provide stage units to the two theatres alternate weeks.

In Toledo, both the Rivoli and Paramount are offering occasional show units this season for the first time in some years, and in Portland, Maine, the Civic plans to book shows out of RKO in Boston. The Wilmer and Vincent circuit in Richmond, Va., resumed a split-week policy of stage presentations for four days and second-run features three days.

AFM Interference

In spite of renewed activity in bookings, it is reported that locals of the American Federation of Musicians appear likely to disrupt any recent ideas of a moderate vaudeville come-back. Musicians in several situations are demanding a wage increase of 15 per cent with nearly all new deals coming up shortly.

A number of independent theatre operators, meanwhile, have indicated a willingness to try stage shows in an effort to boost box office receipts, but only if the unions will cooperate, until the policy is sufficiently established to warrant a pay raise.

Meanwhile, in Canada, considerable thought is being given to the advisability of restoring life, in some degree, to the stage and pit of appropriate theatres as an auxiliary to screen entertainment.

The handicaps for vaudeville in Canada are: actors of enemy origin cannot get into the country from the United States. British subjects now in this country on immigration permits cannot set foot outside the country during their period of license because their certificates would be cancelled automatically and they could not return until new entry permits are granted by American authorities. The foreign exchange situation works against residents of the United States because pay in Canadian funds would be virtually 10 per cent less. Tourists can come and go at will, providing they arm themselves with personal credentials, but those who fill engagements in the Dominion have to go through the red-tape intricacies. Thus, vaudeville, of the week-to-week touring type, can be regarded as out.

Canadian audiences, however, are taking it for granted that rival circuits will adopt some form of stage presentations because of new rivalry situations and because there is a growing belief that give-aways are due for an exit. It is expected that the Government will prohibit all forms of premiums and theatre give-aways under the heading of regulation war measures. Hence, the consideration of stage shows restoration.

RKO Books Shows In Nine Theatres

Bookings for the legitimate Broadway show, "Life With Father," have been completed by Oscar Serlin, theatrical producer, and RKO. Charles W. Koerner, RKO circuit chief, in discussing the schedule, said that as far as he knew nine RKO theatres would get the play, four in Iowa and the rest in Providence, Rochester, Columbus, Lowell and Syracuse. The play engagements represent a new departure in circuit bookings and Mr. Koerner declared that if "any other Broadway show, equally as successful as "Life With Father" came along, the company would consider it for similar operation, depending, of course, on the success of the Serlin show in motion picture houses.

Following is the complete schedule:

October 9th and 10th: Albee, Providence (seats 2,700); 1 matinee, 2 evening shows.

October 11th: Keith, Lowell, Mass. (seats 2,200); 1 performance.

October 30th and 31st: Empire, Syracuse, N. Y. (seats 2,200); 2 performances.

November 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th: Temple, Rochester, N. Y. (seat 2,000); 2 matinee, 4 evening shows.

December 1st to 6th: Grand, Columbus, Ohio (seats 1,800), 2 matinees, 4 evening shows.

February 18th: Orpheum, Cedar Rapids, Ia. (seats 2,600); 1 performance.

February 19th: Orpheum, Davenport, Ia. (seats 1,600); 1 performance.

February 20th: Orpheum, Waterloo, Ia. (seats 2,000); 1 performance.

February 23rd: Orpheum, Sioux City, Ia. 1 performance.

Louis Calhern, screen and stage star, and Dorothy Gish, who headed the Philadelphia and Detroit runs of the show will co-star in all engagements with the exception of the Columbus and Iowa bookings, where Percy Waram and Margalo Gilmore will head the company in those "one-night stands."

Philadelphia gets a third theatre for a full season of legitimate stage attractions with the Shubert theatrical interests taking over the dark Walnut Street Theatre, as reported last week. Already operating the Forrest and Locust Street houses, the Shuberts will reopen the Walnut on September 29th with "Separate Rooms" for an indefinite run, following with a series of six Theatre Guild revivals, the first of which willl be "Ah Wilderness," featuring Harry Carey, screen player.

Pittsburgh's legitimate show season got under way this week at the Nixon with the Cornell presentation, "The Doctor's Dilemma." The following shows are slated for subsequent engagements: Ed Wynn's "Hold on to Your Hats," "Meet the People," with Hollywood talent, Al Jolson in "Boys and Girls Together," "My Sister Eileen," "Panama Hattie," "Louisiana Purchase," "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Pal Joey," "Tobacco Road," "Ziegfeld Follies," "Johnny Belinda," "The Corn is Green," "There Shall be No Night," and "Watch on the Rhine." Last year's 22-week season grossed approximately $350,000 for the Nixon.

Broadway Plays Presented

In addition to name bands which will be booked from time to time along with films, Keith's Butterfield in Grand Rapids, Mich., is set to present three legitimate shows this autumn. "Boys and Girls Together," goes in for October 17-18, to be followed on November 12-13 by "Life With Father," and in December, by "My Sister Eileen."

For the first time in 15 years, legitimate houses in Alabama are preparing for an active season, with nine plays already booked, the first of which is "Blossom Time."

St. Louis' drama season will open October 6th with "My Sister Eileen" at the American, the only legitimate theatre in the city. To date nearly 1,200 reservations were placed by the Playgoers, a non-profit group organized to bring Broadway shows to St. Louis through guaranteed audiences. Other shows scheduled for the season include: "Arsenic and Old Lace," "The Corn Is Green," "Separate Rooms," "Claudia," "Pal Joey," "Panama Hattie," "Louisiana Purchase," "Hold on to Your Hats," "Boys and Girls Together," and "Native Son."

The Taft and Cox theatres in Cincinnati also have a number of Broadway plays booked for the season and in Columbus, the Hartman theatre will open its autumn drama run with "Father's Day," formerly named "Western Union," which is on a try-out tour, enroute to Chicago, prior to coming into New York for its Broadway run.

Warner Circuit Prizes Awarded in Philadelphia

New automobiles were presented by Joseph Bernhard, Warner circuit general manager, to three managers of Philadelphia and Camden theatres at a zone meeting for 121 theatre managers in Philadelphia on September 24th. Four other prizes, also for leadership in exploitation campaigns, were presented by Ted Schlanger, zone manager.

Irving Blumberg, Oxford theatre, Philadelphia, Joseph Murdock, Stanley theatre, Camden, and Joseph Dougherty, Towers theatre, Philadelphia won the cars. Paul Castello won the $700 annual zone prize with second award of $300 going to Morris Gable. Quarterly drive prizes of $500 and $250 went to Morris Gable and Al Plough, respectively.

Mr. Bernhard after warning managers to practice economy this year, announced a drive for the coming season to be titled "Warner Theatres Academy Award Drive."

Other Warner circuit leaders present included Joseph Feldman, J. Ellis Shipam, Ed Hinchy, Sam Schwartz, A. J. Vanni, Everett Callow, Bob Mills and Bill Charles.

De Bra Predicts Business Rise, Doubles Doomed

Increase in movie admissions and doom for the double features was predicted by Arthur DeBra, public relations executive of the MPPDA office in New York. Both developments, he said, will result from the operation of the consent decree. Speaking last week in Philadelphia at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel before the Motion Picture Forum, Mr. DeBra declared that since it costs more to sell cans of films in small batches of five than it did to get rid of the entire budget once a year, this might result in increased movie admissions.

Another development of the consent decree, he said, would be elimination of double features, which will mean 300 feature films a year turned out by Hollywood instead of 600. "If there are to be only half as many," he said, "they should be at least twice as good."

Public Given Voice

Mr. DeBra also pointed out that the consent decree would give the public a greater voice in the pictures bought by the theatre manager.

"'One Foot in Heaven' will be a test case," Mr. DeBra thinks. "While not a prestige picture, it is grand entertainment, but because it is about a Methodist minister, some theatres probably will be afraid to book it for fear that it won't draw big houses.

"If they try to tell you that it won't do business in their communities, you—the movie fans—must prove to them they are wrong. Now, more than ever before, groups such as the Motion Picture Forum, whose purpose is to bring to the attention of the public the finer pictures and 'to encourage public support for all fine pictures' must know their pictures."

Mr. DeBra also touched on the Senate hearing on movie propaganda. "This is a curious investigation," he said. "Of course movies could hardly be said to be a secret or hidden. Anybody can go to a picture and decide for himself. I think this investigation will be short and will end as unhappily as it began.

"Since movies are all censored by the Hays Office before they are released, and the fans know this, it does not take them long to come out and say what they think."

The Senate committee investigation was also attacked by the Philadelphia Motion Picture Preview Study Group at its first meeting of the season on September 24th. Under the leadership of Mrs. Arthur Goldsmith, the group unanimously passed a resolution "against the un-American, unethical and un-democratic probe of an industry which at the present time is the last to deserve such a form of inquisition."

The group voted to send a formal protest to the committee in Washington and also discussed plans to send a delegation to Washington to protest in person.

SAILORS ON LEAVE

LINDA: Why do I have anything to do with sailors! My grandmother did—she regretted it. My mother did—she was sorry. I only saw my father twice before he looked down the wrong end of a sixteen inch gun.

GIRL: I just got back from the beauty parlor.

SAILOR: It's too bad you weren't waited on.

CHUCK: That may not mean anything to you two mental midgets—but I like this navy. I like working for Uncle Sam—especially right now.

Return of Ascap Music to the Air Again Put Off

Return of the catalog of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers to the airlanes has been delayed again. ASCAP and network officials now look to October 15th, at least, for the Society's music to return to the major networks. Both NBC and CBS mailed out ASCAP contract forms to their affiliated stations last week. The delay now hinges on the speed with which each station signifies its intention of signing up with ASCAP after studying the forms.

On Monday, NBC announced that WFIL in Philadelphia was the first affiliate of that network to sign with the Society.

Meanwhile, ASCAP and Irving Berlin, Inc., released the score for Walt Disney's forthcoming RKO Radio release, "Dumbo," which was trade shown this week. "Dumbo" is the first instance of a musical score being made available for unrestricted broadcasting since ASCAP music went off the air. It was released for immediate use of all radio stations, networks and orchestras throughout the country. The following songs are included in the score: "When I See an Elephant Fly," "Baby Mine," "Look Out for Mister Stork" and "Song of the Roustabouts."

Released for Football

Last Saturday, ASCAP also cleared the way for the release of its music in connection with football games broadcast by radio stations which do not have contracts permitting the playing of ASCAP music.

In addition to the copies of the proposed network and station blanket contracts with ASCAP, CBS sent to its affiliates a 10-page letter signed by Edward Klauber, executive vice president, which discussed in detail terms of the agreement.

The letter cited the two and three-quarter per cent payment of affiliated stations to CBS for ASCAP music; it reiterated that "Broadcast Music, Inc., should be strongly and adequately supported by the entire industry in order that we may never again find ourselves without an alternate competitive source of music"; and explained the "principle of clearance at the source" which was attained "in a manner that leaves each affiliate free to broadcast ASCAP music in network programs, so long as the network is licensed, and to have a local license and play ASCAP music or to have no license and do without it on local programs."

Mr. Klauber's letter pointed out, "Heretofore, in the licenses which ASCAP has issued to broadcasters, there has never been any warranty on their part as to just what rights they were granting to us." Now, he said, "ASCAP will indemnify broadcasters on any tunes copyrighted by ASCAP members and so designated in the ASCAP index, which is to be brought up to date, and also on any tunes copyrighted by ASCAP members after the date of the agreement.

"For the purposes of the present comparison," the letter said, "we are taking our present BMI payments and our ASCAP payments under the new contract. Adding these sums together our increased cost for BMI and ASCAP on the basis of our 1940 revenue is $237,000.

"On your receipts from Columbia you have heretofore paid ASCAP 5 per cent. Under the new ASCAP deal we are asking you to agree to reimburse us 2.75 per cent of the same payments. You are now paying BMI on the basis of 1.66 per cent of your payments from us. 1.66 per cent plus 2.75 per cent equals 4.41 per cent, which is a reduction of nearly 1.2 per cent from the flat 5 per cent which you paid to ASCAP on your network receipts in 1940."

HERALD PEOPLE

By Staff Photographer

HERBERT FECKE—advertising representative of Motion Picture Herald, including, of course, such related institutions as International Motion Picture Almanac and Fame—has, like QP, long been a figure in the tight and busy world of the motion picture made up by the home offices between Times Square and Columbus Circle. He has been in his present post since 1928.

Mr. Fecke made his motion picture beginnings in Boston with the distribution service of the product of the World Film Corporation in 1917, the era of Ricard Gradwell. Mr. Fecke was then associated with his father, George M. A. Fecke, who continues in motion picture activities in Massachusetts.

Our Mr. Fecke the younger, of The Herald, is the only member of the staff, and the motion picture community, to be so prepared for war as to own a cave in Westchester County. It is a hole in a great rock in his back yard. The arrowheads spaded out of the adjacent garden indicate it has been under fire before. Excellent golfer that he is, Herbert has turned now to rockgardening, which means he will be in the rough from now on.

Screen Cooperates With The Stage

Reciprocating for their cooperation, Jules Levey, head of Mayfair Productions, has acted on the request of Olsen and Johnson that the film version of "Hellzapoppin," which Universal is releasing, be withheld for a few more weeks in order not to conflict with two stage companies now on the road.

Originally scheduled for release October 10th, "Hellzapoppin" will now not open anywhere until the first week in November.

Sees No Monopoly In Broadcasting

Luther Hill, vice-president of the Iowa Broadcasting Co., affiliated with the Des Moines Register-Tribune, last week told the Federal Communications Commission that radio advertising, if handled intelligently, was as valuable to a newspaper as it was to any other product or commodity on the open market.

Mr. Hill under questioning by FCC counsel, said that newspapers and broadcasting companies in Iowa had an advertising trade agreement for promotion of the publications and the stations. Asked if his station was in competition in Des Moines, Mr. Hill said that WHO was so far superior as a station that "you could hardly call it competition."

The FCC counsel continued the introduction into the record of the various letters to and from individuals interested in the Des Moines Register Corp. Mr. Hill denied that the station owned and operated by the Register-Tribune had any advantage over others. He said that the determination of policy followed by the station was ultimately made by the stockholders of the corporation.

CIO Member Brings Charges

Allan S. Haywood, director of organization for the CIO, on Thursday, September 25th, charged before the FCC that radio broadcasting facilities have repeatedly been denied union affiliates "on the flimsy ground that the programs were controversial."

Representing labor in the FCC's investigation into newspaper ownership of radio stations, Mr. Haywood charged that the "same monopoly control" was being built up in radio as in newspapers. He urged the commission to "use its powers to act to protect freedom of speech on the air as it affects labor" and expressed the hope that the commission would make a further investigation into the whole question of anti-labor discriminations by all radio stations.

New Investigation Planned

The Federal Communications Commission will open hearings October 6th on the multiple ownership of broadcasting stations, with a number of operators of two or more stations scheduled to be heard.

These interests, it was indicated, will challenge the commission's jurisdiction to take any action on the question, and it is expected that the hearings will extend considerably longer than the one day which FCC Chairman James L. Fly this week estimated would be required.

Notices of intention to appear have been filed by the Oregon Publishing Company (Stations KGW and KEX); Buffalo Broadcasting Corporation; Westinghouse Radio Stations, Inc. (WOWO and WGL); Johnson Kennedy Radio Corporation (WIND); WJJD, Inc. (WJJD); Louis Wasmer, Inc. (KHQ and KGA); Reading Broadcasting Company (WRAW) and Berks Broadcasting Company (WEEU); Delaware Broadcasting Company (WILM) and WDEL, Inc. (WDEL); Gene T. Dyer; Pittsburgh Radio Supply House (WJAS) and KQV Broadcasting Company (KQV); West Virginia Broadcasting Corporation (WWVA) and Monongahela Valley Broadcasting Company (WMMN); National Broadcasting Company; Massachusetts Broadcasting Corporation (WCOP) and Broadcasting Service Organization, Inc. (WORL); International Broadcasting Corporation (KWKH) and Tri-State Broadcasting System, Inc. (KTBS); Fisher's Blend Station, Inc. (KOMO and KJR), and Evansville on the Air, Inc. (WGBF and WEOA).

PLEADS FOR MORE SHOWMANSHIP

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

This is the first time in 13 years of theatre work I am addressing a trade paper representative.

May I offer my unimportant but sincere appreciation for your editorial, "Publicity," in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD issue of August 30th.

Despite the fact that in my humble opinion your article was a masterpiece of constructive criticism, I fear that far too many theatre men will say, "He's a crackpot, he's crazy, we've been using that stage wedding gag for years and we always get loads of publicity with it."

For years I have condoned the right to fight back with my employers whenever I felt they were wrong. I have frequently been referred to as a crackpot, radical, bolshevik and anti-everything, simply because I cannot agree with numerous ideas which have permeated our industry and have become generally accepted as the right ideas.

It is therefore heartening when occasionally someone like yourself will take a stand on one of the smaller issues.

How about priming your pen and aiming it at some of the bigger causes of declining box-office receipts? Offhand, I might be able to offer a half-dozen suggestions for your editorial headings that may have some bearing.

The first editorial would be a sockeroo, titled, "If your theatre is not getting good grosses, why not try a change of policy?" (Policy would refer to number of changes and change dates, prices, stimulants, etc.)

Of course, a lot of theatre men would disagree on this, too; because home office routine could never permit an individual policy for an individual theatre, even if it did help the gross. Then again the policy that's in right now was okay two years ago and grosses are now down because business is bad in general and when business picks up again the policy will be right again. So why change it now?

Cordially yours,
C. W. FRIEDMAN, Fortway Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

TO THE EDITOR:

I have just finished (4:30 a.m.) reading MOTION PICTURE HERALD of September 20. There are many times after reading the weekly issue I feel I must write you, but because of duties, neglect it. This time, I felt, in spite of the hour I must go to my desk and write.

I have read much, and varied articles on the Clark-Wheeler Senate Investigations but, up until today, could not say Bravo! Your editorial is as fine a presentation from all angles as I could ever have asked for. Thank you.

Your report on Allied Convention, the Coast Independents, and articles of September 13th issue also are splendid.

Today, at 10:30 A.M. our Group convenes for its first fall session, at which time I expect our Group to act upon a resolution of protest to the Clark-Wheeler Senate Probe. I shall use MOTION PICTURE HERALD for all the data I need in our meeting today. May I again thank you for as fine a publication one could read which keeps a poor non-industry(-ite) right in the middle of the road so that she can present the facts to a group who are doing all in its power to further a splendid medium—the motion picture.

Weitman Urges 'Insuremanship'

Robert Weitman, managing director of the Paramount theatre in New York and guest of honor at the first luncheon of the season of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Edison, New York, last week, told members and guests it was the job of the showman to sell his audiences on the show before they reach the theatre.

"Barnum realized the value of advance buildup," Mr. Weitman said. "The circus parade through the town prepared the audiences for the big show to come. Really, it's a kind of 'pre-conditioning.' In this business, however, we call it 'insuremanship' instead of 'pre-conditioning.'

"Some showmen take the attitude," Mr. Weitman continued, "that if a show is bad nothing will help, and that if a show is good it doesn't need any help. This condition exists in our industry while every other business is constantly borrowing leaves from the showman's book and using it to advantage."

When pictures out of the usual run come along, he said, theatre men ask "How are we going to sell this one?" Actually, Mr. Weitman aserted, "there is nothing new in show business" and there are means by which unusual pictures can be sold.

"At the Paramount," he said, "we treat the patron as a customer from the time he steps under the marquee. The true traditions of showmanship call for making the theatre a community institution."

Mr. Weitman paid tribute to his staff at the Paramount, mentioning Harry Kalcheim, stage show booker; Bob Shapiro, assistant manager, and Ben Greifer, now manager of the Paramount in Newark, N. J.

Vincent Trotta, Ampa president, opened the meeting, later turning the gavel over to Ed Sullivan, New York Daily News columnist, who was the master of ceremonies. Other guests included Olsen & Johnson and Vivian Dela Chiesa.

The deal, one of the biggest series of changes of its kind in this territory, is reported to involve well over $500,000. Mr Barrist is well known in national exhibitor circles, being active in Eastern Pennsylvania Allied.

Percy Taylor with UA

Percy Taylor, formerly general manager of RKO Distributing Corp. of Canada, who retired from active business several years ago, has become United Artists branch manager in Salt Lake City.

LET GEORGE DO IT!: George Formby—See review on "Gold Rush Maisie," MGM.—N. W. Mason, Roseland Theatre, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. Industrial and mining town patronage.

Columbia

ADAM HAD FOUR SONS: Ingrid Bergman, Warner Baxter, Susan Hayward—Excellent. Perfect cast. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

ELLERY QUEEN, MASTER DETECTIVE: Ralph Bellamy, Margaret Lindsay—Not bad. Rather weak in spots. Should hold its own with a few shorts. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 10-11. —Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

NORTH FROM THE LONE STAR: Bill Elliott—A fair western. Played on dual bill on week-end to fair business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

ONLY ANGELS HAVE WINGS: Cary Grant, Jean Arthur, Rita Hayworth—A very fine picture. We played second run at the Park Theatre. Business fair.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PENNY SERENADE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—Worth your best days and extra advertising. Don't miss this picture. Good comedy relief throughout picture. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 14-16.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

THERE'S THAT WOMAN AGAIN: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce, Margaret Lindsay—Played second run with "Only Angels Have Wings" to fair business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TWO IN A TAXI: Anita Louise, Russell Hayden—A fair program picture that will get by on a dual bill.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Wayne Morris, Jane Wyman—Not as good as its predecessors; neither is the business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

HIGHWAY WEST: Arthur Kennedy, Brenda Marshall, Olympe Bradna—Good program picture and fair business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 16.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert—Another natural for me. A picture that will satisfy, even the most discriminating of audiences, but has the action for a lower type of audience. Did very well, and would have done better, if it hadn't been milked in prior runs. Warner Bros. is my favorite major producer; they know how to combine excellence in production with real red blood action. Played August 21-23.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy, Ian Hunter—Beautiful photography, good acting and fast moving action that combined to make good entertainment. Taylor, though miscast, did well. Attendance suffered because picture has been made too many times. Running time. 95 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Lumber town patronage.

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy, Ian Hunter—We did quite well with this feature and our folks liked it. Some thought Taylor not too well suited to the part. Color was excellent and action good. Most of our patrons go for pictures like this. Played August 24-26.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—A very good picture for the ladies, but it has a questionable draw because of the sad episodes and ending. The color was very good, acting flawless and the story moves along at a good clip. Not worth what Metro charged us for it because of reasons mentioned above. Go easy on this one. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 14-16.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—It's a great show. Should get the "Oscar." Lives up to Metro's trailer, "It is aimed at your heart, and it does the job." Some came twice to sob it out. Running time, 100 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—Superlative acting by Greer Garson. Unfortunately, it is a picture that will appeal only to very high class patronage. It is a human, beautiful story of the children born out of wedlock, and a woman's fight for them. For us, it was on the wrong run (Friday and Saturday). It is a Sunday-Monday picture, for the small towns, for those are the days that our clientele will support a picture such as this, better than the week-end patrons.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—Drew about on a par with the others of this series. As good as any and worth a date, but not for top playing time. Run it, if Metro puts a fair allocation. Played September 12-13.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Slim Summerville, Virginia Weidler—Dualled this with George Formby in "Let George Do It!" with result that everybody left the theatre saying it was the best money's worth in months. Those wisecracks of Maisie's get wide circulation. Formby also big draw. Excellent business on poor date. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 4-6.—N. W. Mason, Roseland Theatre, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Can. Industrial and mining town patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—The best picture of a long time. Played to biggest crowd of months. What the industry needs is more of this type of picture. Running time, 107 minutes. Played September 14-15.—Woodrow Proffer, Star Theatre, Ft. Branch, Ind. Small town patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—This is one picture that everyone's comments were "that was a good picture." The school saw it and every child liked it. I hope Metro will make another of the sequel. Business good. Running time. 106 minutes. Played September 17-18.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

PENALTY, THE: Edward Arnold, Lionel Barrymore, Marsha Hunt—Good program picture with surprising results. Approved by majority here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 3-4.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

PEOPLE VS. DR. KILDARE, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Lew Ayres, Laraine Day—Personally thought this not so good as others of this series, but most of the customers liked it and it did average business. Played Augut 29-30.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, James Stewart—A fine picture, drew a different class audience, and pleased very much, but the box-office was not good. Hepburn has a doubtful rep with my patrons, and it will take several pictures as good as this one to make her anything but a liability as far as draw is concerned. Played July 29-30.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, James Stewart—Very good comedy with greatest glory going to dialogue and production. Would have been just as good without Hepburn and Grant. Very few complaints and average business. Running time, 111 minutes. Played July 30-August 2.—N. W. Mason, Roseland Theatre, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Can. Industrial and mining town patronage.

RAGE IN HEAVEN: Robert Montgomery, Ingrid Bergman, George Sanders—Played this with fingers crossed, remembering chilled reception of "Night Must Fall," and did excellent business. Montgomery's stock away up now that he is doing his bit in the war. But don't think very many of these psychopathic things will go over. Running time, 84 minutes.—Played September 15-17.—N. W. Mason, Roseland Theatre, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Can. Industrial and mining town patronage.

RAGE IN HEAVEN: Robert Montgomery, Ingrid Bergman, George Sanders—No rage at box office. Good acting by Montgomery to empty seats. Another good reason for the down trend in pic. business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 3-4.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Lumber town patronage.

RAGE IN HEAVEN: Robert Montgomery, Ingrid Bergman, George Sanders—A good program picture. Robert Montgomery's acting was better than usual. George Sanders really should be given a good break. Ingrid Bergman is really good. Business good. Played September 8-9.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

RINGSIDE MAISIE: Ann Sothern, George Murphy —Maisie always gets her customers. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

WASHINGTON MELODRAMA: Frank Morgan, Ann Rutherford, Kent Taylor—I haven't figured out yet why this picture drew so many unless it was Frank Morgan. He's good boxoffice here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Woodrow Proffer, Star Theatre, Fort Branch, Ind. Small town patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE, A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas, Conrad Veidt—A tortuous, nerve-wracking form of punishment apparently designed to turn movie patrons away from the movies. No entertainment value by a washed up star. The sound was poor due greatly to the thick foreign accents of some of the characters. Running time, 105 minutes. Played September 14-15.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Lumber town patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas—This is a superbly done picture with an interesting plot and plenty of excitement in the last half. A fair-sized audience thought it was great. The only difficulty is the use of multiple accents by each person in the cast. Some of it was quite hard to understand. It should bring back some of Joan's previous popularity. Ran it with "Dance Hall" which made a pretty good program. Running time, 106 minutes. Played September 17-18.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL, THE: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—Very good dramatic story, but is a bit too long. Lana Turner did well with a tough part. These gorgeous musical settings don't impress the public any more. They like the musical comedies better. Would have been a hit picture a few years ago. Played September 1-2. —S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

Monogram

BOWERY BLITZKRIEG: East Side Kids—Turned in the biggest Sunday in months for me. Perfect for a small town, or a neighborhood house. Don't fail to play this, and build it up; it will go to town for you. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 21-24.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

DEADLY GAME, THE: Charles Farrell, June Lang—A fairly good little spy picture, good for the go-cart trade. Farrell has no following now, so concentrate on the spy angle. Play a good strong picture with it, and you'll be all right, and it shouldn't be so expensive for you. Played September 21-24. —Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

Paramount

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall—Outstanding color, beautiful scenery, nice "hula" girls, bad dialogue. Very good show and everybody liked it. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 14-15.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

BORDER VIGILANTES: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—A "Hopalong Cassidy." See review on "The Invisible Woman," Universal.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapleau, Ontario, Can. Railroaders' patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—One of the best comedies of the year. Was enjoyed by all. Box office was above average. Did me good to hear my patrons say "let's have one like that every week." Played September 10-11.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

CHEROKEE STRIP: Richard Dix, Florence Rice, Andy Clyde—Very late in running this western, but they're never old and our patrons like it very much. Had one of our best week-ends in a long time. Worth a date but not on preferred time.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FORCED LANDING: Richard Arlen, Eva Gabor —This for a so-called aeroplane picture is a cluck of the first magnitude. It is 99 per cent stupid dialogue, little action and a short sequence of flying. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FORCED LANDING: Richard Arlen—Here is a real palooka. Not one good thing about it. The direction was poor and the acting miserable. Sure was a let-down from "Power Dive." We want no more like this. Played September 12-13.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—Our patrons thought this picture about as good as any we have shown for a long, long time. Maybe it was the dirt that got them, but there was plenty of comedy and the title hurt the draw some. We had tough competition that hurt our gross considerably, but the patrons who did show up were more than satisfied.—Mayme P. Musselma Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—Enjoyable picture that did average business. Fred MacMurray never disappoints and I thought Madeleine Carroll was better than I had ever seen her before. Most of our folks miss a good deal of this double talk. Good picture. Played September 7-8.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ROAD TO ZANZIBAR, THE: Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Good picture. Excellent draw. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 3-4. —Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

ROUND-UP, THE: Richard Dix, Patricia Morison, Preston Foster—Very good. A little different than the ordinary western. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—All I can say for this one is that Paramount, in setting it up for a high percentage. thought more of it than the public did. Too many walkouts, and if that does not tell the story of what they thought of it, it is useless for me to pan it an more.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—Here was the surprise of our lives. Everybody liked it. We did not have a single complaint. It's really a swell picture. Saw it four times myself and liked it every time. Pulled people from south of the Snake that we haven't seen since we ran "Jesse James." Held up well for a three-day run and gave us the best receipts of any picture since "Northwest Passage" a year and half ago. Played September 14-16.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

To the Editor of the Herald:

I recently took over the Vacaville Theater in Vacaville, California, the exact date being September 14, 1941. I was somewhat surprised not to say amazed that I found no recent issues of the Motion Picture Herald on hand, the last edition carrying the date of June 14, 1941. This is quite a mystery. Did the former owner allow his subscription to lapse? (Unbelievable!) More logical is the answer that he probably took the recent issues with him.

Anyway, you know as well as I that you can't very well run a theatre without your most splendid magazine. Please enter my subscription at once starting with the issue of August 30.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—This film should certainly bring renewed demand for the book, because the way it leaps from incident to incident leaves an awful lot to the imagination. Theme, as played, rather stupid. Inspired performance by Betty Field; interesting every minute she's on the screen. John Wayne and Harry Carey certainly prove that cowboys grow up to be darn good actors. Even my old gangster friend, Marc Lawrence, did well. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 18-20.—N. W. Mason, Roseland Theatre, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Can. Industrial and mining town patronage.

THIS WAY PLEASE (REISSUE): Fibber McGee and Molly—Pleased most of our patrons. A good musical. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 19-20.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

VICTORY: Fredric March, Betty Field—Very unusual production that pleased everyone. Running time, 79 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

WEST POINT WIDOW: Anne Shirley, Richard Carlson—Weak picture and weak cast. Good only for double bill. They tried hard but there wasn't much to it. Played September 5-6.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

Republic

COUNTRY FAIR: Eddie Foy, Jr., June Clyde—Very good. Lulubelle and Scotty drew, but they didn't sing enough. People like to hear them sing, and why not give it to them? Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Glenn Martin, Badger Theatre, Badger, Minn. Rural patronage.

COUNTRY FAIR: Eddie Foy, Jr., June Clyde—Just another picture, but strong box-office for me, easily adaptable to a flashy style of exploitation. Made more money on it than on any major picture, to date. Played August 14-16.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Very good picture of its kind. Pleased everyone. Good business.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, THE: Bob Steele—This picture has a few boners, but otherwise seemed to please everyone. Running time, 67 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

PITTSBURGH KID, THE: Billy Conn—Fair picture and good business. Billy Conn no shakes as an actor, but okay when he gets in the ring. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 21-22.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RIDIN' ON A RAINBOW: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—We don't do the land-office business on Autry that some claim, but do some extra, and they seem to like him better with each picture. The direction is improving and the pictures show results from an upped budget, and if they show a profit, that's about all we can ask out here where they wonder "What War?"—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Colonna—Republic did all right on this, although some of the old-timers were disappointed, as there is little resemblance to the old Rose Melville stage hit. But everything was right about it, and I did all right with it. Canova has a future. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 18-20. —Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

UNDER FIESTA STARS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Good picture and good business. Runnin time, 64 minutes. Played September 19-20.—E. M Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WHO KILLED AUNT MAGGIE?: John Hubbard, Wendy Barrie, Edgar Kennedy—Very entertaining little picture that seemed to please everyone. Running time, 68 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

YOUNG BILL HICKOK: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes—Good, but for some reason Rogers is not as popular here as he should be. His westerns are all good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ALMOST A GENTLEMAN: Ace, the Dog, James Ellison, Helen Wood—Get in touch with your dog lovers. It will do extra business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CYCLONE ON HORSEBACK: Tim Holt—About on a par with other westerns that we play, not tops, but seems to satisfy and the kids like Tim. This series of westerns have a pretty good cast and direction and don't look so amateurish as some. Worth a date on your week-end double bill or bargain night. Played September 12-13.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DEVIL AND MISS JONES, THE: Jean Arthur, Robert Cummings, Charles Coburn—We did fair business on this top allocation, but not enough to warrant the allocation RKO placed on this picture. It is just a good program picture that will satisfy almost any audience and could be made to stand up on Sunday, if you just had to have a picture.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

IRENE: Anna Neagle, Ray Milland, Roland Young —No draw in this picture. Main lack is not having any names worth drawing. Story good. Running time, 101 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

JUNGLE CAVALCADE: Frank Buck—A good percentage of our patrons still remembered this combined jungle picture. Not much enthusiasm shown by those who attended. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 21-22.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

LEGION OF THE LAWLESS: George O'Brien, Virginia Vale—Business fair for week-end trade. Played as a double bill. Seemed to satisfy. Played September 12-13.—Miss Clea Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

LI'L ABNER: Granville Owen, Martha O'Driscoll, Buster Keaton—Just another program picture which attracted the children. Played as a double bill with "Legion of the Lawless." Box office fair. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

MELODY FOR THREE: Jean Hersholt, Fay Wray —This was our first "Dr. Christian" and we ran it with "Cherokee Strip" to extra business. Don't know where to put the credit for the increase, but was sure happy to get it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUNNY: Anna Neagle, John Carroll, Ray Bolger—Good picture. Miss Neagle fine, but my patrons don't come to see her in large numbers.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

WAGON TRAIN: Tim Holt, Ray Whitley—A very good western that pleased the week-end trade. Played as a double-bill with "San Francisco Docks." Business just fair. Running time, 59 minutes. Played September 19-20.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

YOU'LL FIND OUT: Kay Kyser, Peter Lorre, Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Just a program picture that really was a day lost. Why do we have to play pictures like this? Everyone wanted to know why Kay Kyser could not stick to his music altogether. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLOOD AND SAND: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Rita Hayworth, Nazimova—This was a good show (of its kind, perfect) but it did not do business. Perfect cast, beautiful color.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHAM YOUNG: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnel,

Dean Jagger, Mary Astor—This picture certainly surprised me. Drew business as well as "Grapes of Wrath."—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

CHAD HANNA: Henry Fonda, Linda Darnell, Dorothy Lamour—Good picture, good business. Was a little bit sorry that it didn't have more circus action. Running time, 88 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny, Kay Francis—Our patrons got a big kick out of this comedy and some complained that they missed a lot of laughs because others made too much noise. Drew very well the first night but fell off quite badly the next two and I can't explain it because we never heard a word against the picture. Buy it right, give it your best time, and you'll be satisfied. Played September 7-9. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DANCE HALL: Cesar Romero, Carole Landis—Quite a few people saw this although they came to see "A Woman's Face" which played with it. It is quite good for a low allocation picture. Some good surprises and comedy moments made it easy to sit through, although I do not suppose anyone would have missed it if I had not played it. It is mostly concerned with a girl and fellow in friendly feuding and the tricks they play on each other. I can put away the red ink now as college opens next week. However, I'll keep it close by me as it may be necessary anyway. Such a business! Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 17-18.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HIGH SCHOOL: Jane Withers, Joe Brown, Jr.—An excellent Withers picture. Our customers enjoyed this one very well.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Okalahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Gable, Robert Cummings—Our patrons liked this musical comedy and praised it highly. The specialty acts, the songs and ensembles, together with the very good color, pleased them, and in a big way. Did not do exceptional business, but was better than average. Picture is worth a date on your best days and can be bought right.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Gable, Robert Cummings—Not bad. Business fair. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 7-8.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES, THE: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—A good week-end feature. Running time, 87 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

TALL, DARK AND HANDSOME: Cesar Romero, Virginia Gilmore, Charlotte Greenwood, Milton Berle —Very good picture. Was enjoyed by all. Should be doubled with a western or something with drawing power. Running time, 78 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Gene Tierney, Charley Grapewin, Marjorie Rambeau—Received many complaints, but did big business. The picture seemed quite interesting to me. I would suggest that this type picture be doubled with something that is sure to please.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP: Martha Scott, William Gargan—Nice business in spite of walk-outs. Drew with middle-aged people who seldom darken a theatre door. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 15-17.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapleau, Ontario, Can. Railroaders patronage.

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Paulette Goddard, Jack Oakie—This show is very poor for rural trade and do not recommend it. Did fair business, but dissatisfied customers. Running time, 129 minutes. Played September 1-3.—Glenn Martin, Badger Theatre, Badger, Minn. Rural patronage.

HOUSE ACROSS THE BAY, THE: George Raft, Joan Bennett, Lloyd Nolan—A good feature for its type. Should be run on week-end, which I did.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

INTERMEZZO, A LOVE STORY: Leslie Howard, Ingrid Bergman, Edna Best—Since the popularizing of the song, this picture did well on a second-run. —Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

POT O' GOLD: James Stewart, Paulette Goddard, Horace Heidt—Opened the Park with a band on "Pot O' Gold." Fair business for second run.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THAT UNCERTAIN FEELING: Merle Oberon, Melvyn Douglas, Burgess Meredith—A terriffic box-office flop like so many of the sophisticated comedies, in this situation. Three days did not take in what some pictures do on the opening night. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 7-10.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapleau, Ontario, Can. Railroaders patronage.

WINTER CARNIVAL: Ann Sheridan, Richard Carlson—Just fair. Almost not as much as being called fair. Running time, 90 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

BACK STREET: Margaret Sullavan, Charles Boyer, Richard Carlson—A fair feature. Not so good as I had believed. Running time, 87 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

BACK STREET: Margaret Sullavan, Charles Boyer, Richard Carlson—Brought the woman in, in droves, and pleased everyone. Not a good man's picture, and that is the type of house I have. I am glad I played it, however, purely as a prestige picture. Played August 7-9.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

BOSS OF BULLION CITY: Johnny Mack Brown —A good western. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 59 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

FLAME OF NEW ORLEANS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Roland Young, Bruce Cabot—Played on Sunday-Monday to an indifferent small crowd. Dietrich doesn't draw here. Should have had it on Bargain Nite. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 7-8.—Woodrow Proffer, Star Theatre, Ft. Branch, Ind. Small town patronge.

HIRED WIFE: Rosalind Russell, Brian Aherne, Virginia Bruce—Excellent for people who like higher type of entertainment. Running time, 96 minutes. Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

INVISIBLE WOMAN, THE: John Barrymore, Virginia Bruce, John Howard—No draw. Liked by those who saw it. Doubled-billed with a "Hopalong Cassidy," "Border Vigilantes," Paramount. Westerns no good here. Played September 11-13.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapleau, Ontario, Can. Railroaders patronage.

LADY FROM CHEYENNE: Loretta Young, Robert Preston, Gladys George—Just what our customers had been waiting for. Should have played on Sunday-Monday. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 9-10.—Woodrow Proffer, Star Theatre, Ft. Branch, Ind. Small town patronage.

MARCIE: Tom Brown, Nan Grey, Mischa Auer—This picture had a good start, but didn't get anywhere. Would never have booked it if I had previewed it. Running time, 59 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN THE TROPICS: Abbott and Costello, Allan Jones, Nancy Kelly—Double-billed with "Men Against the Sky," RKO, but I had already played "Buck Privates," and Abbott and Costello were known. Thanks to this team, we had three days of good business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 4-6.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapleau, Ontario, Can. Railroaders patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN THE TROPICS: Abbott and Costello, Allan Jones, Nancy Kelly—A good little feature for anybody. Running time, 72 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO DOCKS: Burgess Meredith, Irene Hervey—Played as a double bill with "Wagon Train" for the week-end trade. Just a poor program picture that had to be played. Business fair. Played September 19-20.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

TIGHT SHOES: John Howard, Binnie Barnes, Brod Crawford—A real picture for exploitation. Did nice week-end business. Tied up with shoe stores and drug stores.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE VIGILANTES: Franchot Tone, Warren William, Mischa Auer—Very good western with lots of comedy. It seems that last year's Universal product excels '40-'41 product. Running time, 75 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE NOT SO TOUGH: Dead End Kids, Little Tough Guys—Good picture. Pleased everyone. Running time, 72 minutes.—Frank J. Beck's Theatre Circuit, Spokane, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Brothers

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR (REISSUE): James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A little out of date, but still among the best. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

GREAT LIE, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—First-class entertainment for a situation such as mine. The best from this actress. Also, must compliment Mary Astor for a superb performance. Would recommend this one. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 6.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—A very fine picture; excellently acted, but did an out and out brody for me. Can't understand it, as the word of mouth was excellent. Played September

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—Another grand picture from Frank Capra. If you boys have got time, better go to your nearest exchange and "Meet John Doe." You will never be sorry. It has everything a picture needs to put it over. Running time, 123 minutes. Played September 7-9.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck, Edward Arnold, Walter Brennan—Business below expectations. Didn't think this picture so hot for small localities. Cooper's drawing power stretched to offset miscasting. Small town customers do not care to spend money to receive a "message." Played September 7-8.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Lumber town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Priscilla Lane, Jeffrey Lynn, Ronald Reagan, May Robson—Just a picture. No two people had the same reaction. Comments were from good to bad. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 21-22.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

SHOT IN THE DARK: Ricardo Cortez, William Lundigan, Nan Wynn—Very good picture. Rather short, but no dull moments. Running time, 57 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Guy C. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

Shorts

Artkino

RED ARMY: Russian Educational—Very timely right now. Just a fair newsreel, most all the shots have been in American newsreels. But you can exploit it. It will get you money if handled right. Running time, 22 minutes.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

Columbia

TOM THUMB'S BROTHER: Color Rhapsody—An excellent little color cartoon. Kids liked it, and everyone was satisfied. Columbia cartoons haven't been talked of much, but they are all right. Haven't really seen a poor one. Running time, 7 minutes.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patroange.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABDUL THE BULBUL AMEER: Color Cartoons—Just an average cartoon which interested the children.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Thetare, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: Not enough American news and too much war.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: No. 302, Vol. 12—This news is O. K., but why the following comment while showing a negro baptizing? The narrator says, "For them the old time religion is good enough." This statement was very unnecessary. There are a lot of people who think the "old time religion" is good enough!—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: This is the only newsreel they have passed us in the past year worth mentioning.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

QUIZ BIZ: Pete Smith Specialties—Was a very interesting short and my patrons tried to answer the questions before the answer was given.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

THIRD-DIMENSIONAL MURDER: Metroscopix—A real novelty and had them screaming. No exhibitor should pass this up. Can be used on a single feature bill, advertised, and is a real draw.—The glasses are a nuisance, but well worth the trouble. Running time, 7 minutes.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

WILLIE AND THE MOUSE: Passing Parade—Instructive. Running time, 10 minutes.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

WILLIE AND THE MOUSE: Passing Parade—Good short; worth a playdate.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CRADLE OF CHAMPIONS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—A strong unit for any show. Everyone goes for animals, and this is well made, and interesting. These shorts give a touch of variety to a bill. MARCH OF TIME, NO. 1: "Thumbs Up, Texas"—This March of Time was entertaining enough, giving Texas a big boost and will probably rate extended time there. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

IN THE STRETCH

Decisions of the Judging Committee for the Third Quarter of the 1941 Quigley Awards are set down on another page. Now the boys are gathering all of their energies for the "stretch run"—the fourth and last Quarter of the year.

Up to now, the leaders are fairly well bunched. As usual, the final will see a lot of neck-and-neck running. And, as usual, the running should see "stayers" in the rest of the field come up solidly during the Fourth Quarter to demand serious attention in the Grand Awards judging. It's that kind of a show.

Theatremen who want it that way are saying the race is far from over. Which is true. There never was a time in the history of the Awards that the winners finished all by themselves. In all the years of the Competitions, it is seldom that the judges have had an easy time of it.

Nothing unique about that. It just happens that the Awards have attracted a lot of top-line showmen who may differ in mode of attack but hardly in effectiveness. They may say it in different ways. In every case, it spells boxoffice.

A MATTER OF SELLING

It is not too often that the theatreman is singled out for public acclaim. Thus, your Round Table is pleased to applaud the honors bestowed upon Bob Weitman by the A.M.P.A. at the organization's first luncheon meeting of the season. The managing director of the New York Paramount, importantly credited for the theatre's success, came up the "hard way" and what he had to say about showmanship before the gathering rates earnest attention. Said Weitman:

"Barnum realized the value of the advance buildup. The circus parade through the town prepared the audiences for the big show to come. Really, it's a kind of preconditioning. In this business, however, we call it 'insuremanship' instead of preconditioning.

"Some showmen take the attitude that if a show is bad nothing will help, and that if a show is good it doesn't need any help. This condition exists in our industry, while every other business is constantly borrowing leaves from the showman's book and using it to advantage."

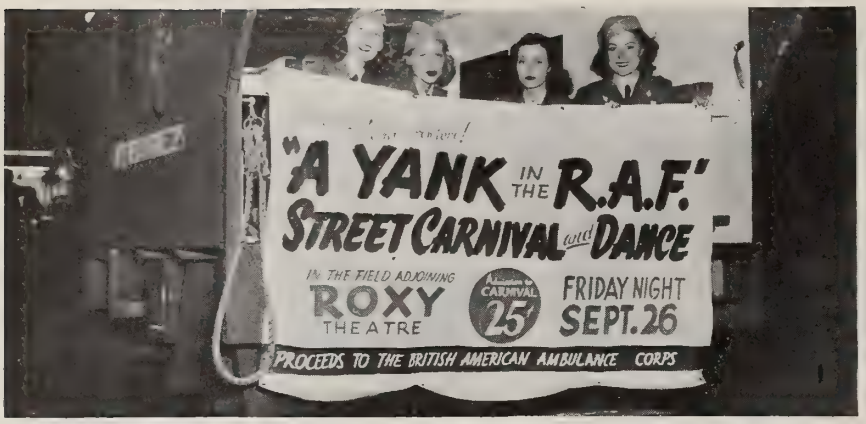
Weitman confirms that a showman, who counts himself one, makes little distinction between pictures easy to sell and those hard to sell. He knows only that each show must be sold, can be sold, and insures his "pitch" by proceeding accordingly.

The Famous Players Canadian Capitol theatre, of Kingston, Ontario, Canada, has just turned 20, in celebration of which an extensive redecoration program was completed. And, as often is usual, the local papers came out with special issues. What was not so usual, however, was the fine publicity shared by Manager Ernie Smithies, at the helm of the theatre all of the years. Seems as though everyone, from the Mayor down, had something to say about the Round Tabler, filling quite a few columns of news and advertising space to say it.

It is a fine thing that a theatreman and his operation become identified in the public mind as one, a position not too easy to reach. Ernie accomplished it by applying himself exclusively to the welfare of his theatre. And that would be as good a reason as any.

MOST EXCELLENT ANSWER

Even after a weekend away from it, the impact of the New York Roxy campaign on "A Yank in the R.A.F." remains slightly terrific. Promoted with a military ball in the theatre, plus an open-air carnival right next to it, the world premiere saw the theatre packed, the surrounding streets thoroughly and delightfully jammed.



The job done by the Hal Horne exploitation forces with Twentieth Century-Fox is a complete answer to those who pine to know what has become of the old-fashioned, kick-in-the-pants showmanship. Viewed from any angle, the entire show was nothing less.

THE largest "gate" in years at the Steuben County Fair, in Bath, N. Y., gave considerable attention to the colorful theatre exhibit arranged, for the fourth successive year, by Manager Hal Lee on behalf of Schine's Babcock. Programs on current shows were distributed and information given on coming attractions. Lee finds reason to endorse the promotion as a valuable boxoffice stimulant.

Round Table In Pictures

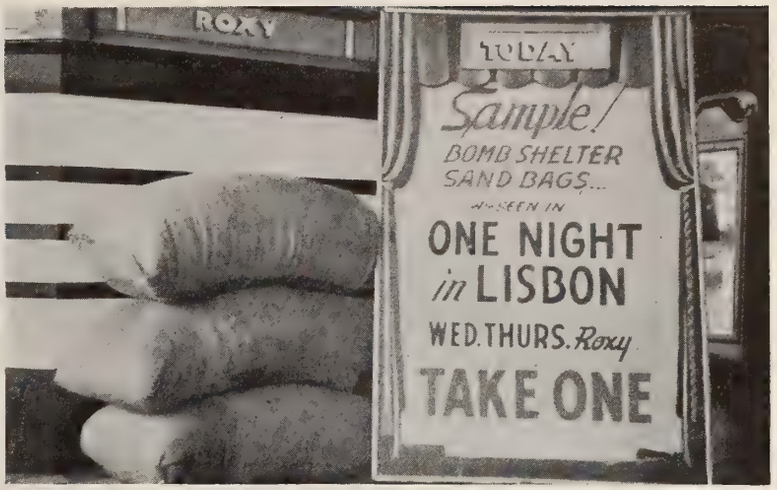
On behalf of the benefit premiere and street carnival which headlined the elaborate promotion for the New York Roxy world premiere of "Yank in the RAF," a street parade sponsored by Mayor LaGuardia was held along Broadway headed by 12 of the British-American ambulance units. Each ambulance carried eight-foot banners, crews of each car including well-known models and local debutantes in RAF uniforms.

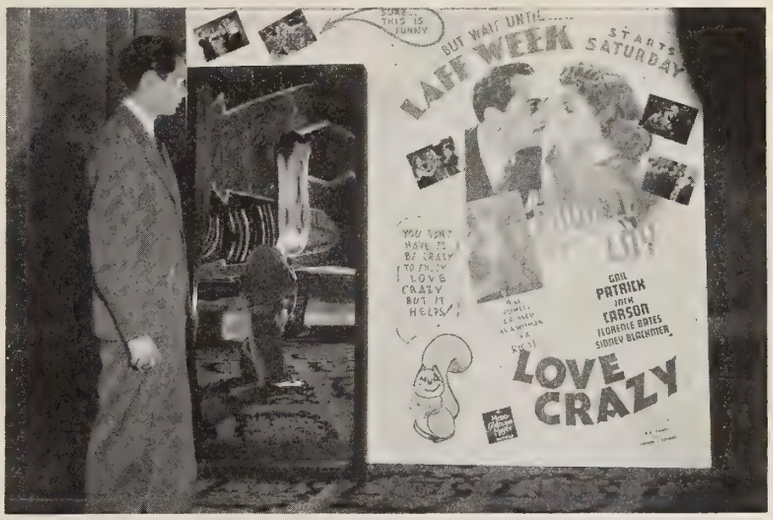
Covering streets of Evansville, Ind., were six of H. W. Reisinger's ushers dressed as ghosts ahead of "Hold That Ghost" at Loew's Theatre. Gag copy on backs of staff read "Big Ghost Convention at," etc. etc. Boys also walked the aisles during showing of trailers.

Contacting local furniture store, City Manager Frank Bickerstaff at the Lyric Palace, Athens, Ga., for "Moon Over Miami" secured beach chairs, umbrellas, etc., for lobby beach scene. Cutouts of Grable and two other girls in bathing attire completed atmospheric display.

Street stunt that proved attractor for George Kallman, RKO manager, in Manilla, P. I., ahead of "Parachute Battalion" at the Avenue Theatre, was dummy hanging from open parachute stretched atop two buildings in downtown area.

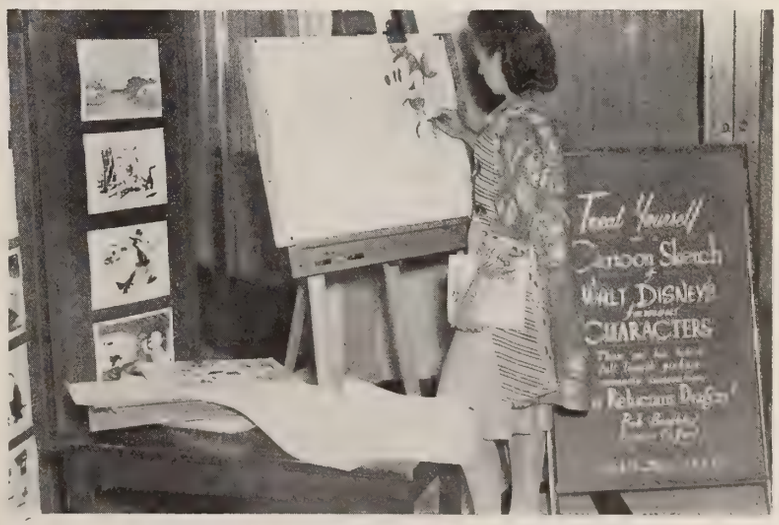
Promoting use of plane which had crashed in nearby Oneonta, N. Y., Herman Addison at Schine's Oneonta planted it atop his marquee ahead of "Dive Bomber." Both sides of plane and wing-spreads carried six-sheets carrying copy on cast, title and playdates.





Figures and chart clipped from the financial page of the Los Angeles Times providing factual evidence of motion picture's leadership in the entertainment field were used by Manager Dave Martin and his assistant, Jack Case, for lobby of the Fox Granada, in Englewood, Cal.

As part of Tommy Read's advance exploitation for date on "Parachute Battalion" at the L. & J. Fox Theatre, in Atlanta, members of the 501st Parachute Battalion, located at Fort Benning, were invited to attend opening night. For edification of his patrons, demonstration of parachute folding was held.



Tickling the risibilities of his patrons seems to be the forte of Dick Mullins at the Roxy Theatre, in St. Petersburg, Fla., as witness photo above. Planting sandbags in front of his boxoffice, Mullins set copy alongside reading: "Sample. Bomb shelter sandbags as seen in 'One Night in Lisbon.' Take One." Filled with 200 pounds of sand they were spotted outside week ahead.

Last assignment in Moline, Ill., before shoving off for the army was a distortion mirror which was planted in the lobby of the LeClaire Theatre by Round Tabler Francis Gillon as advance on his date of "Love Crazy". Directly next to mirror were cutouts of Powell and Loy.

For run of "The Reluctant Dragon" at the Norbury Theatre, in Ellenville, N. Y., a novel cartoon contest was held in the lobby. Cash and U. S. Defense Stamps were offered to those drawing best Disney characters, so judged by leading localites.

THEATREMEN DUPLICATE SUCCESSES IN QUIGLEY AWARDS THIRD QUARTER

Judging Committee's Decisions Give Honors to 73 Entrants; Harold Thomas Voted Third Successive Plaque for 1941

by A-MIKE VOGEL

ALL of the hard, week-to-week digging done by the Awards-conscious theatremen in the last three months is indicated in the results of the Third Quarter judges' findings, detailed on this page, with 75 entrants named for the 74 Awards in the three classifications, Plaques, Medals and Citations. The winners were listed principally in the Fortnight periods of the Quarter. Their combined exploitations over the Quarter entitled them to further consideration.

Among the Plaque winners, Hal Thomas, Kentucky Malco-man scores again and thus becomes the first Round Tabler this year to take down these honors for the third successive Quarter. Ed Fitzpatrick enters the Plaque division for the first time and with his previous wins of Medals in the two previous Quarters becomes another sterling contender for the Grand Awards. Jimmy Redmond is another Plaque first-timer, adding to his previous scores of a Medal and Citation in the first two Quarters.

Leaders Improve Standings

Repeaters are also strongly in evidence in the Medal group, "Bic" Bickerstaff winning to duplicate his First Quarter success and Second Quarter Citation. Carmon Phillips adds another Medal to his score of the Second Quarter and Citation of the First. Morris Rosenthal, a Second Quarter Plaque winner also takes a Medal now to line up with his First Quarter Citation. Chuck Shannon dittoes his Second Quarter Medal plus his First Quarter Citation and Arnold Stoltz increasing his Citation pace over the first two Quarters now moves into the Medal class.

In the Citations are noted some of the boys who have already taken down Plaques and Medals in the preceding Quarters. Since they are in a good position to finish strongly in the last Quarter no doubt these competitors will be girding themselves to go all-out for the finish. To be noted also is that newcomers again make themselves felt in the Citation listings although for the most part the "regulars" predominate. In addition, theatremen in Canada continue to bulk strongly upon the Awards horizon and to be stressed is the participation of independents among the many circuits listed.

The Third Quarter Judges were Oscar A. Doob, Loew's theatre advertising director; David Lipton, Columbia Pictures advertising and publicity director and Leon J. Bamberger, sales promotion manager, RKO Radio Pictures. As has been the procedure in the past, the Committee considering everything else equally, leaned more to those entrants scoring most often in the Fortnight periods.

Fall Flower Show Staged In Foyer and Mezzanine

SPONSORED with the cooperation of leading garden clubs in the city and ten surrounding communities, a Fall Flower Show, staged by Matt Saunders in the commodious foyer and mezzanine of Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, aroused added boxoffice interest among those attracted to the theatre mainly by the colorful display. Planned long in advance with the heads of individual clubs, the exhibition was given further stimulus through local committees in each situation in the selection of entries and judging of the various classes. Members also assisted in the arrangements of the flowers and decoration of the theatre (see cut above). Entries were also had from school children and their teachers.

Judging was held in the morning before the house opened, with winning and honorable awards cards placed alongside the selected entries. Over 100 entries were reported for the cash prizes, donated to charities, others receiving guest tickets to the theatre. The show coincided with the opening of "Belle Starr" and, since Gene Tierney is a Bridgeport girl, Matt landed page one with a two-column shot around an interview with the star's sister at the theatre.

Lightman Distributes Passes Via Parachutes on "Kane"

M. A. Lightman, Jr., of the Malco Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., used a plane to fly over the city and distribute passes as a phase of his campaign or "Citizen Kane." One hundred miniature chutes with passes were dropped from the plane.

A thirty-foot-high figure of Orson Welles was constructed on the main street, directly across from the Peabody Hotel, one of the most traveled streets in Memphis.

Budgets for newspaper advertising and posting were stepped up and the campaign included a big mailing to a select list, and radio time.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Charninsky Host to Pilots At "Power Dive" Date

A special invitation to all R. A. F. pilots in training in Dallas, to attend opening of "Power Dive" at the Capitol Theatre, was extended by Louie Charninsky, who also promoted taxicabs to pick the men up and deliver them to their barracks at end of the show. Photos of the men were taken at the theatre, and good for newspaper breaks which also carried stories.

Whistling Contest Held By Murphy for Skelton

A three-day amateur radio whistling contest was one of the features of the "Whistling in the Dark" campaign put over by Frank Murphy at Loew's State, in Syracuse. Murphy also announced that the first 10 red-headed men accompanied by auburn-haired girls would be admitted free opening day. In addition, an old jalopy bannered with copy reading: "Don't laugh at this—Save all your laughs for," etc., was sent around town.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Old Salt Street Stunt Sells "Barnacle Bill"

An eye-catching street ballyhoo for "Barnacle Bill" was the one used by Arthur Sanford, Majestic, Grand Rapids, Mich. He arranged for a man attired in heavy rain coat, sou'wester, boots and hat, and puffing on a stained old corncob to walk through the streets carrying an eight-foot compo board anchor with copy attached. The stunt drew a great deal of attention, with additional publicity resulting when the "old salt" was interviewed during a street broadcast.

Rosy Takes Over Station Opening

Since WNAB, new Bridgeport radio station opened its services coincident with the date on "New Wine" at the Loew Poli Majestic, Morris Rosenthal seized upon the occasion to arrange a dedicatory program from the stage of the theatre to signalize both events. Featured in the arrangements was the christening in Hollywood of the station's microphone by Ilona Massey and Alan Curtis, on opening night the stars telephoning their congratulations via long distance and giving thanks for the selection of the picture in the inaugural ceremonies. Dedicatory ceremonies on the stage were further elaborated by the presence of Mayor McLevy, who received the call direct, the conversation carried to the audience via loud speaker.

Well in advance, Rosy shipped the microphone to Hollywood for the christening there and on its return two days ahead, placed the mike on display in the lobby with explanatory copy. Photos taken of the Hollywood ceremonies broke on opening day showing the stars doing the honors with a bottle of "new wine." The resulting publicity was furthered by Morris, with bottles of "new wine" to radio and picture editors as gifts of Miss Massey. In all, Rosenthal reports a total of 2,400 lines of free publicity on the unusual tiein. Theatre front was decorated with pennants, flags and burgees, bus cars planted on the broadcast show and menus used in downtown restaurants. Public library and all its branches used still displays with cards stressing the life of Franz Schubert, while musical organizations were contacted by telephone. In addition, several large liquor stores carried cards in their windows announcing the sale of "new wine."

Star's Relative Tied to "Puddin' Head"

Rosenthal also got a break on the program's second feature "Puddin' Head" with the discovery that Judy Canova's cousin, who lives nearby, was at the theatre opening day to see the picture. The visit was immediately turned into added publicity with breaks in both dailies, the cousin being extensively interviewed about the star and giving information about the picture.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"Life With Caroline" Tied to Selectees

Golden Gate Theatre in San Francisco staged promotional stunt for opening of "My Life With Caroline," tying in selective service training program and getting exclusive story breaks for a week in both the Chronicle and Daily News. Every girl in city named Caroline, between ages of 21 and 28, the draft age, was invited to register with the theater for chance at a "round the town" date with the first draftee to volunteer for service on day the picture opened. The draftee, who turned out to be 23 was allowed to pick his choice for a companion from the list of more than 700 girls registered. Pair were treated to dinner dancing at the Palace Hotel, and toured to nightclubs. All other girls registered were invited to a free showing of the film, with an equal number of draftees from the Presidio.

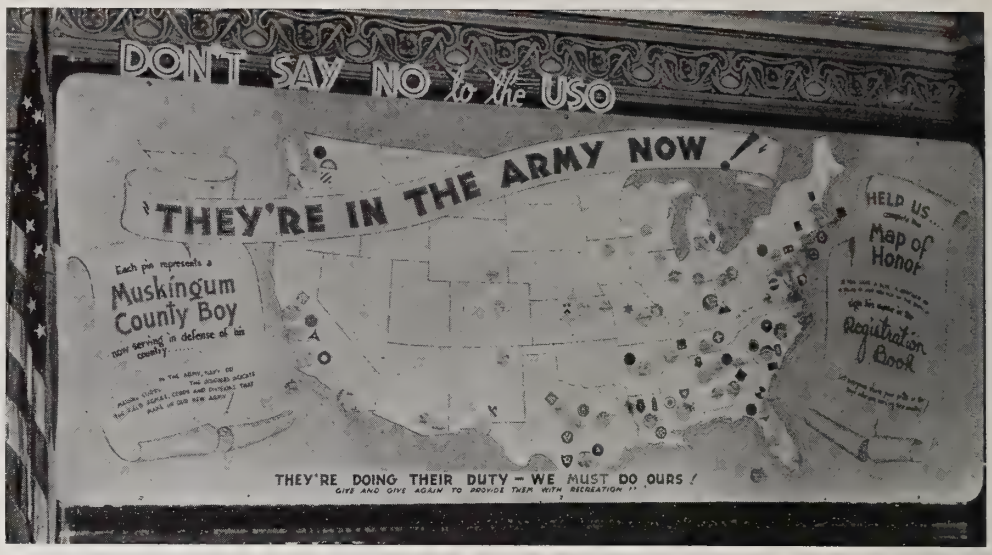
Circuit Campaigns Reported by Delis

Recent activities among the managers of the Constant Theatre Circuit of Ohio and West Virginia and relayed by George A. Delis, district manager, included effective campaigns from the Palace, Canton; Capitol in Bellaire and the Park in Mansfield. In Bellaire, Manager F. J. Langley cracked page one of the Daily Reader in advance of "Caught in the Draft" with a two-column shot of Dorothy Lamour in costume posed with an issue of the paper sent to the studio for the purpose. The theatreman followed this with a lobby setpiece for outstanding coming attractions built around a flasher arrangement, Delis reporting the flasher made up at little expense, since the display was promoted from local radio dealer with necessary changes made by house artist. For permanent advertising, Langley had frames built and installed upon his posting truck and arranged so that copy is changed as needed, since the truck covers the drawing area, and is parked in front of the theatre when not in use. The Bellaire manager also recommends an "added entertainment" board in front of the theatre, wherein is listed the entire shorts program. He is also increasing his Saturday matinee receipts with a kiddie radio hour broadcast from the stage with local merchants paying all costs.

Street Ballys Found Effective

At the Palace, in Canton, Manager R. W. Russell found ready attention for his street bally on "Charley's Aunt" with two boys in comedy women's costumes. Both boys carried small theatre cards on the main streets, in buses, etc. For "Pinocchio," Russell had a giant figure of the character out on the streets and attracted further attention with an elaborate setpiece in the lobby.

Activities at the Park, in Mansfield put over by James Cattell for "Mr. District Attorney" included crime display of guns, blackjacks, etc., dressed up with photos of "wanted" criminals, borrowed from the police department. For "Flame of New Orleans," Cattell planted small "danger, keep away" barrels on street corners with the tops covered with chicken wire. Inside bottom carried picture titles and date lines.



"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Notaro Features Radio Tieins

Radio coverage is sought and gained constantly by Pat Notaro at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., more recently on "Billy the Kid" when the theatreman planted transcription with Station WPIC, which was played day before opening and carried plenty of plugs for the picture. For the personal appearance of Gus Arnheim and his orchestra, Pat arranged a backstage interview which was broadcast over the same station together with the first 15-minutes of the stage show.

Immediately on the booking of the Louis-Conn fight pictures, Pat had it announced over WPIC that he was playing the picture and also promoted a box on the sports page of local daily. Besides ads, there were daily announcements on the sports broadcast, Name the Melody radio program and news broadcast regarding playdate.

THEATRE "SERVICE" MAP

Folks in Zanesville, Ohio, interested in the exact location of army camps in which relatives or friends are assigned, now have a daily check through the giant wall map at Shea's Weller and erected for the purpose by Manager John Woodward. Map is marked by pins showing number of local boys in the camps, the information added to by a registration book in the lobby in which local families with connection in the service are invited to sign names, addresses and army designations. The popularity of the map idea is noted in three-column reproduction and story in the local press.

Fine Gives Rogers Trophy On "Tom, Dick and Harry"

Tying it on the opening of local track, Jesse Fine, publicity director of the Grand Theatre, in Evansville, Ind., for "Tom, Dick & Harry" staged a "Ginger Rogers Claiming Race." In addition to billing in the official program, announcement in overnight entries and newspapers, the special race was announced over track loud-speaker during opening day ceremonies and preceding the race. In addition a gold trophy was presented the winning owner, an autographed photo of Ginger Rogers went to the winning jockey and a telegram from the star herself was read over loud speaker. Sport page of Sunday paper carried three column cut of presentation.

Tieup with leading downtown soda fountains featured a "Ginger Rogers Soda" with window streamers reading: "Every Tom, Dick and Harry will enjoy" etc. Chuckle ad contest for prizes was run in daily and imitation passes reading "This is NOT a FREE TICKET but you will have to ADMIT ONE thing, that" etc. were distributed.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Benny Impersonator Aids Flex on "Charley's Aunt"

Staff usher dressed in costume similar to that worn by Jack Benny in "Charley's Aunt" was used by Jack Flex at Schine's Keith, in Syracuse ahead and during run. Lad covering downtown streets during rush hours carried opened parasol on which were lettered picture title, theatre name and playdates. Contest angle was brought in through tieup with daily which offered guest tickets to those submitting best letters on their experiences with insomnia, the "disease" suffered by Benny in the picture.

On "Hold That Ghost," Flex featured a "Scariest Event" contest in paper, another on a last line limerick slant, and third was based on the number of previous films in which Abbott and Costello had appeared; guest tickets awarded in each instance. Radio coverage included recordings of the Andrews Sisters over WAGE, street quiz program on WSYR and plugs over WOLF.

Effective Lobbies Featured by Busch

Among the recent eye-attractor stunts used in the lobby of the Jeffery Theatre, in Chicago, was Robert Busch's animation on "Go West." Cutout caricature figures of the Marx Brothers seated on a cutout horse, propelled by motor was mounted on easel and guest tickets went to those hitting the three bulls-eyes on the display with darts. For "Road to Zanzibar," Bob planted a caldron in lobby in which were cutout heads of Lamour, Crosby and Hope. Animation here, too, caused heads to move up and down, copy overall read: "Look who's cooking up kettle of laffs."

The picture in the local papers brought more attention.

RCA Intervention Plea Denied

Justice Aron Steuer of the New York supreme court, on Friday, September 26th, denied the application of Jack Freund, an RCA stockholder, to intervene in the projected hearings on the $1,000,000 settlement offer in the consolidated RCA stockholders' suit.

Mr. Freund sought the right to intervene, claiming that the $1,000,000 offered by Westinghouse Electric and General Electric to RCA was insufficient. Six other stockholders have applied for the same privilege.

"Charley's Aunt" Writ Denied

A temporary injunction was denied to Carly Warton and Martin Gabel by Justice Kenneth O'Brien of the New York supreme court last week in the suit which seeks to prevent 20th Century-Fox Films Corp. from exhibiting the motion picture "Charley's Aunt." A trial of the action was ordered on the ground the court would not grant drastic relief to the plaintiffs on the highly debatable question of whether the film employed newly devised stage techniques from the play which the plaintiffs produced on Broadway.

Reorganization Plan Approved

Judge John H. Druffel of the United States district court in Cincinnati has approved the reorganization plan of the Cincinnati Music Hall Association, debtor in bankruptcy proceedings, and the city now will purchase the property for $222,500, which, after payment of costs, fees and other expenses, will enable the trustees to pay bondholders 31.47 cents on the dollar.

CBS Stockholders Sue

A stockholder suit against the Columbia Broadcasting System arising from the sale of its concert and artist management bureaus was revealed in New York supreme court when Justice Peter Schmuck reserved decision on a motion by the network to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it did not give a cause of action. The suit was brought by Calvin E. Fritts, holder of 50 shares of Class B. stock. He alleged the sale price was inadequate.

Court Approves Settlement of Fox Bankruptcy

A proposed settlement for $885,000 of all creditors' claims totalling $55,000,000 against the All-Continent Corporation and the wife and two daughters of William Fox, the former motion picture magnate, was approved last Friday, September 26th, by Referee in Bankruptcy Allen B. Endicott, Jr., in Atlantic City. The bankruptcy litigation has been tangled in the New Jersey Federal courts for the past five years and also played the key role in the recent conspiracy trials in Philadelphia of retired U. S. Circuit Court Judge J. Warren Davis.

The offer, which is $285,000 more than the original compromise suggested several years ago by William Fox and his family, has been approved by the creditors, who had protested against the first offer. However, the final settlement is contingent upon the consent of the U. S. Treasury to compromise its income tax claims and penalties, totalling upward of $5,000,000 for $285,000. Although no formal acceptance from the Government has been entered, it was expected that the offer would be satisfactory with the Treasury officials.

Long Litigation

Litigation over various phases of the bankruptcy has been bitterly fought by both Mr. Fox on one hand and his creditors and the Government on the other. Several of the various suits have been taken to the U. S. Supreme Court of Appeals. It was on one of these suits, then pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals, that the Government based its indictments against Judge Davis. It was charged that Mr. Fox gave $27,500 to Judge Davis and Morgan S. Kaufman, former Federal bankruptcy referee, to influence the Justice. In two sensational trials in Philadelphia, the juries failed to agree on the conspiracy charges, to which Mr. Fox pleaded guilty, and is awaiting sentence.

Mr. Fox's motion picture fortune was estimated at $35,000,000 before the 1929 crash, but in 1936, he filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition in Atlantic City, claiming liabilities of $9,935,261, and assets of $100 in cash and some papers of doubtful value.

Then the U. S. District Court was swamped with claims of creditors totalling over $55,000,000. Meanwhile, in 1932, Mr. Fox had created the All-Continent Corporation and 28 subsidiaries with $7,000,000 of his assets and turned over the concern to his wife and their two daughters. Creditors with claims of $13,000,000 charged Mr. Fox created the All-Continent Corporation for the purpose of defrauding creditors, Mr. Fox denied it.

Dumbo

(Disney-RKO, 1941-42)

Disney Does It Again

Is "Dumbo" better than "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"?

Will it be as successful?

The answer to the first question, in the opinion of this correspondent, is definitely yes.

The answer to the second is that it should be a very successful film, if the enthusiastic reception accorded it by the New York preview audience of reviewers and exhibitors is any criterion.

Only in novelty does "Dumbo" yield to "Snow White, which was the first feature cartoon. "Dumbo" has everything else for all audiences, everywhere. It has charming music, a delightful story, rich color, the circus atmosphere, tenderness and real humor, plus "the Disney touch" in many characters and scenes.

This most recent film in the line of Disney feature productions which includes "Snow White," "Pinocchio," "The Reluctant Dragon" and "Fantasia" seems to come just about as close as possible to ideal entertainment with universal appeal. Exhibitors may discover that some patrons will find the one-hour length all too short and wish to sit through two performances. It may also be that a few months hence people will not ask "Have you seen 'Dumbo?'" but how many times have you seen 'Dumbo'?"

"Dumbo" is a baby elephant born with extremely large ears that make him awkward, cause his disgrace when he disrupts a performance, and result in his mother's confinement as a mad elephant after she comes to his defense. But the same large ears bring great acclaim to Dumbo after he learns that he can fly.

The principal character, beside Dumbo, who does not speak, is a little mouse who has a part similar to that of Jimminy Cricket in "Pinocchio." The mouse tries to cheer Dumbo up. After a visit to Dumbo's mother the two drink some water into which had fallen an open champagne bottle. Then Dumbo and the mouse see pink elephants of all kinds and shapes in a very entertaining sequence. When they wake up they find themselves up a tree. Some Black Crows sing and taunt the elephant, but help him fly after they hear his story. Dumbo makes a spectacular debut as a flying elephant at the circus and the picture ends with Dumbo flying out of the sky to join his mother on a special, streamlined car attached to the circus train.

Previewed at the New York trade show at the Broadway theatre, and attended by a few hundred exhibitors and reviewers. Some of the exhibitors had brought along their small children, who seemed to approve of the film as much as the grown-ups did. Applause broke out several times during the screening and was intense at the conclusion. When the house lights went up everyone seemed to be smiling and pleased with the entertainment.—MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.

Release date, Oct. 31, 1941. Running time, 64 minutes. P. C. A. No. 6809. General audience classification.

Based on the book by Helen Aberson and Harold Pearl. Special sound effects by Sonovox. Supervising director, Ben Sharpsteen. Story direction, Otto Englander. Music, Oliver Wallace and Frank Churchill. Lyrics, Ned Washington.

One Foot in Heaven

Grass Roots and Nostalgia

Here is warm, appealing, human drama woven of the stuff that will carry city audiences back to the grass roots of rural America and give solid, small town citizens a nostalgic excursion to a slower paced way of life when the America that lies between the mountains was untroubled by the strains of modern life. It is a story of a small town preacher whose simple wisdom and straightforward way of life is proved adaptable, by only slight compromise, even to latter day humanism.

Chief among its assets are remarkable chores of acting performed by Fredric March as the Methodist preacher and by Martha Scott as his wife who takes her text from the Book of Ruth when she braves parental opposition to marry him and lives that text as she follows him, with their children, through tribulations and triumph. Minor characterizations of church and parsonage committee heads and members, of townsfolks, and of pillars of the church are uniformly excellent as portrayed by a long list of known names including Beulah Bondi, Gene Lockhart, Harry Davenport, Laura Hope Crews, Grant Mitchell, Hobart Bosworth, Roscoe Ates, Moroni Olsen and others.

The direction of the film's appeal is well indicated by its origin, a best selling semi-biography by Hartzell Spence; by the fact that the Rev. Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church of New York was technical adviser, and by a main title endorsement by a committee of Protestant ministers.

The picture is concerned exclusively with an interpretation of Christianity as practiced and preached by the central figure and with his application of it to all the problems of his life from a leaky parsonage roof to donations for a $25,000 carillon, a $10,000 organ and a $5,000 Tree of Jesse stained glass window. Warm, human interest is added by touches of his family life and by the devotion and unselfish sacrifices of his wife. The treatment throughout is one of moving dignity.

Production by associate producer Robert Lord is authentic and Irving Rapper's direction is at the pace and on the high plane called for by the subject. Hal B. Wallis was executive producer.

An audience of New York exhibitors at a trade showing was moved to spontaneous applause at the end of the picture. They derived special amusement from an extended sequence which shows the minister's conversion to a belief that motion pictures are not as sinful as a strict interpretation of the Methodist Discipline of the early century would have them.—JAMES D. IVERS.

Deanna Durbin at the Peak

With this picture Deanna Durbin puts behind her the need of such advantages as her adolescence and her singing ability and takes rank with all those other feminine stars of today and tomorrow who arrived at their state of fame without having been a juvenile prodigy.

In this one Miss Durbin sings three songs, her voice showing the benefits of ripening, but they are incidental to an acting job which would stand on its own feet without them. She enters the picture as a hatcheck girl and leaves it as a fiancee of a millionaire, getting to that end in normal course of the story.

The measure of the acting job Miss Durbin turns in is the standout performance of Charles Laughton as a crusty and crafty old millionaire who is supposed to die in the opening scene but gets well instead. It's his best in years and the Laughton best is something to measure up to.

Producer Joe Pasternak, making this picture after handing in his resignation to Universal, gave it all he had of artistry and ingenuity, as if by way of making his farewell film a topper.

Director Henry Koster, whose work on this assignment won him a producership with the company, excelled his previous superlative handlings of Miss Durbin.

It's a film out of the ordinary, designed to entertain and to do nothing else, and fitted to the tastes of all audiences and of all ages everywhere.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, to the trade press and a capacity paid audience which laughed so long, so loudly and so often that a good deal of the dialogue was drowned out but no observer within earshot of the auditorium could doubt that a grand time was being had by all.—WILLIAM R. Death Valley Outlaws

Western Melodrama

Don Barry, cowboy star of Republic's western series of pictures, returns to the screen in "Death Valley Outlaws," a story of the west and a group of lawless Vigilantes who plunder the local ranches. Like many predecessor films this is built upon the formula that has attracted patrons to the box office down through the years.

Barry is seen as a self-appointed community guardian attempting to rid the local ranchers of an outlaw band which destroys property for its insurance. With the aid of Bob McKenzie and Lynn Merrick, in the roles of a liquor-loving veterinary and a girl whose father's ranch is scheduled for destruction, Barry, after numerous adventures, brings law and order to the community in true western style.

George Sherman, associate producer-director, has shaped the original story into an outdoor melodrama that upholds the standards set by previous films of this pattern.

Three Sons O' Guns

(First National, 1940-41)

A Mother, Three Sons, and Uncle Sam

"Three Sons O' Guns" is an unpretentious little comedy about a mother and her three sons, that is as down-to-earth as this morning's breakfast and as contemporary as this evening's headlines. Never did a title describe three boys more appropriately.

Important members of the cast are Irene Rich, as the devoted mother, and her three sons who are Wayne Morris, who can't keep a job because he would rather practice on his trombone, Tom Brown, an enthusiastic but unsuccessful sports promoter and William T. Orr, an embryonic actor, whose art is a combination of himself, ham and John Barrymore. Marjorie Rambeau enacts "Aunt Lottie," who lives with the family, but doesn't hesitate to tell the boys what she thinks of them.

Having been left a widow when her sons were young, Irene Rich struggles to bring them up on the limited family finances. When they reach young manhood, they cause her much travail, because they are selfish and irresponsible. The draft enters upon the domestic scene, and the boys develop all kinds of ailments and excuses, but Marjorie Rambeau goes to the draft board and tells them the truth. Uncle Sam gets three recruits and Irene Rich finally marries a handsome, wealthy and devoted suitor, Moroni Olsen.

Irene Rich is appealing as the mother. Marjorie Rambeau is excellent as the aunt.

Because of its humorous situations, good dialogue and because it deals with people who might be your next door neighbors, "Three Sons O' Guns" should prove satisfactory entertainment. It was directed by Ben Stoloff.

Reviewed at RKO's 58th Street Theatre, New York, where the audience seemed to enjoy the picture. There were ripples of applause at the close.—IRENE SMOLEN.

The Maltese Falcon

A Twice Told Tale

Here is a picture that is volatile, eruptive melodrama. In its class, in which several similar productions have proved box office attractions, it is an exceeedingly good picture. It is a grim story of a private detective who plays both sides of the law in his search for money. Showmen and customers with elastic memories may recall the 1931 cinema composition of Dashiell Hammett's novel. Now, ten years later, Warner Brothers again bring to the screen this murder-mystery, underscored with psychopathological principles. It still has attention compelling powers.

Humphrey Bogart as the private detective whose nature is untinctured by sentiment or love in his mercenary quest, has had no assignment to match this portrayal since "Petrified Forest."

Basically, it is a grim story of a desperate and adventurous man and the amazing lengths to which he goes in his search for money. It has throughout an underlying note of sordid comedy with only a modicum of romance. The entertainment the picture provides is that which is expected of stark melodrama.

The plot treats of the detective's involvement in a search for a gold falcon statuette valued at many millions of dollars; his romance with a girl also in search of the treasure, and his work with and against the ring of thieves who stop at nothing so that they may find the golden bird. Camera manipulations of light and shadow, set decorations, costuming and musical background contribute considerably in holding together the many elements of the story.

In supporting roles are Mary Astor, Peter Lorre, Lee Patrick, Sidney Greenstreet, Elisha Cook, Jr., and others who perform masterfully in roles that require the best in histrionic training.

Hal B. Wallis was executive producer, Henry Blanke associate producer, and John Huston directed.

Previewed in the Warner projection room in New York where an audience comprised of trade preess reporters and exhibitors generally conceded that it was an excellent production.—G. S.

Mr. Celebrity

(Producers Releasing Corp., 1940-41)

Human Interest Comedy

One of the most substantial supporting program films to come out of Hollywood, regardless of budget, "Mr. Celebrity" contains just about everything from heart tugs, comedy, and action to nostalgia, all neatly wrapped up and aimed at every type of audience. Having a horse-racing background, it also tells the story of an orphaned boy whose grandparents want to obtain his custody and take him away from his uncle, a veterinary. Their destinies become entwined with those of a group of former "greats"—film stars, a boxer, a lawyer, a jockey, bound together by common interest in racing a horse which seems the way to prosperity.

Playing themselves are Francis X. Bushman, Clara Kimball Young and Jim Jeffries, the sight of whom will awaken memories of film goers and sports fans of a generation or more ago. Little Buzzy Henry, as the boy; James Seay, as the uncle, Doris Day, William Halligan, Gavin Gordon, Johnny Berkes, Jack Baxley, Larry Grey, John E. Ince, and a host of others complete the cast, all of them delivering knockout performances under the able creditable guidance of director William Beaudine.

George R. Batcheller, in charge of production for P. R. C., and Martin Mooney, making his debut as a producer, have achieved a near miracle in mounting the picture, giving it qualities many times surpassing the budgetary confines.

The film is an all around remarkable job from cast, story, direction and production.

Previewed at the Academy Lounge projection room, Hollywood, Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood, to a press and professional audience, wise in the ways of film making, which was amazed by the qualities of the film. It made a hit such as few pictures have.—V. K.

Burma Convoy

Topical Melodrama

Produced with a clear conception of melodramatic values by Marshall Grant and directed for all that's in it, which is quite a lot, by Noel N. Smith, this action-film integrated with the news of the day contains a maximum of thrill, suspense and the related ingredients of thrilling entertainment for followers of adventure films.

It is to be recorded that, although the story pertains to the trucking of munitions along the Burma Road to the Chinese army under British direction and with some Americans participating in the proceedings, there is no dialogue reference to Japan, and the parachute troops who attempt to sabotage the convoy are identified as Chinese insurrectionists.

Uniqueness of scene is an asset to the enterprise, and conciseness of plot prevents lagging or confusion. An amplitude of fighting, by fist, by knife and by firearms, keeps interest high and action headlong.

Previewed at the studio for a trade press group which pronounced it a high point in the company's flow adventure films.—W. R. W.

Since he owes all the gobs on the boat, they serve as match-makers, that is all except the two pals, who are fearful their hoax will be exposed. Two candid youngsters, Butch and Buddy inform his last picture was a "buptkie." A husky gent handy with his fists sends him flying into the shrubbery when he catches Fields eyeing his girl friend. A waitress slops icewater over his pants and thwarts his attempt to exchange his battered sailor hat for another customer's fine Panama.

At the studios Fields tries to sell his new original script to producer Franklyn Pangborn, but Pangborn's wife (Mona Barrie) objects to being cast as a bearded lady—although Fields assures her she would only have to wear a small beard.

Upon emerging from the conference, Fields discovers his niece, Gloria Jean (herself) acting as a shill with Butch & Buddy in a shooting gallery. The gallery is part of a movie set.

A series of events involving Gloria's mother sends Fields and Gloria to Mexico. At the end it is revealed that the Mexican adventure is all part of the script which Fields has been reading to Pangborn.

An Advertisement about the Advertising of A Great Motion Picture...

"HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY"

This is the first of a series of advertisements on the forthcoming 20th Century-Fox production, "How Green Was My Valley".

So important is this boxoffice property, so many are its angles and entertainment values, that no single advertisement would be adequate.

Each week, therefore, one of a series of advertisements will appear on this page — a campaign inspired by the sincere conviction that "How Green Was My Valley" represents 20th Century-Fox's greatest achievement and your most profitable showmanship opportunity.

ABOUT TAXES

REPORTS appear to indicate that the new horizontal 10 per cent tax on box office prices has had no visible effect on the sale of admissions. That was to be expected, in part, because in the main the increase is in the less conspicuous areas of exhibition.

Also, unless tax consciousness is forced upon the customer he will not remember it long. Few, indeed only a negligible and tiny minority, are aware of taxes on consumer goods for more than a brief period after their application anyway. The price of a package of cigarettes, for instance, buys a lot more government than it does tobacco, but the customer has paid so little attention to that, that he has not responded at all to devices by which he might roll his own.

Happily, the motion picture amusement industry consists in renting a seat to the consumer on the basis of his hope that he will be entertained in comfort while looking at some fleeting shadows and transient sounds. The merchandise is most exactly the customer's own state of mind and anticipation, and that is worth what he can make it, out of the offerings of advertising, publicity and the marquee. There is room in that formula for 10 per cent. What the customer lays down for the ticket is to him just the price of the show—unless someone insists on telling him.

THE question of the over-all wisdom, or fundamental fairness, of the taxation of the great medium and entertainment of the multitudes which is the motion picture is something else again.

It is no revelation to state that the methods of taxation are always methods of the sheerest expediency. It is ever the popular policy to be soaking the rich who have few votes. Actually, by devices less obvious, as costs of government have risen so far above the capacity of the rich, the address extends farther and farther into the resources of all who have resources, and that brings it to the many.

The motion picture is elected for attention, while magazines, newspapers and books—all entertainment media, too—are not, for a diversity of reasons, predominant among them an unadmitted Puritanic heritage which would classify all theatres with tobacco, gambling and liquor. Soda pop, ice cream, popcorn and like piffles are not quite so available because they do not have the curse of Cotton Mather on them.

A tax could be put on bread, too, but it won't be, because bread is also a sacred word. But it is because man does not live by bread alone that we have motion pictures.

The subject of taxes, incidentally, does not now enjoy, and long has not, anything approximating its actual importance in the discussions of the lay press and the majority of the nation's readers. It is only in business and political journals, edited for special minorities, that taxes are discussed in any fullness and candour.

This reluctance of the lay press may be attributed to several factors of influence, chief among them two: (1) It is a dusty subject of interest only to persons of calculating minds and social consciousness in the large and the long; (2) the pressures of advertisers, markedly in the magazine and newspaper press, are against any sort of expression whatsoever which might make the customers wary, cautious, conservative and thrifty.

IT is significant that a while ago a well established expert on taxation and related matters prepared a series of articles calculated to give the public information in most readable form. The series was offered to editors by a syndicate. The answers came back indicating acute reading for the editors and a broad judgment that publication would "discourage business".

That reminds one, casually, that Advertising Age reports that: "Price Administrator Leon Henderson has not considered controlling advertising rates but has served notice that he won't be scared off from it by anybody who can wave a banner and holler freedom of the press. . . . " There is just that about his line that suggests that Mr. Henderson is drawing a thin line between what he would call consideration of the matter and making up his mind about it.

This manifestation, coupled with Mr. Morgenthau's thinking out loud about a project to limit business and industrial profits to 6 per cent, tends to raise issues more broadly significant and to be "hollered about" than those of the press and advertising, essential as they are to what we have been calling "the American way".

MEANWHILE, the taxation of the motion picture at the box office has not yet reached the proportions of an endeavour at social regulation or regimentation. High as it is at 10 per cent, now, it may yet be considered a measure in quest of revenue. That is the only purpose of taxation which it has been the American custom to understand. Taxation as a pressure on and control of conduct, a device much discussed in Washington, has yet a long way to go to arrive in the region of popular acceptance.

The motion picture industry may well beware of taxation addressed at social and political controls. The motion picture, art and industry alike, is of a civilization not to be remade by statesmen who take their inspiration from adding machines.

UP OUR CANYON

WE never get through enjoying the publicity gardens of Rockefeller Center. Right down where we were moved to comment on a "good neighbors" display of Latin-American cactus a few weeks ago there is a grove of crabapple trees in full flush of fruit. Any day now some Girl Scouts will pluck the fruit and make jelly for a day nursery. It's most irrelevant, but we'd like to see a cost sheet per glass on that jelly, taking in ground rent to Columbia University, executive time, gardeners' time, irrigation, management overhead. Against that might be credited, at open, one insertion merchandise rates, the publicity lineage, including this item which takes about $25.00 worth of paper and printing besides space. There is also the alarming possibility that the girls' jelly might not turn out to be so good.

This Week in the News

Cheery Note Dept.

THEATRE receipts continue climbing. Actual figures and observations of industry statisticians confirm this.

One hundred and forty-seven key first-run houses had a total gross of $1,520,400 for the week ending September 20th, and the week which ended Labor Day found $1,760,500 in the same number of houses, this amount being the highest recorded in recent months, based on calculations of Motion Picture Daily.

Returning to New York headquarters after an inspection of the west and southwest, Harry A. Ross, president of Ross Federal box-office checking service, said theatre returns were heavy everywhere, reflecting "extreme industrial activity."

Even the World Series baseball games, in New York, failed to affect New York's first-run theatres last week and weekend. For two days, Saturday and Sunday, in New York, the Paramount, for example, with "Hold Back the Dawn" registered $25,000. From Friday, October 3rd, through Sunday, "A Yank in the RAF" garnered $36,000 at the Roxy, in its second week. "It Started With Eve," at the Radio City Music Hall, gained $60,000 Thursday, October 2nd, through Sunday. Warners' Strand, with "The Maltese Falcon," counted $22,000 Friday, October 3rd, through Sunday. The final week of "Sergeant York" at the Hollywood, ended Sunday night, brought $11,500. In its eighth week at the Astor, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" received $8,500. These figures are from theatres and distributors.

MGM reports "Honky Tonk" running from 199 to 204 per cent above normal business in initial bookings. Edward Small's United Artists' release, "International Lady," was said to be doing big business in Miami, despite hurricane warnings, the company said. In five key New England cities, "Sergeant York" is running 100 per cent ahead of "The Fighting 69th," reported Warners.

Fire Fidler

THE PITTSBURGH Press and the San Francisco Chronicle have cancelled Jimmie Fidler's Hollywood motion picture gossip column since his appearance before the Senate propaganda subcommittee, the McNaught Syndicate at Greenwich, Conn., said Wednesday. A spokesman for the syndicate which sells the Fidler feature denied that there had been a wave of cancellations of the daily column or that there was "pressure" to blue pencil the Fidler chit-chat. Public reaction, in fact, has been one of "surprising indifference," he admitted, since Jimmie told the Senators what he thought ailed the motion picture business.

They Even Use Witches

THE tradition of Hallowe'en, with its goblins, witches and games, again is brought to the fore as the theatres of America prepare for the annual October thirty-first holiday. In small town and big city, managers have planned stage activities for young and old, special screen entertainments and other events to identify the festivities. Detailed accounts of various of these arrangements reported by showmen across the nation are set down in this week's Managers Round Table, starting on page 51.

South American Report

PHIL REISMAN, RKO foreign chief, returned to the U. S. Monday, after two months in South America, much of it in the company of John Hay "Jock" Whitney, and Walt Disney. In New York, in RKO foreign department headquarters Wednesday, he poured lavish praise upon Mr. Whitney and Mr. Disney who, he asserted, were doing the work of "50 good-will ambassadors," serving their nation mightily against the Axis agents in Latin-America.

Mr. Reisman reported that Mr. Disney, who will be back October 20th, gathered much material for cartoons to be made in Hollywood, with Latin-American music, artists, and characters. Some of these characters, he said, are the Brazilian parrot, and the Argentine gaucho. Disney production there, he said, was not necessary.

Mr. Whitney, in charge of the motion picture division for the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, is to return to New York Monday. Mr. Reisman referred to him reporters' questions about the success of the film industry's campaign to offset Axis influence below the Rio Grande.

NBC Artists Deal Off

AFTER months of negotiations for the sale of NBC's artist management business and concert service, a sale required by FCC pressure for a divestment of interests, Niles Trammell, president of National Broadcasting Company, admitted Wednesday in New York that all current projected deals for the sale had been terminated. Mr. Trammell's disclosure followed inquiries resulting from an earlier announcement of the appointments of O. O. Bottorff as president, and D. L. Cornetet as vice president of NBC's Civic Concert Service.

Pre-decree Deals Stand

THE New York Federal Court this week approved the admission by the U. S. Department of Justice, in its handling of the Federal film consent decree that long term product agreements — "franchises" — negotiated before June of this year by distributors and exhibitors, are not in contempt of the decree which requires that after September 1st, 1941, films be trade shown in advance and then offered only in blocks of five.

The Department had questioned a three-year contract between MGM and the Mullin and Pinanski circuit of New England, contending deal sheets had been drawn in November, 1940. After testimony, Tuesday, by T. J. Connors, MGM eastern and Canadian sales manager, Judge Henry W. Goddard ruled the deal sheets supplemented a 1939 agreement, itself valid.

Nazi Film Boomerang

THE UNITED STATES Army is considering using Hitler's "blitz-terror' films as objects of classroom study for American soldiers. This was revealed Tuesday by Colonel M. E. Gillette, Commanding Officer, U. S. Signal Corps at Fort Monmouth, N. J., in an address before the Westinghouse Photographic Lighting Conference, in Bloomfield, N. J.

Col. Gillette said the propaganda films depicting invasion of neutral countries, "showing panzers, dive bombers and tanks in action, actually can give selectees and enlisted men a first hand opportunity to analyze and discuss with their instructors Nazi operations in the field." In military classrooms, he said, rookie soldiers and officers alike would watch the German armies rolling across the fields of Poland, France and the Low Countries. Col. Gillette also pointed out that for the first time in history, photographs, slides and motion pictures would play a major part in training soldiers.

Salute to the Press

THE newsreel screen bowed a bit this week in tribute to its news reporting colleagues of the press, in observation of National Newspaper Week and "a free press in a free America." Pathe ran a special 150-foot insert depicting American reporters at work in China, in Geneva, London, and at the White House. Against a montage of whirring presses, city rooms, and busy scribes the commentary observed that only in America is there a free press today.

News of the Day, Fox Movietone, Paramount and Universal also added trailers to their issues to the effect that: "This theatre and the entire motion picture industry salute the free press of free America on National Newspaper Week—October 1 to 8." Slogan of the week, capping the trailer read "The newspaper lights the way of freedom."

Browne and Bioff Trial Begins, U.S. Recites Extortion Charges

To answer charges that they extorted half a million dollars from four major producers under strike threats, George E. Browne, president and Willie Bioff, West Coast czar of the IATSE came to bar Wednesday at New York before senior U. S. circuit Judge John C. Knox.

The trial after several postponements, got under way swiftly as Judge Knox outlined to talesmen the indictment which charges the union leaders personally extorted $550,000 from Loew's, Paramount, MGM and 20th Century-Fox under threat of calling a strike among all the studio and theatre employes in the IATSE. Before the first day in court was over a Jury of business men was in the box of the 11th floor courtroom and United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa had completed his outline of the government case.

Members of the jury are: Paul D. Thorne, cashier, Western Union; Francis L. Corcoran, real estate agent associated with Rockefeller properties; John McKeown Stebbins, production staff, New Yorker magazine; James D. Banks, life insurance broker; Murray J. Dunn, tester, New York Telephone Company; Ezra Koster Wickman, executive, Commonwealth Fund; Paul Fisher, mortgage broker; Arthur Otten, clerk, Texas Company; Frank James Hannon, margin clerk, Hayden, Stone and Company; Robert H. Celander, buyer, Consolidated Edison Company; Warner L. Overton, telephone engineer and Otto Detmer Sutter, sales manager.

The alternate jurors are: William McKnight Bowman, an architect, and Philip F. Barrington, advertising executive.

Judge Examines Jurors

Few from the large panel had not heard of the case, or of some of the Hollywood and union figures involved. Many admitted having sold furs, insurance or stock to motion picture personages. In nearly all of these instances the talesmen were excused. Juror Corcoran, is a realtor associated with the Rockefeller properties. Browne's IATSE is a tenant of the International Building in Rockefeller Center.

Two principal disqualifications were raised by Judge Knox who conducted the examination of jurors. First he asked if they had any feeling against unions and labor, generally, or the A. F. of L. union specifically. Four jurors, led by a Mr. Howe who answered with a firm "I have, Sir," were excused on this account.

The second question asked jurors if they had read the newspaper expose of Browne and Bioff written by Westbrook Pegler. Three were dropped from the panel because they said they would require positive evidence to disregard the Pegler crusade. Three others were excused because they said they were preiudiced by general press accounts. Two employes of the Chase National Bank, which holds 20th-Fox stock were also dropped. None of the panel admitted membership or sympathy with the Communist Party or fear of retaliation.

Judge Knox read a "Who's Who" list of industry figures and asked the jurors if they were associated with, or knew any of them. The names included: Nicholas Schenck, Barney Balaban, Jack Cohn, Sidney R. Kent, Albert Warner, Harry M. Warner, George Schaefer, Y. Frank Freeman, Edward J. Mannix, Harry Cohn, Joseph Schenck, John Balaban, Austin Keough, Charles Moskowitz, Arthur W. Stebbins, Louis B. Mayer, Al Lichtman, Smith and Allen, distributors of DuPont film on the West Coast, James Coston, Chicago theatre man, John Otterson, Westbrook Pegler and Duncan Underhill, Scripps-Howard correspondent.

Mr. Correa opened the prosecution with a 45 minute outline of the government's case. He charged that Browne and his lieutenant, Bioff, extorted $50,000 a year from the distributors from 1936 until their indictment last May. Their original peace price, he said, was $2,000,000.

Correa Tells of Threats

The government prosecutor outlined the operation of the motion picture industry and its unions. Declaring that the two union men had coerced the studio heads with a threat of disastrous losses from strike-closed theatres Mr. Correa indicated that the government did not consider the producers willing victims. Payments he added, were strictly cash, in sums from $10,000 to $50,000.

Thursday, Martin Conboy, former U. S. attorney, and counsel for Browne was to lead off the defense rebuttal. Henry Uterhart, Bioff's attorney was to follow. Also on the defense staff are George Breslin and Michael G. Luddy, Los Angeles lawyers. Boris Kostelanetz and John Burling are on Mr. Correa's staff. The trial was to recess Thursday until Tuesday morning.

Last week Browne and Bioff were named in two more indictments raising the amount claimed to have been extorted to $1,000,000 and were linked as co-conspirators with two more IATSE officers, Nick Circella (alias Nick Dean), Browne's Chicago representative and Louis Kaufman, Newark IATSE agent. Mr. Correa has not revealed when he will seek a trial on the new charges and there was no allusion to them as the trial began Wednesday.

Opening of the American Federation of Labor convention at Seattle on Monday revived reports that George Browne would be dropped from his AFL vice presidency and ousted from the union's executive council. In Seattle the executive council urged that the number of vice-presidents be reduced from 15 to 13. MOTION PICTURE HERALD on August 30th reported from Washington that the AFL council had decided to force Browne out.

A rehearing on the conviction of John P. Nick, former chief of IATSE Local 143, and his aide Clyde A. Weston of racketeering in St. Louis was denied Tuesday by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The pair face five years in jail and fines of $10,000 on the extortion charges for which they were convicted before Judge John C. Collet on August 31st.

FOURTH for United Artists. David O. Selznick, above, with Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Alexander Korda, this week became a partner, on an equal basis with them, in United Artists under a stock purchase and production agreement. The picture was taken after the signing of the contract at Pickfair, Miss Pickford's Beverly Hills home, accounting for the smiles of all concerned. The new partners were to meet with the board of directors in New York later this week to elect officers.

GENE AUTRY, right, Number 1 of the ridin', shootin' gentry, and well up in exhibitor and public favor among the Money Making Stars, rode into New York this week, although not exactly as pictured, to continue his personal contact policy by appearing prominently at the Madison Square Garden Rodeo.

BARNEY BALABAN, president of Paramount, purchases a table, left, for the second annual ball and banquet of the Cinema Lodge, B'nai B'rith. The seller is Arthur Israel, Jr., also of Paramount and president of the Lodge. The banquet will be held October 18th at the Hotel Astor, New York.

SALES personnel of Columbia Pictures this week heard home office executives announce that production was ahead of schedule on the company's 1941-42 program, already set through December, at three regional meetings, at the first of which, in Chicago, the picture above was taken. On the dais are Maurice Grad, George Josephs, Rube Jackter, A. Montague, who presided; Louis Astor, Louis Weinberg, and Max J. Weisfeldt. From Chicago they moved to New York.

SPURT IN DEALS FOR LARGE AND SMALL BLOCKS OF '41-42 PRODUCT

Buying Tempo Increases as New Blocks Are Issued; Deals Reported with Large Affiliated, Independent Circuits

The tempo of circuit buying of 1941-42 product is much faster these days, trading increasing in both large blocks, by non-decree signers, and in small ones, by the "Big Five" blocks-of-five dealers. It is to be expected, of course, that early season selling cannot be as widespread, as active as in other years, because of the consent decree restrictions on the five larger majors who are prohibited, thereby, from offering anything for sale before screening in advance.

Adding to those purchases already consummated, as previously reported, the week found many large affiliated circuits, and numerous independent units, entering into new commitments for 1941-42.

Interstate's more than 150 theatres have bought RKO's first block of five films, under the consent decree, the distributing company also disclosing that other circuit customers of its new season product were the St. Louis Amusement company's 39 theatres and the R. E. Martin Circuit's 69 houses in Georgia and Alabama, for the first two blocks; and the Warner New England circuit in 38 situations, the Saenger Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida chain of 169 houses, for the first block.

Meanwhile, Universal, patching up differences of several years' standing, has sold its new product to the Fox West Coast chain of more than 200 theatres, and has reached agreements in a reported three-year deal, with other divisions of the vast National Theatres chain, it was learned Monday, following conferences at the Coast and in the Midwest between William Scully, Universal's sales manager, William Heineman, its western sales manager, and the various Fox circuit chiefs, including Spyros Skouras, FWC head.

Warner-Sparks Deal Set

At the same time, Warner Brothers has "come back" to Florida, with a reported agreement covering the former Sparks theatres, known as the All-Florida circuit, now governed by Paramount, following Mr. Sparks' relinquishing of interest some months ago. Warners had been unable to reach terms with the circuit for a reported two years.

In addition to the circuits mentioned above, who bought RKO new season product, the Joe Lawrence Circuit of 11 houses in Montana, Idaho and Utah, have bought the company's second block; and the Skirball Circuit, involving 10 theatres in six Ohio situations has bought the two blocks. Also, the Warner West Coast chain has bought the first group for 15 theatres in California, Oregon and Washington.

The New England Warner deal mentioned, for RKO product, covers 46 theatres in 38 situations, including New Haven, Bridgeport, Waterbury, Hartford, Springfield, Worcester and Lynn.

The Butterfield circuit's more than 100 houses in Michigan and area have bought UA's new product; and the latter this week closed new deals with the Theatrical Managers, and Gregory circuits of Indianapolis, the Rowland, and Miles circuits of Indiana, and the Semelroth theatres in Dayton, Ohio. UA is also negotiating with the United Detroit Theatres and Cooperative Theatres circuits, of Detroit.

The Butterfield and UDT chains have bought Twentieth Century-Fox's films, all three blocks.

Frank Drew, MGM Cleveland branch manager, said last week the company sold its first two blocks to every circuit in the territory. These include those of Associated, Community, Washington, Scoville, Essick and Reif, and Gusdanovic.

From the New York home office, it was indicated recently that the company had 4,800 contracts for its first block of three films, apart from franchise deals, which would bring the estimated total to more than 6,000.

Buyers of Monogram pictures now include, according to company disclosure, the Public-Great States' 56 theatres; the Indiana-Illinois' 29; the Pitts, Virginia, 23; 19 of Warners' chain in Washington; and theatres of the Indiana Affiliated, and the Hunt, Oregon, circuits. Additionally, 37 theatres of the Fabian circuit, in New York, some theatres of the Black Diamond circuit, Cincinnati, 64 theatres of the Paramount-Richards group, in Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Florida, Mississippi and Texas, and 11 of the Anderson circuit in Illinois, are customers.

Producers Releasing Corporation's New York headquarters this week reported the following circuit customers for its entire 1941-42 product: Waters, Georgia; Wilby-Kincey, North Carolina; Ray Allison, Eastern Pennsylvania; Frisina Amusement Company, St. Louis; the Maine and New Hampshire circuit.

Streamlined Features Set

Hal Roach's 50 minute "streamlined" features designed for dual bills, may be sold by United Artists in pairs, the New York home office hinted last week. Meanwhile, in Hollywood, Mr. Roach has begun work on the second series of five.

From Hollywood, industry observers reported Twentieth Century-Fox may sell its "How Green Was My Valley" singly, this being indicated by the announcement there Friday, October 3rd, that the film would begin an "experimental run" at the Rivoli, New York, October 23rd, at advanced admissions. This run is ahead of release dates.

Bernard Kreisler, Universal short subjects sales manager, said last week the deals for that product are ahead of last year's by 22 per cent. He disclosed the company already has 2,164 contracts on the serial, "Don Winslow of the Navy," although production hasn't started.

SHOW WEEK SPONSORED BY TWO NEWSPAPERS

Continuing for the fifth year the gala entertainment week known as Kentuckiana Institute, two Kentucky newspapers, the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times, will inaugurate on October 5th a full week of entertainment and cultural events sponsored by both papers to promote and stimulate trade in the Kentucky-Indiana area. During past years the showmanship events brought a great influx of visitors from nearby towns and it is expected that this year every available theatre and auditorium in Louisville will be utilized to accommodate the crowds.

The big feature of the week will be Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy. Bergen will appear twice daily at the Memorial, supported by a number of Hollywood acts. The line-up of talent for the week includes: Sammy Kaye and his orchestra; Elsie Houston, South American soprano and descendant of Sam Houston of Texas fame; the Pan-American Revue with Carlos Molina's orchestra and Tito Guizar and Sarita. Free events scheduled for the public are a Pan-American doll show; Cavalcade of Aviation; Art Exhibit; Photo Show; concert of Pan-American composers and the Ruth Chambers Cooking school.

Cowan May Make Films in East

Eastern film production may become a reality, if the plans of Lester Cowan mature. The producer of "Ladies in Retirement" for Columbia, in an interview Monday morning at the releasing company's home office, said he might make his next film in the East, and that it might be "Brighton Rock," which is to be produced first as a play.

Mr. Cowan came East to discuss exploitation of "Ladies in Retirement" and also to discuss play properties with Gilbert Miller, with whom he collaborated on the picture, Mr. Miller's first association with the film industry.

"Ladies in Retirement" has been booked at the Earle and Ambassador theatres, Washington; the Lafayette, Buffalo; the Warners, and Hollywood, Hollywood; and the Hippodrome, Baltimore.

Astor Rights Acquired

Mitch Pantzer and Charles Lawlor, operating the Independent Poster Exchange in Philadelphia, secured from Bob Savini the distributor rights in the territory for all accessories on Astor Picture releases.

STUDIOS' TAPPING OF READY-MADE FAME OF AIR SHOWS AT NEW HIGH

Production Schedules for '41-'42 Show Emphasis on Radio as Series, Serials, Shorts Source; Exploitation Tie-up Is Factor

Hollywood's tapping of the air lanes for fertile exploitable material is, in this new season, riding into a new high, with motion picture producers and the air-show sponsors and broadcasters evidencing greater interest than ever before in the mutually advantageous showmanship potentialities for public attention to the product of each.

There have been some undeniably profitable results for both sides from series air programs transplanted in their series form to the screen. There already have been, and, in most instances will continue to be, the programs of "Scattergood Baines," "Blondie," "Henry Aldrich," "Ellery Queen," "Information Please," "Lum and Abner," "Little Abner," "Quiz Kids," "Kitchen Quiz," "Superman," "Hedda Hopper's Hollywood," "Winslow of the Navy," "Gang Busters," "Death Valley Days," "So You Think You Know Music," "International Forum," "Take It Or Leave It," and other air subjects which have been taken by Hollywood for features or shorts, and in the merchandising of which, the distributor and air interests have given double-barreled support in selling to the public.

An entirely different, but sometimes equally mutual air-screen collaboration has been, and likewise will continue, in the merchandising of screen product of radio's star personalities, Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Bob Hope, Bing Crosby, Dorothy Lamour, et al.

Used for Shorts

One trend this season is toward production of short subject material from radio, with Paramount, Universal, Columbia, RKO taking the lead in increasing short budgets for one-reeler production and setting special exploitation plans in conjunction with the radio shorts.

Home office executives maintain that such pictures as "Blondie," "Henry Aldrich," "Scattergood Baines" and "Ellery Queen," all have made extra profit at the box office as a result of their widespread radio popularity and agree that such success warrants continued production of these series.

Paramount, for instance, has the fourth "Henry Aldrich" film in production, "Henry and Dizzy," which follows the "What a Life," "Life With Henry" and "Henry for President" releases. Jackie Cooper, featured in the first two films, was replaced by Jimmie Lydon, who played "Henry" in the third picture and will continue in the fourth. Charlie Smith replaces Eddie Bracken as "Dizzy."

Columbia's "Blondie," with Penny Singleton and Arthur Lake, is now in production on the tenth of the series, "Blondie Goes to College," and the studio's "Ellery Queen," with Ralph Bellamy and Margaret Lindsay, is in its fourth story production of that series.

Last year, RKO produced three "Scattergood Baines" films and plans for this year are for three more in the series. RKO is also taking Kay Kyser, popular radio band leader who appeared in "Playmates," for a comedy spy story, "My Favorite Spy," to be produced by Harold Lloyd. "Look Who's Laughing," an RKO production scheduled for November 21st release, has an array of radio-star talent in the cast, including Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, and Fibber McGee and Molly. The studio also produced "Lum and Abner" and "Little Abner," taken from radio programs of the same name.

Republic produced last year, "Melody Ranch," starring Gene Autry, singing-cowboy hero, whose western pictures have been box office hits and whose radio program, "Melody Ranch," has been on the Columbia Broadcasting networks since January 7, 1940.

Concentration of new production by major companies this year, however, seems to be on short subject transposition from the airwaves on a grand scale.

Paramount already has released the first of the "Quiz Kids" shorts, the second is scheduled for late November release, two more are in the cutting room and an additional two of this series are scheduled for production later in the year.

Twelve "Superman," one-reel Technicolor shorts, taken from the radio program and cartoon strip syndicated in 275 newspapers, will be produced this year by Paramount. On the air, "Superman" is carried by 75 coast-to-coast stations through transcription in the United States and Canada. The combined total circulation of the daily strip, syndicated by McClure, is over 20,000,000 and the total readership of "Superman" in three monthly magazines is 3,000,000. Paramount pays a royalty fee of $7,500 to $10,000 per month. Manny Reiner, sales manager of shorts for Paramount, estimates that the entire production cost for the 12 shorts will be more than $850,000, which includes cost of advertising, promotion and exploitation. Thirteen comic book magazines will carry a Paramount ad announcing the release of the short at neighborhood theatres, and other promotion items include a national "Super Boy and Super Girl" contest held through the combined tie-up of radio programs, newspaper strips and motion picture theatres.

Paramount also produced the "Hedda Hopper's Hollywood" short. Miss Hopper's program is heard over a CBS hook-up on 48 stations, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 6:15 to 6:30 P.M., sponsored by the California Fruit Growers Exchange.

Another film, taken from radio and newspaper syndicated cartoon strip, is "Winslow of the Navy," to be produced by Universal as a 12 chapter serial. Some 200 leading newspapers in the country carry the strip, which is written and drawn by a Navy man, Lt. Com. Metternich. Samuel Hinds, Don Terry and Claire Dodd, feature players, will be cast for the chapter play. The "Winslow" film was dedicated to the Navy. Some of the background shots were made at the San Diego Navy base and Universal is planning to release the first chapter on October 20th, Navy Day, in Norfolk, Va.

"Gang Busters," another serial taken from radio, will be produced by Universal in 13 chapters. The company paid $38,000 for the story which was purchased from MGM, who originally bought the popular radio melodrama. This figure, according to B. B. Kreisler, sales manager of short subjects for Universal, is the highest price ever paid for a serial. The film script for "Gang Busters" is now being written, the cast not yet determined.

"Death Valley" for Universal

"Riders of Death Valley," taken from Death Valley Days, an NBC radio program which has been on the air since September, 1930, and moved to a CBS spot this September, is another Universal chapter play production which featured Leo Carillo, Charles Bickford, Dick Foran, Lon Chaney, Jr., Noah Beery, Jr., Buck Jones and Jeanne Kelly. Mr. Kreisler pointed out that the company aimed to present through its chapter plays "a pre-sold marquee bill tied up with a pre-sold story to combine a definite box office draw." The old type of serial, he said, "is out," with the public and with exhibitors.

Name band short subjects taking a leaf from radio's success story, are another feature of Universal's plans. Radio personality band leaders such as Ozzie Nelson, Jan Garber, Russ Morgan, Will Osborn, Henry King, Ted Lewis, Ted Fiorito and Freddie Slack are slated for shorts production.

At Columbia Pictures, presentation of shorts taken from radio programs will continue. Columbia already produced one "Kitchen Quiz" short and is now making another, which features Ed East, formerly of "Sisters of the Skillet." White Rose Tea Company which sponsors the air show on NBC, will cooperate with Columbia in announcing the film on the car cards and window displays carrying the Kitchen Quiz radio spot plug. Window cards in 26,000 grocery stores throughout the country will carry the picture tie-up.

"So You Think You Know Music," another radio show transposed to the screen by Columbia, has had two shorts productions featuring such personalities as Sir Hubert Wilkins, Col. Stoopnagle, Hendrik Willem Van Loon, Jessica Dragonette, H. V. Kaltenborn, Peggy Wood, Faith Baldwin and Johnny Green.

The company has done three in a series of "International Forums," adopted from the discussion forum idea of the air to the screen. The first International Forum short featured Wythe Williams, Linton Wells, Dorothy Thompson and William L. Shirer, newspaper and radio commentators well-known to screen audiences. The second in the series featured Major George Fielding Eliot, Ralph Ingersoll, Wythe Williams and Linton Wells. The fourth is now in production, featuring Senator Claude Pepper, Fannie Hurst, Rear Admiral Yarnell and Johannes Steel.

These Columbia shorts are two-reelers directed by William Rowland. The production costs are high because of the personalities involved. Jose Schorr, company short subject manager, reports that exhibitors find the forums good for exploitation purposes because of the big time radio and newspaper names.

"Time" On the Air

The radio program which initiated a new type of news reporting on the air and launched a departure from newsreel technique on the screen, the "March of Time," returned to the networks this Thursday, October 9th, after an absence of two years. It originally opened on March 6, 1931, on the Columbia Broadcasting System, playing 20 stations weekly, sponsored by Time, Inc., publishers of Time Magazine. March of Time goes back on the air over the NBC-Blue network from 8:00-8:30 P.M., Thursdays, over 111 stations, playing a repeat broadcast to the Pacific Coast.

The two-reel film of the same name was first produced in 1935 by Louis de Rochemont. Since then 84 releases have been made, using 168 subjects. March of Time has had 13 issues annually since 1936 and has played in approximately 8,200 theatres, through RKO release, for each issue. The picture has had increasing success, it is reported, since Hitler began to change the map of the world because of awakened audience-interest in events abroad.

"Information Please," one of the first radio programs to hit the "big-time" in motion pictures as a shorts production, also returned to air this week. RKO has completed 26 shorts in all of the series, with 13 scheduled for this year. The stump-the-experts program opened up a new trend in the short subject field based on the ready-made audience popularity the air program achieved. "Information Please" was launched in May, 1938, originally as a sustaining feature on NBC.

U. S. PRINTING RADIO PROGRAMS

Latin American radio listeners can now get full listings of future short wave programs on the principal U. S. short wave stations. Through the radio division of its Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, the U. S. Government is distributing, without cost, 10,000 weekly listings of Spanish, Portuguese and English programs on 11 principal short-wave stations.

According to M. H. Aylesworth, director of the radio division, 40,000 programs are being sent each week to 10,000 addresses throughout South and Central America. Business firms, Latin American radio stations, newspapers and others are being asked to distribute and republish them. Copies will be sent weekly to all interested Latin Americans.

The number of weekly hours short waved in Spanish and Portuguese as well as English for Latin America has increased rapidly since the Rockefeller Committee program was launched. News programs are reportedly the most popular features.

Films Get 25% Of Amusement Money U.S. Says

Approximately 25 cents of every dollar spent by the average American family on recreation goes into the motion picture theatre box office, it was estimated this week by the National Resources Planning Board in a report on family spending for the year 1935-36, loss to be computed, and released this week.

In one of the most comprehensive analyses ever made of purchasing power, the board showed that, on the average, a family with annual income of less than $500 spends $2, or one-third of its total recreation expenditures, on motion pictures, while a family with $10,000 or more spends $51, or about nine per cent.

For all income levels, motion picture admissions average $11 per year, or approximately 25 per cent of all recreation spending.

Highest in Cities

The study also showed that, on the whole, the average city family spends from two to three times as much on film shows as does the average farm family, with the rural non-farm family coming in between. Thus, in the income level between $500 and $1,000 a year, the farm family average for motion pictures is $2, while the rural non-farm and urban families each spend $6, and in the $5,000-$10,000 bracket, the average for the farm family is $20, for the rural non-farm family $34 and for the urban family $44.

However, the survey disclosed, the millions of dollars pouring into the box offices of the nation annually represent less than one per cent of the income of the audience. For the year under study, it was found that, on the average, 2.5 per cent of income was spent for recreation, but the share of the exhibitor was only seven-tenths of one per cent.

For families with incomes under $1,000, it was found that six-tenths of one per cent of the income went to the box office; the proportion increased until nine-tenths of one per cent was reported for families with incomes between $1,500 and $3,000, and thereafter it declined, dropping to two-tenths of one per cent for families with $10,000 or more.

Here, again, it was found that the city family spent several times as much on films as the farm family. For the $500-$1,000 bracket, the farm family spent two-tenths of one per cent as compared with eight-tenths of one per cent for urban families.

The report also showed regional differences. In the New England area, for instance, families with incomes under $500 spent $4 for motion pictures, and families with $500-$750 spent $3, after which the amount increased steadily to a top of $38 for families with $5,000-$10,000.

In the North Central region, families with less than $500 spent $3, and the figure increased steadily to a top of $39 for families with $5,000-$10,000, but in the South, families with less than $500 spent only $1, although the top, for the $5,000-$10,000 bracket, was the same as in the North Central states.

In the mountain and plains region, $3 again was noted for families with incomes under $500, but the top, for the $5,000-$10,000 bracket, was only $35, while in the Pacific states the range was from $4 to $35.

The board estimated that a total of $334,000,000 was spent in 1935-36 on motion picture theatres, out of a total of $1,216,000,000 spent for recreation.

'CENSORSHIP' BY STATE DEPARTMENT STALLS 'GOOD NEIGHBOR' PROGRAM

Insistence Upon Review of All Films Largest Obstacle in Red Tape Delaying Promised Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures

Insistence by the U. S. State Department upon reviewing for approval all non-theatrical films intended for South American distribution, is the largest single obstacle in a maze of Governmental red tape spun by interdepartmental jealousies and conflicting interpretations which has stalled the program to promote the good neighbor policy through motion pictures. The record shows that the actual preparation and dispatch of the free educational films promised South America is lagging. The flood of informative pictures promised last January remains a trickle.

The State Department employs a form (see adjoining columns) upon which its motion picture previewing officers from seven different Department divisions write the physical characteristics, contents and "censoring" observations on each film seen. It will be noted that ratings are in three classes: A—Suitable for foreign circulation under all circumstances. B—Suitable for foreign circulation under specified circumstances. C—Unsuitable for foreign circulation.

Reasons for making a rating are also given. Typical is this rating: "This film is entirely technical, no political implications whatsoever." Another: "While these films (a series) may have limited appeal abroad, they are very interesting and instructive and are certainly suitable for foreign circulation under all circumstances." One refers to a primitive watering system. "The reference to India might be omitted."

The seven State Department divisions which preview motion pictures are as follows (code letters are those used on the Department's form): RC—Cultural Relations. IN—Information. RP—Research and Publications. RA—Division of American Republics. EU—European Affairs. FE—Far Eastern Affairs. NE—Near Eastern Affairs.

Few Films Sent

Only a few films, outside of the regular commercial distribution of Hollywood product, have been sent southward to win hemispheric goodwill. The industry, through the major distributors, has already done much to revamp entertainment picture production to satisfy Latin American interests, and remedy complaints. But the 16 mm films which Uncle Sam promised to his neighbors for use in schools, universities, and for free distribution by Latin American governments are still to come.

Without fixing blame on any specific quarter Washington observers, long accustomed to governmental wheels within wheels are pointing in amazement to the involved machinery through which the Government is attempting to administer its South American policies. The State Department, the Council of National Defense, the Coordinator of Inter-American affairs, the Coordinator of Information and sundry other departments, bureaus and agencies are engaged in the work.

A ten-million-dollar budget for "hemisphere defense propaganda" via newspapers, magazines, literature, radio, the screen, and kindred media is at the disposal of Nelson Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs. Almost a million dollars of this, of which Congress has already appropriated $200,000, is available for use by John Hay Whitney, head of Mr. Rockefeller's motion picture division. A large portion was earmarked, ostensibly, for the documentary and educational 16 mm film program headed by Kenneth McGowan.

Only a few pictures, chiefly medical reels, have been actually shipped to South America, ten months after the division was created. At least a dozen films which have been translated, edited, and rescored are ready to go now. But they "await approval." Many others are in process of preparation. Despite yeoman work by Mr. McGowan and many of his staff who have seen hundreds of industrial, educational and technical films, travelogues, documentaries, and regular motion picture short product, less than a score are set for immediate completion.

Preparation, aside from the translation of commentary into Spanish and Portuguese, editing, cutting and reprinting includes an interminable routine of inter-departmental memoranda, inspection, approval, reapproval and submission to reexamination. The maze leads through the coordinator's offices, budget officers' desks, the State Department, legal divisions, cultural advisers, embassies, legations and a thousand and one other authorities. Each may voice approval or disapproval of any portion of the films. In consequence films are not being made ready.

Meanwhile reports continue to arrive from South America of reintensified propaganda aimed at South America's screens and schools from Germany, Italy, Vichy, Spain and from subsidized "native" producers.

Two Agencies Engaged

Responsibility for the preparation and dispatch of the films in Spanish and Portuguese is divided among two agencies, the State Department and the Rockefeller group. The burden of the work, ostensibly was delegated to the motion picture division of the coordinator's office. It has the funds, and personnel to prepare the Spanish editions.

The State Department meanwhile continues its own film program, instituted in 1938, through the Division of Cultural Relations. As the country's official foreign representative the Department retains, however, extensive veto power over the work of the Rockefeller offices, in radio, publications, films and other activities. The State Department is final judge of what "advances the interest and repute" of the United States in South America, and elsewhere abroad.

Friction between the two agencies has been widely reported in the press and by officials in Washington and New York. Evidence of it has appeared, in the film division at least, in conflicting requests to commercial producers for their pictures, and in the delay in shipping product southward.

Specific blame for the situation is voiced in many directions, indicting the records of both the State Department and Coordinator. Officials deny that there has been any falling out between the two bodies. Yet it is generally admitted that the red tape has tangled the liaison in practice. Some observers hint of deliberate delays and jealousy at the division of authority, but most admit that it is just another case of traditional governmental routine taking over and bogging down the work of a new agency. Privately, most wish for a centralized administrator with full powers to correlate the program. Similarly, division chiefs with authority are being urged.

Distribution of the pictures prepared by the Rockefeller committee is under the control of the State Department. After pictures have received departmental approval they are shipped to American missions in South America which in turn presents them to Latin American governments, or institutions.

In practice the department also controls production policy on the Latin American pictures. Film subjects selected by Mr. Whitney or Mr. McGowan, or requested by South Americans must be submitted to the division of cultural relations. Translations are subject to further inspection, and the final print must be previewed by an inter-divisional state department committee which can recommend changes or deletions.

Purchased 16mm Projectors

To exhibit its pictures in South America the Rockefeller office has purchased 30 sound 16 mm projection outfits which are being shipped to American embassies, consuls, and legations. They will be used to show the American films to schools, societies and others requesting an exhibition. Mr. Whitney has dispatched a technician to tour the missions instructing local mechanics in the operation of the American machines. They will be hired, as occasion demands and paid for out of Rockefeller committee funds to show the free pictures.

Recently the State Department announced the appointment of cultural attaches in the principal South American missions. They will administer the entire program of the division of cultural relations including the distribution of the motion pictures. Three men have already been assigned to posts and other attaches on the scene have been designated as cultural representatives.

The State Department vigorously denies that its distribution of the films will mean that they will be seen principally by "white tie" embassy audiences. They insist that the cultural attaches will be required to seek opportunities to show the films generally and to handle, and forward home, all requests for specific motion picture subjects.

Latin American experts in the film, industry and others familiar with the plan express doubt, however, that the State Department's distribution plans will meet demands for the films, or that the cultural attaches are sufficiently familiar with motion pictures to properly place them.

The division of cultural relations is confident, however, and points to the program through which it has exported some 50 to 60 films a year to South America since 1938. A division chief at Washington also reported "spending 45 minutes with a new cultural attache discussing films." When the discussion was over, it is reported, the attache was "thoroughly familiar with the film program and quite enthusiastic about it."

Films Must Pass State Department

The State Department, which has been officially interested in films since the division of cultural relations was founded in 1938 may attest the international interest and educational character of non-commercial films. It has no money to produce, edit, or translate pictures. To date the pictures dispatched by it have been industrial or educational films in English, or translated at the expense of the producer. Also a number of pictures from other government agencies, such as the departments of Agriculture, Commerce and Interior, a few translated, have been sent south. Chief advantage of the State Department approval has been customs concessions.

The division of cultural relations in determining the international and educational character of films approved for official distribution uses as a basis of judgment whether they aim to instruct, or report, "established facts, conditions or processes rather than to influence opinion, convictions or policies," or inform as to our customs, or to amuse.

"Preview and Evalulate"

To examine the films sent abroad the State Department through a departmental order in August, 1939, created an interdivisional review committee "to preview and evaluate American Films with respect to the suitability for transmission through government channels for display abroad, or, in the case of foreign-made films, in this country."

It is this committee, made up of representatives of some seven divisions within the State Department that must see all the pictures completed by the Rockefeller group. After each screening they fill in questionnaires listing possible objections which might be raised to the film abroad.

At present only the educational or commercial pictures prepared by the Rockefeller committee are submitted to the State Department reviewers. In a departmental report, however, a study has been recommended of

"The question of how far the department might appropriately go and what procedure would be suitable to induce the American motion picture industry to adopt a practical but not burdensome system of voluntary self-censorship to the end that films distributed for exhibition abroad would not be of a character to antagonize the countries where they are shown or to give the people of these countries a distorted picture of American life and institutions."

Through the Production Code Authority the industry has already done this very thing.

Eight Subjects Screened

Meanwhile the State Department board continues to sit in review of the product prepared for export by the Rockefeller Committee. Last week it saw the first group of finished films submitted by Mr. McGowan.

Eight subjects were screened, including "The City," "Power and the Land," the OPM's "Aluminum and the Two Americas," all produced by government agencies, and "Eyes of the Navy," "Basketball Technique," and "The Battle," MGM shorts made available without charge, and "Americans All" by Julian Bryan and "Vales lo que sabes" produced at Hoagland College. Four or five other pictures are also reported ready for State Department approval, including "Steelmakers," a U. S. Steel Corporation industrial, a film on the Bell aircraft company and several educational and medical reels.

Although the films have been seen by the State Department, they cannot be shipped until the division heads in the State Department fill in their written reports for the Cultural Relations section, which in turn will inform the producers of suggested changes.

In many instances the State Department has required second review sessions for the Rockefeller Committee of pictures which it had previously approved for its own film export program. Likewise it continues to request all manuscripts, translations, and original commercial films before they are adapted by the Rockefeller group. The process, it is reported, sometimes consumes many weeks.

Currently the film section of the coordinator's office has no recourse from the decisions and delays in the State Department affecting its program. However, the Whitney staff, which includes a number of men who have given up production or distribution jobs to aid the government program are hopeful that the return of Mr. Whitney from South America next week will lead to a showdown on interdepartmental cooperation from which an effective administrative organization, independent of the State Department will emerge.

Blanco Chain Acquired By Sunnymount Circuit

Sunnymount Theatres, Inc., a newly formed corporation, has taken over the operation of the five theatres in the San Francisco area formerly operated by A. Blanco. The new company also announced that it will build a sixth theatre. The houses concerned in the deal were the Mountain View and Cinema theatres in Mountain View; the Sunnyvale, Sunnyvale; the Campbell theatre in Campbell, and the Los Gatos theatre, Los Gatos. The entire group is to be renovated and reconditioned.

Bruno Vecchiarelli will be the active head of Sunnymount Theatres, and associated with him are J. Leslie Jacobs, theatre broker, and W. B. David, now connected with the George Mann circuit. The new theatre will be built in Los Altos, where a site has been purchased.

Warner Annex Planned

A new annex will be built at Warners' Burbank Studios this autumn with space to be devoted to the publicity department, associate producers and directors. Plans for the new structure are now being completed by the art department. The building, which will be two stories in height and U-shaped, will be of stucco construction with air conditioning throughout. Publicity department will occupy the entire east wing of the new building with a ramp connecting it with the present publicity building.

New Haven Film Plans

Donald A. Eldridge, director of audio-visual education in the New Haven, Conn., schools and promoter of the Junior Motion Picture Councils, reports 14 faculty advisors have been appointed to carry on motion picture study, group attendance at local theatres, and radio movie appreciation programs for the year.

CLARK SAYS 'NO ARMISTICE', THEN CALLS OFF HEARINGS INDEFINITELY

Subcommittee Chairman Argues Case on Radio; Says Screen "Censors Free Expression"; No Date Set for Hearings

The Senate subcommittee investigation into alleged propaganda in motion pictures and radio will not "peter out," according to Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman of the subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee. Taking his case to the public via radio on Saturday night, Senator Clark promised that the inquiry would be carried on "regardless of criticism and regardless of threats."

Despite Senator Clark's declaration on the air that the hearings would continue on the 13th he disclosed late Wednesday that resumption of the hearings on Monday had in the meantime been called off. Senator Clark attributed his decision to the absence from Washington of several members of the group and to uncertainty as to when they would return. Other members of the subcommittee refused to comment on the move. Senator Ernest W. McFarland, who has consistently "sniped" the inquiry, said he didn't want to stir up anything.

In announcing abandonment of the hearings Senator Clark said the subcommittee would meet again "in the near future, subject to the call of the chair and just as soon as I can get the members together." The chairman would not say that the hearings were to be abandoned entirely.

Senator Clark spoke over a Columbia Broadcasting System network from station WJSV, in Washington, on Saturday evening, October 4th. Taking as his text "Monopoly and War Propaganda in the Movies," he charged that the committee had borne "an avalanche of vituperation and abuse" designed to smear it and "frighten it into inactivity."

Repeats Monopoly Charge

To date, the chairman asserted, the hearings have established that the screen is "controlled by a monopolistic group of eight producers." He repeated charges by the committee's first witnesses, isolationist Senators Bennett Champ Clark and Gerald P. Nye, that the control is used to speed war propaganda.

He said the hearings probably would concentrate on the monopoly question in an effort to prove that Hollywood exercises a private censorship of screen and radio as a medium of free speech.

All was quiet in the hearing rooms at Washington meantime as the subcommittee continued its recess, postponing sessions from Monday, October 6th, indefinitely. Witnesses, including Charles Chaplin, William Wilkerson, Hollywood publisher, and Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who had been scheduled to take the stand on the 6th, were notified that their appearances had been deferred indefinitely.

Three of the committee members were absent from Washington. Of the five appointed by Senator Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the parent Interstate Commerce Committee, only Chairman D. Worth Clark and Senator Ernest McFarland remained in the capital. Senator Homer T. Bone is still in the hospital and Senators Charles W. Tobey of New Hampshire and C. Wayland Brooks of Illinois were absent on speaking tours or business.

Although it is not unusual for a minority of a committee to continue hearings, such a step is considered unlikely in the present inquiry because of the constant friction between Chairman Clark and Senator McFarland. The latter, only minority member of the group, has consistently opposed the chairman's rulings and lines of questioning.

During his radio speech Senator Clark said that while the evidence in his opinion had substantiated monopoly charges, it remained to be determined how control of films has been used for war propaganda.

"Certainly some propaganda has been leveled at the American people, and possibly also the extent of the propaganda has been overemphasized," he said. "As the hearings progress we will be better able to ascertain just how far the motion picture industry has gone in using its vast control of public expression in an unfair way."

Stresses Control of Machines

Control by business interests of the machines of radio and motion pictures, he said, also means control over the channels of free discussion.

"There is no actual competition between the man who is equipped with just his tongue, lips, larynx and lungs and the man who has in his possession, or access to, a radio microphone or a motion picture screen," he declared. "The man who owns a radio machine or a motion picture machine can cut off from discussion those who disagree with him by the simple expedient of saying no."

The hearings to date, Senator Clark told the public, have shown:

"As regards the motion picture industry, it is my judgment that the evidence to date tends very definitely to show a tightly held monopoly. For all practical purposes, eight companies absolutely control all of the production, all of the distribution, and a good part of the exhibition of motion pictures. Actually, in my judgment, three of these companies are only satellites of the other five, and these five are very closely associated together.

"Now, the extent to which this vast control of the screen has been used to disseminate propaganda for war is not entirely determined. Certainly some propaganda has been leveled at the American people, and possibly also the extent of the propaganda has been overemphasized, and as the hearings progress we will be better able to ascertain just how far the motion picture industry has gone in using its vast control of public expression in an unfair way," he added.

Screening Postponed

Screening of "propaganda" pictures cited at the hearings and which the Senators had agreed to see, was also postponed. The titles of the pictures have not been agreed upon and no date has been set for the exhibition.

At least two of the members went to the motion pictures during the recess, however, when Senators McFarland and Brooks attended the Washington premiere of Warners' "One Foot in Heaven." Senator Clark was "too busy" to accept the invitation. His family attended instead.

While the hearings lagged Wendell Willkie, counsel for the industry, resumed his personal activities in opposition to the isolationists. On Monday at a dinner of the National Republican Club in New York he urged the GOP to lead in the fight for repeal of the neutrality act. Tuesday he characterized himself as "a propagandist for democracy" and an opponent to totalitarianism at the opening of 1941 campaign of the New York and Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities.

Last week he appeared at "Fun for Freedom" and "China Calling" rallies in Madison Square Garden under the auspices of the Fight for Freedom and the United China Relief organizations.

Ohio ITO Censure

The investigation was branded as "unfair, biased and un-American" in a resolution adopted by directors of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, who characterized the proceedings as "a shameful attempt to smear a patriotic industry."

The resolution, released by P. J. Wood, secretary of the organization, said:

"It is obvious that this is a shameful attempt to smear a patriotic industry with accusations which are unjust and unfounded and intended viciously to inflame and arouse prejudice—racial, religious and political—and to defame and discredit motion pictures and all those engaged in the business."

In Hollywood a proposed mass meeting of the studio guilds to protest the hearings was postponed Monday to await further developments. The Screen Writers Guild, sponsoring the mass meeting, expressed hope the hearings would be halted.

Aubrey Blair, AFL organizer for Hollywood and former Screen Actors Guild official, also charged the Senate subcommittee with resorting to a subterfuge in order to whip up public interest in the probe. He declared that his protests against using armed forces and equipment in films mentioned by Senator Tobey were made years ago in course of his duties as an

DONOVAN BUREAU STUDYING FILMS

The Coordinator of Information, Colonel William J. Donovan, appointed by President Roosevelt to gather information and propaganda data and, reportedly, to guide "counter propaganda" against the Axis, is not neglecting motion pictures. It is learned that behind the doors of the COI, among the most heavily guarded portals in Washington, a film section is at work under the direction of Captain Merian C. Cooper. On his staff are John Ford and Laurence Stallings. Other motion picture experts are being quietly recruited.

Colonel Donovan, lately a confidential diplomat for the President, has long been a motion picture attorney. Mr. Cooper, a World War soldier with a distinguished record, has been a producer, independently and in Hollywood for MGM and RKO. The activities of the Information film section are not being discussed, but it is reported that the group is examining all imported product and some domestic films for propaganda content.

Inquiry Hearings Off Indefinitely

SAG official. Mr. Blair protested to President Roosevelt, and the Army and Navy from 1934 to 1937 over producers using service men in place of regular film extras. He said he never contacted the subcommittee, nor had it contacted him.

Isolationist and America First Committee speakers continued attacks against the screen. At Los Angeles Senator Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, hit at the employment of British actors in Hollywood, calling the screen "a modern Benedict Arnold."

Charles Lindbergh, at Fort Wayne, Ind., Friday, accused the newsreels of cutting and editing "to distort the true facts of the war and the true stand of those of us who oppose intervention."

Senator Gerald P. Nye, on the Senate floor in Washington Monday, charged, however, that the America First Committee was financing advertisements against him in 19 North Dakota newspapers in an effort to blame him for injecting racial issues into the propaganda inquiry. He also secured insertion in the Congressional Record of a large part of his testimony before the subcommittee.

The Fight for Freedom Committee and the Committee to Defend America and Friends of Democracy, in a joint letter, have asked Senator D. Worth Clark whether he or Senator Nye ever protested the showing of the Nazi film, "Sieg im Westen" (Victory in the West), Emmet C. Peebles, chairman of the Fight for Freedom Committee, in Cincinnati, revealed.

Motion picture business has not been affected by the Senate inquiry, Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the executive committee of the Bank of America and former president of United Artists, said in Chicago. Speaking at a bankers' convention, he said he did not foresee a box-office reaction to the investigation.

'Jewish Survey' Calls For J. P. Kennedy

The Jewish Survey, in a letter to Wendell Willkie, this week urged the motion picture industry's counsel to ask the Senate propaganda subcommittee to call Joseph P. Kennedy, former ambassador to Great Britain as a witness in the hearings. Asserting that Mr. Kennedy has been identified with both the isolationist movement and the motion picture industry the publication suggested that he be questioned as to intentions to secure control of the screen for the isolationist.

The magazine, published monthly and "devoted to the struggle against anti-Semitism and intolerance," urged that Mr. Kennedy be asked about his plans to reenter motion pictures, and his association with Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Montana isolationist.

The letter urged that the subcommittee ask Mr. Kennedy if he has "any plans for buying control of any motion picture companies or becoming active in their management?" and if he did "discuss with Senator Wheeler the necessity, desirability, or the nature of the present movie investigations?" It alleges associations between Mr. Kennedy and Senator Wheeler and reviews the former ambassador's career as a film executive.

Topper Acquires Theatre

George Topper, former manager of the old Star & Garter and Haymarket theatres, Chicago, has purchased the franchise for the Chicago territory of the Producers Releasing Corporation. Charles Miller continues as branch manager with no staff changes contemplated.

Kelly Elected to MPPDA Board

Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of United Artists, was elected to the board of directors of MPPDA on Tuesday, at a meeting of the board in New York. Mr. Kelly succeeds Maurice Silverstone as United Artists' representative. The meeting had been adjourned from last Thursday because of lack of a quorum.

It was reported that topics of discussion at the meeting were: The British remittance negotiations, in progress for some weeks; consideration of various phases of the foreign situation, including the problem of frozen money; and attention to the Senate subcommittee inquiry which is scheduled to resume next week.

Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Coast Producers Association, attended. Directors at the meeting were: Barney Balaban, Nate J. Blumberg, J. Cheever Cowdin, Jack Cohn, George Borthwick, E. B. Hatrick, Will Hays, E. W. Hammons, W. C. Michel and Joseph Hazen.

Famous Players Deny Hanson Affiliation

A denial has been made by Famous Players Canadian in Toronto, Canada, that Oscar Hanson would become identified with the company. The denial followed the announcement of Mr. Hanson's resignation as director of theatre operations for the N. L. Nathanson Odeon Circuit and withdrawal from other Nathanson companies, in which he held executive posts, as published last week.

Other reports from Toronto say that Mr. Hanson is planning to organize a business of his own and that he will become associated with Arthur Lee in New York. Mr. Lee, temporarily in Hollywood, however, said he knew nothing of Mr. Hanson's future plans.

Following the resignation of Mr. Hanson, further reports were that Empire-Universal Films, Ltd., might lose the Universal Pictures franchise for Canada. The Universal home office in New York said there had been no discussions concerning any possible change in franchise arrangements for Canada.

Willkie Speaker at New York Celebration

There will be 1942 elections, Wendell Willkie, former presidential candidate, and counsel for the film inquiry in its current Washington ordeal, told an audience at a Fight for Freedom Committee rally at New York's Madison Square Garden, Sunday night. The meeting endorsed a resolution offered by Actor Burgess Meredith, condemning the Senate inquiry into film propaganda.

The rally was called "Fun to be Free." Other speakers included William Knudsen, Herbert Agar, and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia. Among stage, screen, radio and literary stars present were Helen Hayes, Lynn Fontaine, Jan Kiepura, Albert Spalding and others.

Russian Musicals Planned

Mexican Strike Halts U.S. Films

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

The present Mexican picture situation is bad despite high optimism expressed in official and labor quarters. The theatres have already begun to feel the lack of major American pictures. Business has dropped 25 per cent since the National Cinematographic Workers Union began its series of strikes against the majors on September 2nd with the closure of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Columbia, followed on the 17th with the shutting of Warners, and on the 29th with Paramount and RKO Pictures, and granting Fox, Universal and United Artists a respite until October 14th.

There is frank pessimism about what will happen Tuesday. There is bitter criticism by the press, particularly those local dailies that have long enjoyed very heavy advertising by the theatres, in some cases as high as 35 per cent of their total paid publicity, and by the rank and file of the unionists, of the obstructionistic tactics of the labor leaders. It is generally conceded that the Americans will definitely not yield to their Mexican workers. It seems a certainty that the other three majors will be closed on the 14th.

May Cut Theatre Staffs

Theatre troubles are piling up apace. Circuits in the northern tiers, with headquarters in Monterrey, Torreon and Chihuahua City, along the Pacific coast, in Guadalajara, and in most of the South, have petitioned the Federal Board of Arbitration and Conciliation for sanction to revise contracts with their staffs, so as to cut personnel and pay, explaining that a paucity of good pictures has made it necessary.

Rumors of Axis influence as an explanation of the attitude of the picture union leaders have intensified. It is said their aim is to ban from Mexico all first-class American films, including news reels.

Open dissatisfaction on the part of the picture workers with their chiefs is becoming more manifest. That the union has not called a meeting of the workers in nearly two months is regarded as significant.

All of the 1,009 theatres in the Republic are operating on a strike basis. There has been a strange change in programs of theatres here. Only one of the six first-run houses, the Magerit, is featuring a major American film, "Tom, Dick and Harry" (RKO). The current bill at the Olimpia, only American owned and managed theatre here, manager of which is Edmund B. Noonan, brother of Sally O'Neil, is playing "Misbehaving Husbands" (PRC) as second to its feature, a French film. The Rex is featuring a French picture. The big picture at the Iris is an Argentine. The Palacio Chino is playing for the third week a Mexican, "Ay, Que Tiempos, Señor Don Simon" ("Those Were the Days, Señor Don Simon"), musical comedy of Mexico's Golden Age, 1880 to 1910, stressing a white petticoat cancan by 24 girls. This picture has set a new box office record here, grossing $23,500 in its first 15 days. The Alameda is exhibiting a Mexican, and the Cine Colonial, the largest local subsequent-run theatre, seating 6,000, is featuring "That Hamilton Woman" (UA), and "Kit Carson," which the government prohibited recently on the ground that some of its characters disparage Mexicans. The ban on this film was quietly lifted. The Colonial top is 32 cents, a high one for a subsequent-run theatre here.

WARNERS DROP 8 IN LOW BRACKETS, REPUBLIC ADDS ANOTHER $1,500,000

Columbia, in Second Field Sales Meeting, Promises 'Strict Adherence' to Feature Release Schedule for the New Season

Extending a policy of quality pictures whenever feasible, Warners over the week-end eliminated eight low-budget films from its schedule, at the same time completing plans for 19 features to be made during the next three months.

Meanwhile, furthering its endeavors, Republic, in "the most important expansion program in the company's history," according to M. J. Siegel, president, this week added to its executive staff and its physical plant, and increased its feature-picture budget by $1,500,000, to set five at an increased cost of $750,000 each. At the same time, in the first of three regional meetings to be held, Columbia, according to a policy enunciated by Abe Montague, general sales manager, at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, Friday, October 3rd, is going to adhere strictly to the release program it set for pictures from September this year to January of next. At that meeting, too, Mr. Montague told approximately 100 that the studio is now able to keep four to five months ahead of the original schedule.

Warner Drops Eight

The Warner elimination of eight low budget films was announced by Jack L. Warner, vice-president, at the studio, over the weekend. The pictures are "Kickoff," "Night Warning," "Across the Atlantic," "Fortunes of Mamie Q," "Murder With Music," "Three of a Kind," "The Back Gate," and "Man Killer."

Mr. Warner said boxoffice receipts showed companies must no longer follow a "quota" policy; that is, a certain number of pictures in each cost category.

At the same meeting, of studio executives, at which the schedule was established for 19 features in the high cost bracket, "The Gibson Girl" was added to the program. This will be about the life, and times, of Charles Dana Gibson, artist and creator of the character.

Mr. Warner also added, anent the dropping of the eight films mentioned, that the new policy the action indicated was a most effective weapon against double bills. The conviction that time and money may be spent on films, with public approval, brings to the studio opportunities to make better films, and, to its executive, opportunities to attend to their duties more fully. Mr. Warner added the decrease in theatre patronage was due to what he described as "slam-bang" production.

The features scheduled to go into production during the coming quarter are:

"Arsenic and Old Lace," stage hit being adapted for screen by Philip and Julius Epstein, with Frank Capra directing; "The Adventures of Mark Twain," with Jesse Lasky as associate producer; "The Constant Nymph," popular novel, to be directed by Edmund Goulding; "In This Our Life," based on Ellen Glasgow's best-seller with Bette Davis and Olivia de Havilland co-starred under direction of John Huston.

"Juke Girl," Ida Lupino vehicle, to be directed by Curtis Bernhardt; "Mississippi Belle," Ann Sheridan film based on a novel by Clements Ripley; "Gentleman Jim," which deals with the life of James J. Corbett, and will star Errol Flynn; "The Widow Wouldn't Weep," to star Jack Benny.

"Rhapsody in Blue," based on the life of George Gershwin, with Ira Gershwin and Robert Rossen writing the scrip; "Always in My Heart," introductory vehicle for Gloria Warren and Patty Hale, child singing discoveries, with Jo Graham directing.

"The Damned Don't Cry," based on a novel by Harry Hervey with Leonard Frank and Melvin Levy scripting.

"A Night Before Christmas," film version of Laura and S. J. Perelman's stage play, which will star Edward G. Robinson; "Lisbon Clipper," original screen play by Jesse Lasky, Jr., and Maurice Hanline, to be directed by Robert Florey; "Captain Tough," original script by Charles Tedford, with Ray Enright directing; "Leathernecks," first assignment for new associate producer Paul Gerard Smith.

"Yankee Doodle Dandy," based on the life and songs of George M. Cohan, the title role to be portrayed by James Cagney; "The Man They Couldn't Kill," written by Sidney Biddell and Frederick Frank, with Leonard Hoffman adapting for screen; "Iceland Patrol," original screen play by Scott Darling and Erna Lazarus, featuring Alexander Knox, under the direction of D. Ross Lederman.

Short Subjects Scheduled

Shorts scheduled to go into production during October, November and December are:

"The Great Virginian," historical feature in Technicolor; "Calling All Girls," featuring Patty Hale and Navy Blues Sextet; "Ice Frolics," "Life of Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom," in which Rosenbloom will portray himself; "King Salmon" and "Rodeo," to be directed by Del Frazier; "All-Girl Orchestra," to feature a women's band; and "Soldiers in White," national preparedness short in Technicolor.

Features currently before the cameras and in the cutting room are "Kings Row," "Captains of the Clouds," "They Died with Their Boots On," "All Through the Night," "The Male Animal," "Dangerously They Live," "You're in the Army," "Wild Bill Hickok Rides," "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

The expansion of the Republic studio, executive staff, and picture budget was announced Monday in Hollywood by M. J. Siegel, president, who called the expansion "the most important in the company's history."

Two new departments were created this week. In charge of features is Al Wilson, appointed executive producer; in charge of westerns and serials is Hiram Brown, Jr., appointed executive producer.

A new $1,000,000 construction program begins, to include new buildings for the art and research departments, two new sound stages, new character streets.

In charge of this development is C. L. Lootens.

As a "sales triumvirate" to hold four regional meetings per year in Hollywood, New York, New Orleans and Chicago, Mr. Siegel will join James R. Grainger, president of the distributing company, Republic Pictures, and Herbert J. Yates, chairman of the Republic board.

Max Schoenberg becomes production manager. Herbert Mendelson is appointed his assistant.

Simultaneously, Mr. Siegel also announced that Republic would increase its budget on five feature pictures $1,500,000, a move justified, he said, by exhibitor sales for the current 1940-41 product. The first picture to be produced under the increased budget is "Lady for a Night," currently in work, which will cost in excess of $900,000. There will be five other pictures of major classification, which will cost in excess of $750,000.

It is understood Republic's total 1941-42 feature product may eventually reach $15,000,000.

Columbia's Regionals

For pictures from September through January, Columbia will adhere strictly to its release schedule, its sales manager, Abe Montague, told assembled salesmen Friday, October 3d, at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, in one of the many messages to them during their two day meeting. Regional sales meetings also are scheduled for New York on Friday through Monday, and for San Francisco October 24th and 25th.

Mr. Montague said the company's business during the last year had been the best in its history, and that the studio had reached a pace enabling it to keep four to five months ahead of schedule. He added that Columbia had made deals with virtually every important circuit and independent.

In the Chicago meetings particular stress was made on service to the exhibitor, Mr. Montague claiming that the theatre operator was entitled to service on his contract and was going to get it from Columbia. He said he believed that the last run account should get as good a print as a key run house, and would, and that other ideas would be put into effect to help the small town operator. Along these lines, he said, press books were now being compiled, on each picture, that will help three types of exhibitors, the key runs, key subsequent runs and small town houses. Office forces will be increased, if necessary, to give the exhibitor the service he wants.

Columbia is anxious, he said, to work with any exhibitor organization to bring about unity within the organizations and to the industry in general.

As to accessory service, Montague said it was the definite opinion of everyone present that better service could be given by controlling it themselves, as they now do, and efforts are being made to improve this end.

Sam Briskin, studio manager, dropped in between trains, on his way from New York to California, and addressed the delegates on productions under way and planned, and impressed upon them that the studio was geared so all announced releases would be met.

Columbia has extended its decentralization so that approvals of play dates on the more important pictures are now given by the district manager. Prior to this decision these dates had to be approved by the home office.

THEATRES COMPETE WITH CHILD SHOWS

Competing motion picture circuits played hosts to children at rival parties in Milwaukee, Wis., early last week. Fox, which has increased its string of theatres in Milwaukee county to 29 with the recent annexation of the Saxe Amusement Management theatres, held a Mickey Mouse Birthday Party at eighteen of its houses.

In contrast, Warner Brothers invited youngsters to celebrate Donald Duck's Birthday at eight Warner theatres. The incentive for the Donald Duck party was five Disney color cartoons in addition to the regular show an a free gift for all attending.

Both parties were matinees.

PERMANENT CIRCUIT PLANNED FOR UNCLE SAM'S NEW ARMY AND NAVY

Film, Stage, Radio Executives Called to Washington to Discuss Long Range Program for Entertainment in Camps

Establishment of a regular circuit of shows for men in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps was agreed upon at a meeting in Washington Wednesday of officers charged with maintenance of morale and committees representing screen stage and radio. Placement of stage and screen entertainment for the camps on a permanent and coordinated basis is the object of the plan, details of which will be worked out by the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy.

The services of the film industry were placed at the disposal of the Government by Y. Frank Freeman and Jock Lawrence, chairman and secretary of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defene, and by Lawrence Beilenson of the Hollywood Screen Actors Guild.

The Washington meeting had been called earlier in the week and had been expected to last several days. Agreement was reached after the first session, however.

The Army Motion Picture Service and the War Department, with the cooperation of the major film distributors through the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense, have built, and are still building, a chain of approximately 400 theatres in posts and forts, to take care of the film needs of possibly 3,000,000 men. Bookings by the Service have brought the men films new and near new, and difficulties in clearance are being ironed out by a special distributors-exhibitors committee, with the Service, under a War Department agreement that the theatres will not admit others than soldiers.

Stage Units Wanted

This sector of the morale program is generally conceded working smoothly; it is for the other types of entertainment, that the Army, and now the Navy, are directing efforts at better cooperation. Stage units sent out earlier in the year by the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy, Inc., under the auspices of the United Service Organizations, and by Hollywood's film industry have not been as numerous as desired or expected.

Called to the Washington meeting were Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers and chairman of the Hollywood branch of the motion picture defense committee; Jock Lawrence, secretary of the committee, and representatives of the Screen Actors Guild, Screen Writers Guild, Screen Directors Guild, the various technical branches and the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Representatives from the East will include Lawrence Phillips, executive director, and Eddie Dowling, actor-producer, of the New York Citizens Defense Committee; Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters; and Lee Shubert, stage producer.

Dissatisfaction of legitimate stage and vaudeville actors with financial returns and arrangements at the free shows given by the Citizens Committee and others this summer at the camps was reflected in an order last week by the Theatre Authority of New York and Hollywood that no member of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, parent actors' union, could perform in any Army or Navy camp without pay.

Alan Corelli, executive secretary of the Authority in the East said in New York Saturday that the order was a result of resolutions approved by the New York and Hollywood branches recently and that actors had been performing in the free shows under the understanding with Government officials that the arrangement was for an "emergency" period of one year after which the Government would pay the actors.

A corollary of the order that no actor may perform at a camp without pay is the ending of "free" shows. They will all have to charge admission, Mr. Corelli intimated. The first effect seen was the placing of an admission charge of 10 cents per soldier at the show in Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, this week.

Backing of the Theatre Authority ruling came this week from the Motion Picture Defense Committee, Hollywood. In a joint statement with I. B. Kornblum, a Hollywood agent, Fred Beetson, member of the committee and a vice-president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, said the ruling was designed to institute "order."

"A 'brake' has been put on indiscriminate, unorganized requests for shows coming from countless sources—while the Federal Government is working out an orderly plan in cooperation with the entertainment industries."

Meanwhile, construction of 242 USO sponsored clubhouses in towns near Army camps, for soldier recreation, appeared nearer possibility this week, atfer clearing of some red tape in Washington. That process was the signing of a special order by President Roosevelt assigning the clubhouses to the construction division of the Army. They had been under the Federal Works Administration and were delayed for several months, while the USO, with $13,000,000 of publicly raised funds to operate the houses, complained week after week, until it captured the attention of the Cabinet's defense ministers, who brought the situation to the President.

In New York, it was said this week the Army would begin construction of the recreation centers October 18th and finish them the week before Christmas.

In the Second Corps Area, in which that city and territory are located clubhouses will be built new or from altered establishments in Pointville, Browns Mills and Wrightstown, New Jersey, for Fort Dix; in Black River, New York, for Pine Camp; and, possibly, at Hempstead, Long Island, for Mitchell Field; also at Oswego, Watertown, and Youngstown, New York.

The clubhouses will be of one story, on cement foundations, with varying appearance, and possibly with sections of two stories; and will average 89 by 140 feet, with main lounges, social halls, stages, kitchens, showers, locker rooms, reading rooms, soda fountains, etc.

Thomas E. Dewey, chairman of the USO national campaign, said Tuesday:

"I am highly pleased at the transfer of the job from the FWA to the Army, and I am confident that General (Brehon) Somervell will build the buildings so fast that he will make up the three months of delay, by the speed with which he does the job."

More Army Theatres

Eight permanent theatres are being built at Camp Blanding, Florida, costing $500,000. At the camps near Paris, Texas, five 1,038 seat theatres are planned; at Bastrop, same state, another five, with same capacity; at Lubbock, Texas also, a 600-seater; and at Midland and the Sherman-Denison territory, a 603 seat theatre and one of 364 seats, respectively.

From Brownwood, Texas, comes news the three tent theatres are to be replaced by six wooden houses.

At Waco, in Texas, there are to be five 1,038 seat theatres at the new Valley Mills camp.

At a new army camp being built near Okmulgee, Oklahoma, there will be five theatres, of 1,038 seats each; and, at Enid, same state, a 364-seater.

Two weeks ago at Fort Sam Houston, construction began on a second theatre.

The War Department is also building theatres totalling in cost $129,460, at Camp Livingston, Louisiana; and others costing $112,000 at Camp Shelby, Mississippi.

IN THIS CORNER— BARBARA STANWYCK

Hollywood film actors and actresses ever striving for perfection, sometimes become a little over-zealous. Playing a film scene, Barbara Stanwyck threw a right cross which was not supposed to connect, but did, and sent Kathleen Howard, character actress, to a hospital with a fractured jaw.

A scene in Sam Goldwyn's "Ball of Fire" called for Miss Stanwyck to clip Miss Howard on the chin. This type of scene is photographed from an angle which makes the blow appear as if it connected. One or both of the principals miscalculated a bit and Miss Howard, who is 56 years old, was knocked out. Miss Stanwyck was near hysterics, the Associated Press reports.

"Dumbo" Will Follow "Fantasia" at Broadway

Walt Disney's latest feature cartoon, "Dumbo," will have its premiere Thursday evening, October 23rd, at the Broadway Theatre, New York, where Disney's "Fantasia" is now in its 11th month. Following the premiere which will be a society benefit affair, "Dumbo" will be presented on a continuous run.

"Although 'Fantasia' is being withdrawn, business is at peak and this attraction could have continued indefinitely," said the RKO-Disney announcement, which added that there has been a demand for national release of "Fantasia."

Meanwhile, "Walt Disney's Song Parade," a new musical feature presenting song hits from all the famous Disney motion pictures, made its radio debut Sunday, October 5th, on WOR and 77 other Mutual network stations from coast to coast. Tunes from "Dumbo" highlighted the first broadcast.

ASCAP released all the tunes for this new series which originated in Mutual's Chicago station, WGN.

DAVID SELZNICK BECOMES FOURTH PARTNER IN UA

Producer Enters Company on Equal Basis with Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Korda

Culminating months of discussion and complex legal preparation, David O. Selnick signed an agreement last Sunday in Beverly Hills, Cal., which gives him a quarter interest in United Artists Distributing Corporation, sharing equally with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Alexander Korda who each own 25 per cent of the corporation. An unusual feature of the much-discussed contract provides that constant production be maintained by the company until Mr. Selznick has completed $20,000,000 worth of pictures.

The contract, one of the longest on record in terms of negotiations instituted over a period of months, provides that Mr. Selznick will make from two to four pictures a year for United Artists; that he may elect to become a stockholder in the company and that he must receive certain production financing.

The producer of "Gone With the Wind," is reported to have bought his interest in UA for $1,250,000, through purchase of the Douglas Fairbanks estate stock, valued at $400,000, Samuel Goldwyn's former holdings, which United Artists had purchased in a reorganization deal some months ago for $600,000, and some shares each from the holdings of Miss Pickford, Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Korda.

Elections Set

Immediately following the signing of the agreement Miss Pickford and Mr. Korda flew East. They arrived in New York on Monday and told reporters that a company board of directors meeting would be held in UA's home office this week to discuss final details of the agreement. Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Selznick were expected to arrive from Hollywood for the meeting on Thursday. Miss Pickford said that UA partners would act to select a new president for the corporation. On Sunday Mr. Selznick reported that he was not planning to hold office in the company, but that he would be an Eastern executive. No change in the corporation name is contemplated for the present.

At mid-week, it was reported that several persons are under consideration for the presidency of United Artists, one an eastern company head now on the West Coast from whom UA stockholders are awaiting word of his availability. The other is an eastern company executive who, stockholders expect, will bring additional financing into UA. At present, ArthurW. Kelly, vice president in charge of distribution, is the active head.

Attorneys who figured in arranging the deal were Edward Raftery of the New York law film of O'Brien, Driscoll and Raftery, representing United Artists, and attorneys Lloyd Wright and Dan O'Shea, representing Mr. Selznick.

Mr. Selznick announced Tuesday that he had appointed Laudy Lawrence as his special representative in the distribution of his United Artists releases. Mr. Lawrence was for many years MGM's general manager for the European continent and will start in his new post immediately, starting an extensive survey of the American market and available world markets. Lowell Calvert, meanwhile, will continue in charge of Selznick-International Pictures, now in liquidation in New York.

Following signing of the U.A. partnership agreement, Mr. Selznick, who has been inactive as a producer for nearly two years, announced a four-picture program for his producing company in connection with United Artists. A screen version of Dr. A. J. Cronin's new novel, "The Keys of the Kingdom," which he purchased for $100,000, will be put into work this winter with Ingrid Bergman in the role of Maria-Veronica, the nun. Next, Mr. Selznick will go to work on "Claudia," which Rose Franken and William Brown Meloney are adapting from Miss Franken's successful Broadway play of the same name. "Tales of Passion and Romance," a film anthology for which Keith Winter is preparing the scenario, and Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre,' a probable Joan Fontaine vehicle, are the other Selznick projects.

Miss Pickford Plans Two

Miss Pickford, meanwhile, who is planning to re-establish her own independent producing unit, announced on Monday that she would not be active in Murray Silverstone's producing organization. She plans to remain in New York for about ten days, shopping for a "play or a story" which might be good for screen material. She will make two productions, one a new version of "Coquette."

Mr. Korda, however, said he was undecided whether to leave this week-end for England or return first to Hollywood to settle "certain matters" which might require his attention for as long as two or three weeks. Mr. Korda has signed Jack Benny to play the starring role in his forthcoming production, "To Be or Not to Be," which will be directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

Charles Chaplin is planning a re-issue of "The Gold Rush" for release in late December, in which he will act as narrator and for which he has written a special musical score. Mr. Chaplin's future production plans include a character comedy in which he will star. He also plans another film, one in which he will not appear.

Meanwhile, from England, Teddy Carr, managing director of United Artists, cabled the New York home office that the first print of "Ships With Wings" would arrive here within the next three weeks. This film, produced at the Ealing Studios by Michael Balcon and directed by Sergei Nolbandov, is a romance played against the background of Britain's wartime aviation.

On Monday, from Hollywood, came the announcement of Hal Roach plans for his second series of streamlined features released through United Artists to follow the first now being completed. First production in the new series will be "Hay Foot," a comedy of Army life, featuring the "Tanks a Million" cast. "Brooklyn Orchid" is another in the series.

Legion Dinner-Dance

At a meeting held last week members of the Lieut. A. Vernon McCauley Post, No. 270, known as the theatrical post of the American Legion, plans were drawn and committees selected to take charge of the installation of new officers and dinner-dance to be held at the Statler Hotel in the ballroom on October 28th.

McEvoy With Universal

Edward L. McEvoy, former RKO district manager and recently with Select Attractions as general sales manager and vice-president, has joined Universal as a special representative. Temporarily he will remain at the New York office.

Variety Clubs Active in Field

The revived Albany, N. Y., Tent No. 9, recently authorized by the National Tent to regain its charter, will hold a formal organization meeting at the Ten Eyck Hotel on Monday, October 13th. At this time, permanent officers will be elected and headquarters selected.

Temporary officers, pending permanent selections next week are: Moe A. Silver, Warner Circuit zone manager, temporary chairman, Herman Ripps, MGM branch manager, secretary, Louis R. Golding, Fabian divisional branch manager, treasurer. On the board of directors temporarily are Si Fabian and J. Meyer Schine.

A drive for out-of-state members for the Variety club of Detroit was conducted during the convention of the Allied Theatres of Michigan, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Following the Allied banquet Wednesday night the Variety club was host to delegates at a novelty program followed by dancing at its headquarters. Dave Flayer is chairman of the membership committee.

In Columbus, Ohio, Virgil A. Jackson, head of the Central States Theatres, and chief barker of the local Variety club, left for Hollywood last week where he will extend a formal invitation to Warners to hold the world premiere of "The Male Animal" in Columbus, since the locale of the story is the Ohio State University there, of which Elliott Nugent and James Thurber are alumni. Mr. Nugent is also directing the film.

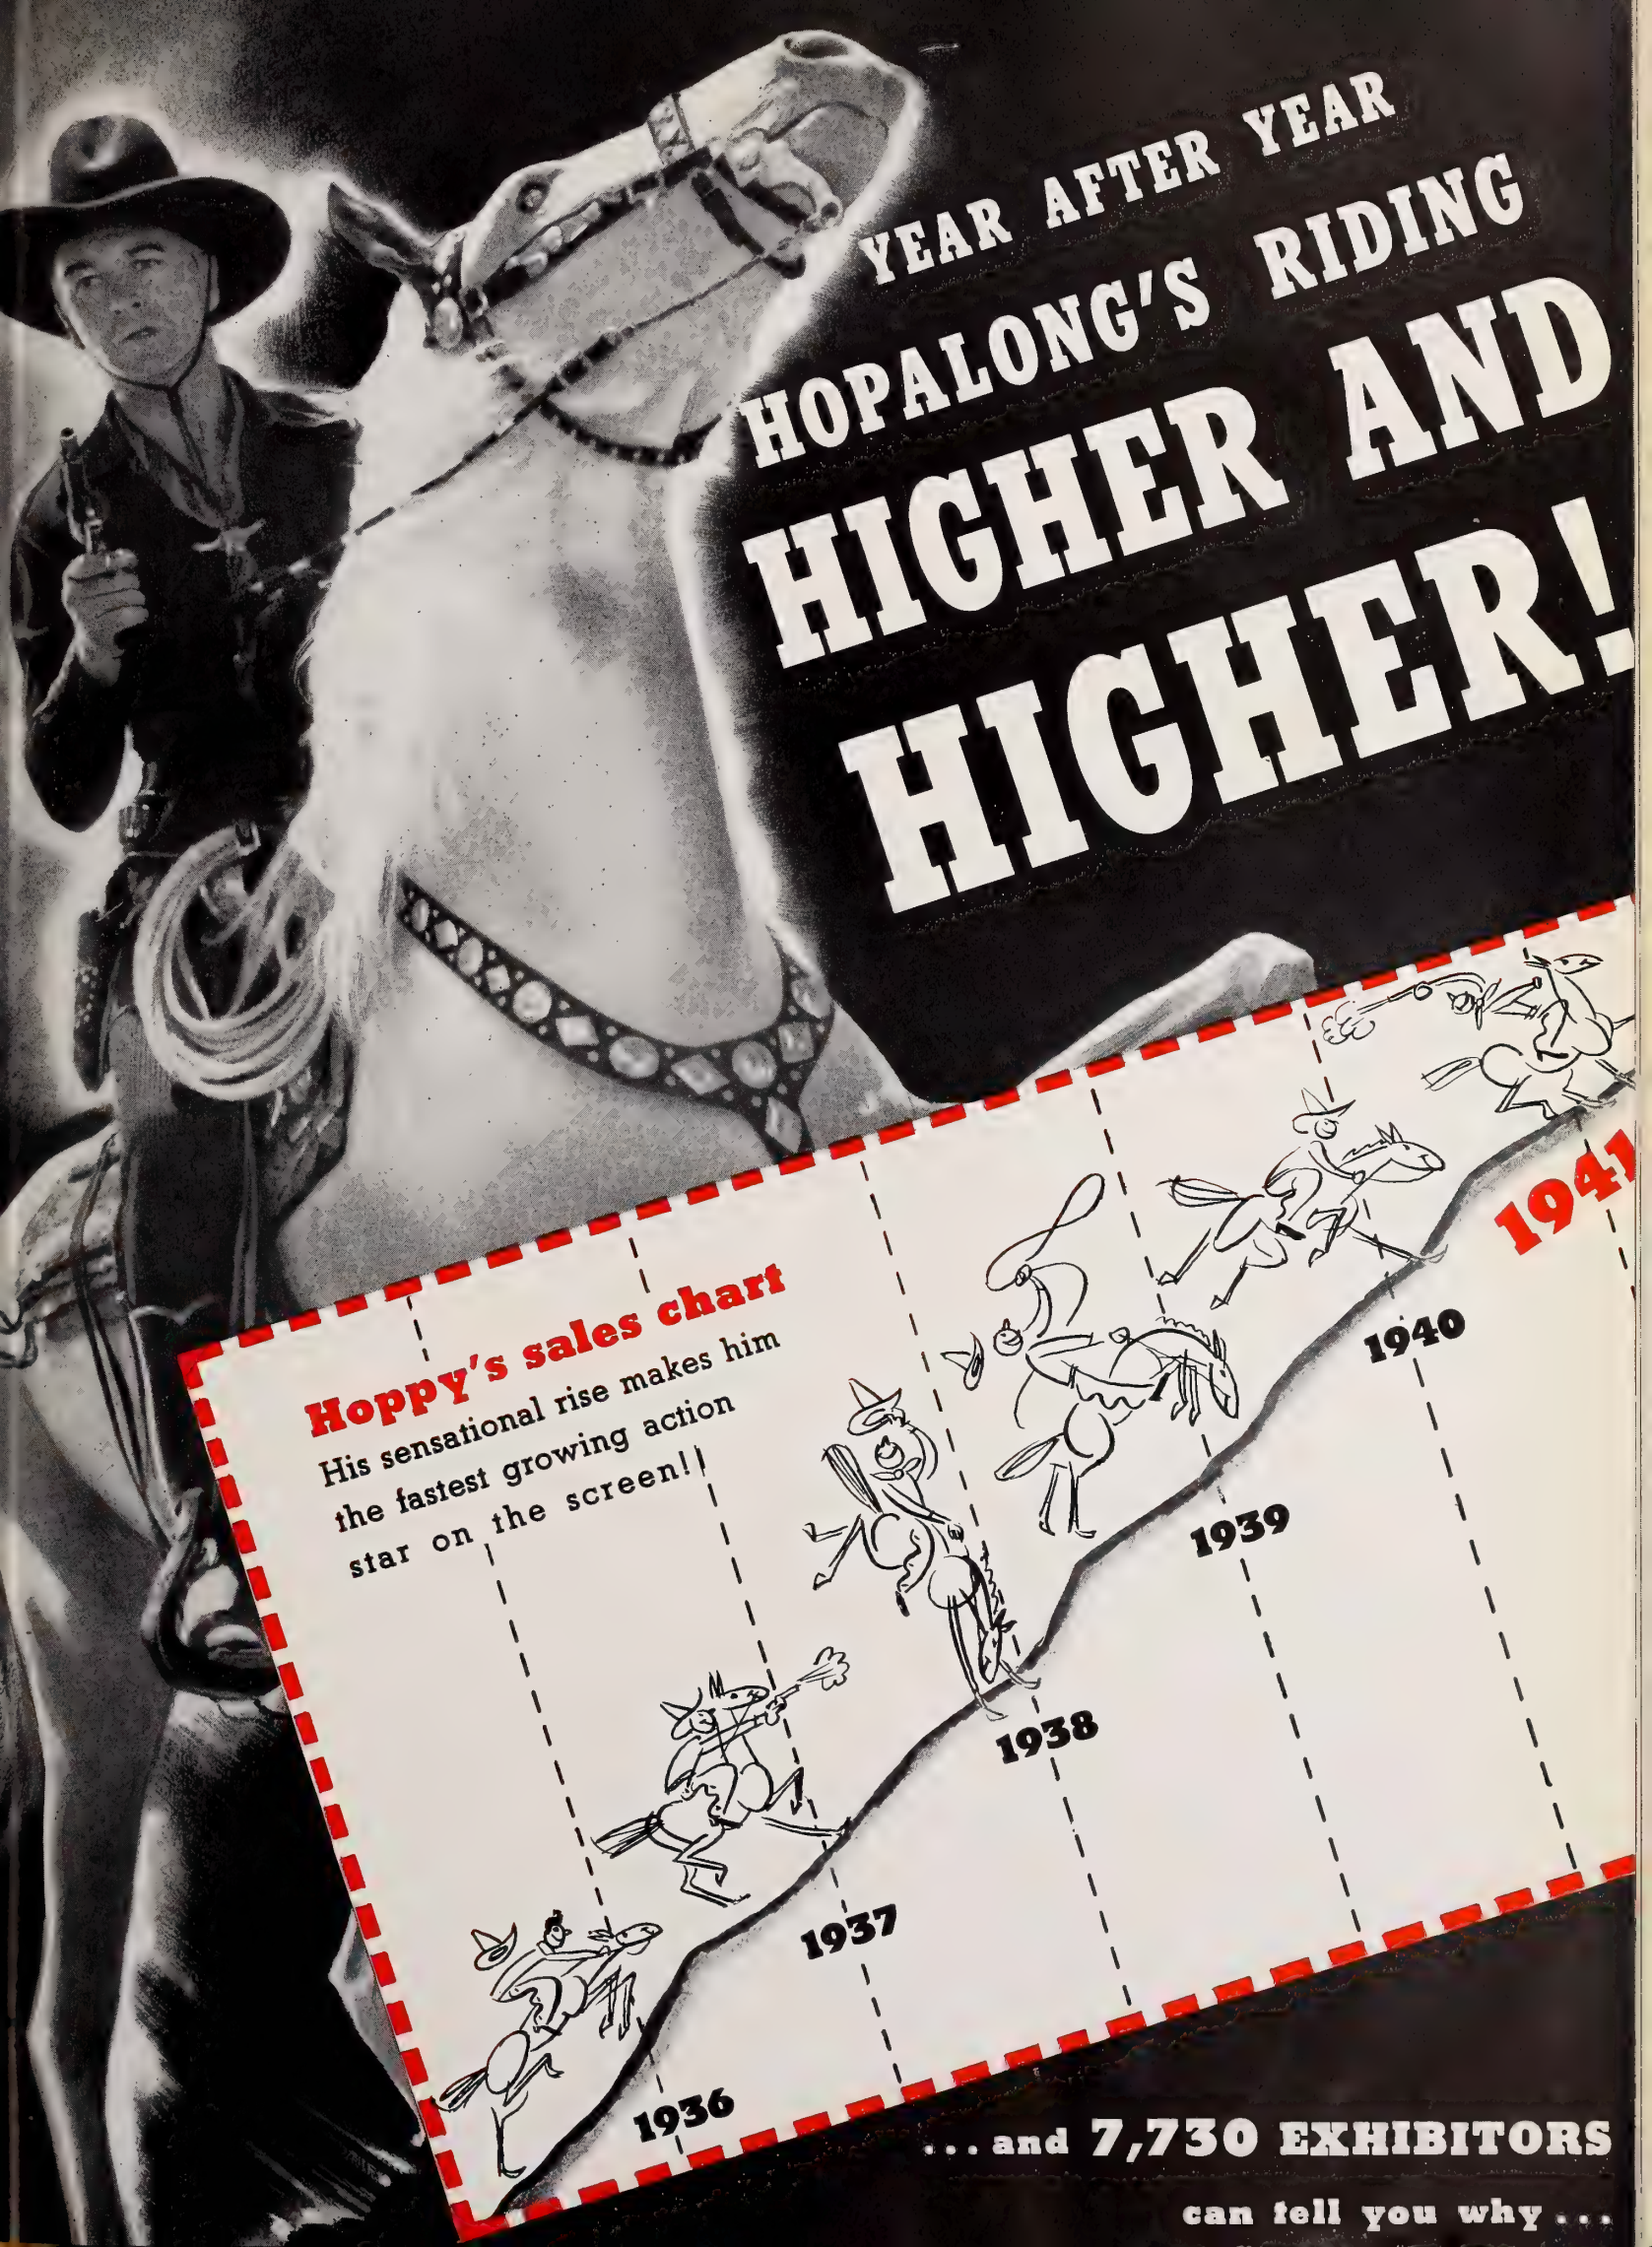
Honor Clark and Hendel

The James P. Clark testimonial dinner, to be held October 27th at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel under auspices of the Philadelphia Variety club, is expected to break all records for attendance. Started as an all-industry affair, to mark Mr. Clark's advancement to the chairmanship of the City Democratic Committee, it is beginning to take on the aspect of a city and state dinner. Mr. Clark is head of Horlacher's Film Delivery Service and operates an independent exchange.

In Columbus, Ohio, barkers of the Variety club gave a buffet dinner Monday night in honor of James Hendel, former United Artists salesman in that territory, who has been made Cleveland branch manager for the company. The committee in charge of the affair included Al Redman, Pete Wood, John Murphy and Russ Bovim.

Other Chapters Active

The St. Louis tent of the Variety club raised $18,262 among theatres in the area for the USO, it was announced last week.



The chapter will move into its new quarters in the Coronado Hotel this week, and will formally dedicate them with a dance October 18th. Plans are also being formulated for a public dance, using two big name bands on a local orchestra, for the latter part of November in the St. Louis Municipal auditorium. Funds raised at this affair will be used toward defraying expenses of the building of a structure for crippled persons, the club's philanthophic enterprise at this time.

Two pictures in color, "Variety Goes to Dallas," and "Barkers Meet in Atlantic City," were projected last week at the Hotel Book-Cadillac quarters of the Detroit Variety club at festivities opening this season's programs.

The Boston Variety club will hold a theatre party October 21st for the new Olsen and Johnson show, "Crazy House," the proceeds of which will go to the club's charity fund. It was also decided at the executive committee meeting to publish a year book at the end of the year.

U.S. COURT DECLARES MINNESOTA'S BLOCKS-OF-5 BAN IS CONSTITUTIONAL

Distributors Delay Decision on Request to Federal Court for Relief from Decree; Sears Announces No Warner Selling

Speculation over what will the majors do, now, to upset Minnesota's anti-consent decree law, was pronounced in distributors' New York home offices and Minneapolis exchange, this week, after a St. Paul judge, last Saturday, not only denied the majors' petition for a temporary injunction against the law, but also called it constitutional.

The majors' attack on the statute which hits blocks-of-five sales and compels distributors to offer all of their features for sale, is thereby halted. The case was generally considered a test and may unloose similar legislation which had been under consideration in other states.

The more optimistic among the majors' sales and legal representatives had expected a favorable reply to the Minnesota petition, whereupon they would proceed with selling features in blocks of five, as prescribed by the consent decree, and their lawyers would go ahead to a second step; a petition for a permanent injunction and a ruling that the law is unconstitutional.

The decree-bound majors filed their suit for the temporary injunction in the Ramsey County District Court, St. Paul, some months ago, joined at the time by United Artists, whose method of selling is by individual film—a method proscribed by the law, which compels majors to offer a season's product en masse, with a 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

Decision on Action Delayed

In New York, Tuesday, following a meeting of majors' chief counsel, a spokesman said no decision on action had been reached, and none would be made for a while. At the meeting was David Shearer, Minneapolis legal representative for some of the companies who had come East immediately, with copies of the decision by District Judge Hugo Hanft, of the Ramsey County Court.

One speculation was that the companies, in order to sell their films in Minnesota, could ask Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, in New York Federal Court, for an order relieving them of the obligation to observe the decree in Minnesota. Although the majors in the decree are allowed to sell to their affiliates in the old manner (Paramount to Minnesota Amusement, for instance), they have been prevented from doing business on new films with the many independents in the state.

Those independents who are members of the Allied of the Northwest, which drew up, supported, and pushed the law through the legislature, this week, as for some weeks past, are showing signs of wanting product denied to them by the law. In fact, Tuesday, the unit's legislative committee was reported, from Minneapolis, to be in session, following Judge Hanft's decision—and the report said also that they might request the majors to seek relief from the decree in the New York Court.

The legislative committee disclosed no action. Spokesmen indicated the unit was awaiting a move by the majors. The committee was to meet again, shortly.

SUNDAY FILM LAWS UNAFFECTED BY ARMY

The construction of new Army camps, the influx of soldiers and war maneuvers throughout the Carolinas has had little effect on the question of Sunday film showings in the communities, towns, hamlets throughout that section.

At Rock Hill, S. C., authorities refused to permit Sabbath showings for some 15,000 soldiers participating in Army war games, and Silver City officials of that state declined to take any formal notice of a Sunday show petition signed and submitted by 750 citizens, after previously declaring Sunday performances illegal.

However, in York, N. C., local theatres will be allowed to open on Sunday during the Army maneuvers in that area, while in Thomasville Sunday movies were permitted for the past three weeks for the benefit of the USO drive. In Ashboro, N. C., the City council held a special session and adopted an ordinance banning Sunday movies.

The majors can push their fight further by appealing next to the Minnesota Supreme Court. If they do so, their selling will still be withheld.

It was said in New York that the majors, while feeling the practical course would be an appeal to the New York Federal Court for relief from the decree instead of pushing the fight against the law, also feel that success of the Minnesota drive against the decree may lead dissident groups in other states to have similar laws enacted; laws the majors could not defeat without a series of appeals from court to higher court, and which they would be thus forced to observe by again and again going to the New York Court for relief. The end would be nullification of the decree in many, if not all, states and much confusion in methods of selling, with resultant trouble to the majors' distributors and accounting departments.

Gradwell Sears, Warners general sales manager, on Tuesday said his company would not sell films in Minnesota, and that, whatever course it did take, it would be taken without consultation with other companies. His statement was prompted by a telegram from T. E. Mortensen, publisher of the Minnesota amusement journal, Greater Amusements, who had said:

". . . already, many 'A' theatres in the more important situations in the state, and subsequent run houses in the larger cities, face immediate closing due to lack of suitable new product."

The text of Mr. Sears' reply follows, in part:

"I have attended no meetings in connection with Minnesota law nor do I propose to attend any. Whatever course of action decided upon by this company as to its future course of business in Minnesota will be done independently and without meeting with anyone. We are disappointed in this ruling by the court but this has not changed the advice of our counsel that such legislation is unconstitutional and since this ruling is merely a preliminary ruling we feel we must be guded by such advice until a final ruling is made by the highest court and pending such ruling we feel we must conform to our national methods of distribution as approved and laid down by the Government in the consent decree."

Immediately following Judge Hanft's decision, which occupies 29 pages, and which states that economic and social changes have rendered valid a law which 10 or 20 years ago might have been unconstitutional—Northwest Allied termed the decision a "signal victory," and called the legislative committee meeting already mentioned.

The Judge's decision actually applied to only one petitioner, Paramount, although observers in St. Paul said the legal procedure was such the decisions on the other petitioners would be the same, with perhaps a memorandum on the special problems of United Artists.

Some pertinent excerpts from Judge Hanft's decision follow:

"The legislature is primarily the judge of the necessity of the law. The constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large or upon any substantial group of people.

"It is not a denial of due process to adjust legislation to meet a local evil resulting from business practices and superior economic power, even though the advantages and power are largely due to the fact persons affected do business in other states. . . ."

Distributors Discriminate

"In a position to dominate the industry by virtue of their individual powerful organizations and vast holdings, it would tax the credulity of this court to the breaking point to assume that the eight major producers, of whom six are plaintiffs in these actions, would not use it to their aggrandizement, but would lay aside profit considerations and distribute their wares solely in the interest of the public and impartially as between independent exhibitors and those theatres owned or controlled by the producer-distributors. The mainspring motivating the independent exhibitor is also the profit angle, but he is a pigmy compared with the eight major producers.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that for years producers and distributors discriminated in many ways against the independent exhibitor. Chief cause of complaint was the method of block booking pursued, compelling the exhibitor to take what the producer saw fit to offer him, or fail to get the desirable features. There was rank discrimination in favor of theatres owned or controlled by producer-distributors.

"Efforts of legislatures to relieve the situation of independent exhibitors floundered on the right of inviolability of the right of contract."

Jewish Drive Starts

The fifth merged campaign of the New York and Brooklyn Federations of Jewish Charities got under way Tuesday night with a dinner in the Hotel Commodore, New York. The drive will benefit 116 hospitals, child care, family welfare and other social agencies affiliated with the federations. Wendell L. Willkie was the principal speaker at the dinner and David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of Loew's, Inc., and Major Albert Warner were named co-chairmen of the amusement division.

MORE INDEPENDENTS ADD VOTES TO ALLIED'S 'NATIONAL UNITY' PLAN

Board To Meet October 22nd with Approval of 11 Units for 'Liaison Committee'; MPTOA Bulletin Seeks 'Cooperation'

Having secured overwhelming support for its proposed "liaison committee" to cooperate with other elements of the motion picture industry to obtain unity and defend the industry against outside attacks, the directors of National Allied States Association announced from Washington this week they would meet on October 22nd, in Pittsburgh, to weigh results of the plebescite taken by mail among the units after the proposal was rejected by vote of convention delegates early last month in Philadelphia.

The meeting October 22nd will be in conjunction with the annual convention of the Allied of Western Pennsylvania.

Rejected by Connecticut

Only Connecticut Allied rejected the proposal. New Jersey Allied qualified its acceptance with three provisions, that the directors pass upon the committee's actions, that actions of the all-industry committee be subject to vote of all groups represented by it, and that Allied not suffer adverse publicity by the committee's moves. New England Allied, surprisingly, in view of the opposition voiced at the convention by Nate Yamins, Fall River exhibitor, and National Allied director, approved the liaison committee; but, with the Eastern Pennsylvania Allied, rejected the third paragraph of the plan, calling for the all-industry committee.

Latest unit to approve was Northwest Allied, in a special meeting at Minneapolis, Friday, October 3rd. Texas and Michigan were to be heard from at mid-week.

Meanwhile, another national exhibitor organization, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, put its weight back of the Allied directors' efforts to appoint a committee which will work for an all-industry group. The MPTOA endorsement was contained in a lengthy bulletin over the signature of Ed Kuykendall, president, who, however, did not mention Allied by name.

In addition to those mentioned, other Allied units which to date approved the "liaison committee" are the Illinois Allied, the Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and upper Michigan, the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, the Allied Theatre Owners of the District of Columbia, and the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio.

The rejection by the Connecticut Allied also carried a vote of confidence in the organization's officers—this coming after the national officers had resigned following the convention because they felt the rejection of the committee represented a vote against their administration. Their resignation was not accepted by the board which then ordered the poll of individual units, refusing to take the convention vote as representative.

The delay in return of the Texas vote was attributed to the mailing of ballots by that unit.

Noting the overwhelming approval by 11 of 12 units, up to Monday, Allied's board last week, in special bulletin announcing they would meet for action October 22nd, said:

"The national officers are gratified by the splendid response to the request for action by the regional associations on the resolution for a national joint committee. Within the time suggested, 12 units have met and considered the resolution. This performance is unparalleled in exhibitor history."

Regarding Northwest Allied's approval of the "liaison committee," Harold Field, chairman of that unit's executive committee, said this week the unit particularly favored the third paragraph of the plan, asking an intra-industry committee. That paragraph, rejected by the New England and the Eastern Pennsylvania groups, was particularly assailed by Mr. Yamins, both at the convention and afterward. He said an intra-industry committee would probably be dominated by the distributors, because Allied would be outvoted.

Michigan To Act

Reaction of Michigan Allied was expected this week, following a three-day convention at Detroit's Hotel Book-Cadillac, which began Monday. Ray Branch, president, said before the convention, he favored the unity plan, adding:

"We of this industry have a lot of common problems to solve. Too many opinions are not so good when it comes to quick decisions which must be made for the industry as a whole."

Other speakers were A. Montague, Columbia; Arthur Kelly, UA; Abram Myers; H. M. Richey, MGM, and Claude Lee, Paramount. Mr. Branch and all officers were reelected.

Warnings that heavier taxes might be imposed on the industry, and against the Senate probe, as indicative of a serious trend, were delivered Tuesday, by Mr. Branch, who also, in noting the many distributor representatives present, praised "unity." He added:

"Right now, we are closer to harmony in Michigan, than any other state."

Other speakers Tuesday were M. A. Rosenberg, of the Western Pennsylvania Allied: Arthur Greenblatt, sales manager of Producers Releasing Corporation; G. W. Erdman, attorney.

Mr. Branch on Tuesday also denounced the Minnesota anti-decree law, noting the certain shortage of product.

That Allied would be outvoted, if an intra-industry committee formed—an opinion shared by the Eastern Pennsylvania and New England Allied units, in rejecting the third paragraph of the plan—was echoed by the Connecticut Allied, which rejected all facets of the idea. Dr. J. B. Fishman, its president, asserted:

"We believe the interests of the independent exhibitor would be completely submerged in an arrangement of this kind."

Endorsing unity in the industry in defense against outside aggression, Edward Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, in a general bulletin dated Monday, recalled the unity the industry's representatives displayed in fighting the Senate tax committee's sudden 15 per cent admissions impost. He said:

"This was a great demonstration of industry coordination and cooperation which can be achieved when there is a genuine community of interests, an absence of industry politics and self-serving publicity, and an unselfish willingness to work together for our own protection.

Industry Does Its Share

"The MPTOA group of exhibitor associations is proud of doing its full share in this vital effort, but we also recognize and appreciate the magnificent cooperation of the other exhibitor associations and organizations in the industry not members of MPTOA in the common cause, without whose able and unhesitating help this crushing tax burden may well have gone through. Moreover, any number of individual theatre owners on their own initiative participated in the effort most effectively."

He then added:

"Several schemes are being promoted for all-industry organization for "national unity." No one can disagree with the principle of a united front in this industry against scurrilous attacks and malicious efforts to smear our business for political publicity such as are now going on, and for self-protection. No one can disagree in principle with the idea of working out our industrial and trade problems by inter-industry negotiation and voluntary agreement, rather than by lawsuits and statutory regulations. These fundamentals have been adhered to without deviation by MPTOA exhibitors for many years."

MPTOA Cooperation Cited

According to Mr. Kuykendall, the MPTOA "never encountered any great difficulty in cooperating with other exhibitor organizations and with the distributors and producers whenever our interests are identical"—and he assailed a "minority frequently more interested in playing exhibitor politics than in the constructive, practical, solution of our difficulties."

Mr. Kuykendall asked, however, for a "program of what ought to be done" and what is possible to do—"before any new elaborate organizations are setup to issue decrees and run the business."

Meanwhile, in New York, the meeting between Herman Wobber, general sales manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, and a committee of three from the MPTOA, was postponed indefinitely last week, when Mr. Wobber was forced to fly to the Coast. The committee was to discuss exhibitor complaints against majors' new season sales policies. On it were Herman Levy, New Haven; Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia; Max A. Cohen, New York.

Mr. Kuykendall had previously publicly decried alleged distributor malpractices in some localities, and appointed the committee to "trouble-shoot."

TWO-IN-ONE THEATRE BUILT

The opening of the novel Fox West Coast Grove theatre at Redlands startled southern California exhibitors last week.

The Grove theatre has been built on the stage of the Redlands theatre, a 1,500-seat first run house. The new theatre has its own entrance, a balcony of 140 seats and a floor seating 342. Dick Meers manages both theatres.

The use of the stage space may lead Fox West Coast to build similar theatres for newsreel and second run houses, it was reported.

EXHIBITORS WANT INDUSTRY PEACE, PICTURES AND PROSPERITY: RICHEY

MGM Reiterates Original Boost for Allied Plan of "National Unity"; Sees Film Industry Wholly in Favor of Basic Idea

The all-industry unity plan, a principal topic of the convention of Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan at Detroit this week, received a new boost from the distributors when Henderson M. Richey, speaking for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on Wednesday, repeated his company's endorsement of the inter-industry committee first proposed at the National Allied meeting in Philadelphia.

Unity is much in the mind of the majority of exhibitors, Mr. Richey told the delegates at Detroit's Book-Cadillac Hotel.

Citing observations from recent tours of the country he said "The majority of thoughtful theatre owners who have been in the business a length of time and acquired substantial investments in their theatres are growing weary of the constant turmoil.

"If the majority of the 12,000 independents over the United States could have their voices heard they would earnestly declare they feel it good business today today to have peace, pictures and prosperity," Mr. Richey said.

Sees Majority In Favor

Those who question the motives behind the unity move, he said, are in the minority. Most exhibitors and distributors, he declared are ready to welcome an earnest effort to form a solid front.

"I see nothing strange that a question of unity should be number one in the minds of so many people at this time because I believe that the industry is being driven closer and closer together by the emergency," the Metro representative said. Attacks from outsiders, confiscatory taxation, loss of competitors to competing pastimes, the consent decree and other adversities have brought the industry to feel common responsibility, Mr. Richey said.

"All of these things have brought us to a realization that the other fellow's problem is sometimes our problem, and certainly your problem is many times his problem," Mr. Richey said.

The dangers of disorganization are greater than ever before, he warned. They should increase the realization that the problems of motion pictures must be solved by the motion picture industry, in order to prevent imposition from outside of settlements that may injure the entire industry.

MGM, he told the Michigan exhibitors, is looking forward to the establishment of better relationships within the industry and will sit in any conference to this end.

The unity movement, he reported, is growing among exhibitors in every section, and predicted that it soon will keynote trade activities. "I don't believe any small group can stop it," he said, "nor do I believe that there are many, if any exhibitors, in the United States who after thinking the matter through can oppose a better unity in this business."

"Frankly, I don't believe such a conference or permanent working organization will over night solve every problem in the industry. But I know this, you have proven it here in Michigan, that the closer the various elements in this business get together, the more they understand each other's problems, the nearer will they come to solution," Mr. Richey asserted.

Differences of opinion are bound to exist between buyer and seller, he warned, but added that in no other industry are they aired on the front pages of newspapers. "Too long we have hidden behind the alibi that the motion picture business is different," he observed, "yet certainly our marketing problem is no different than any other business."

The more the seller appreciates the problems of the buyer, in the film industry, as in other enterprises and the buyer realizes the seller has problems too, and that neither can be unreasonably successful at the expense of the other, the sooner these problems will take their proper place as business discussions, he said.

Outlines Selling Plan

He repeated the injunction, frequently voiced by MGM, that dissatisfied exhibitors meet distributors in conciliation, or use the arbitration machinery. He also outlined the new MGM selling plan.

The principal problem facing all branches of the industry, the exhibitor counsel asserted, is to merchandise pictures. Competition today requires that all pictures be sold, he said. Proper advertising and exploitation must make every playing date profitable at the boxoffice, he contended. He described the "Show Builder" trailer which MGM is sending through the field with exploitation men to advise small exhibitors on advertising and promotion methods.

A rebirth of public interest is at hand, he predicted and he expressed the conviction that the Washington investigation had aided the industry by making the public more aware of film contributions in the national emergency.

In closing he urged exhibitors to remember that "the American public loves movies more than some of those who are engaged in the business. They prove it by their attendance."

Exhibitors, Like Film's Leaders, Should Interpret Industry Motives, Says Lee

America's motion picture exhibitors on Tuesday were exhorted to interpret the character, ideals and motives of the film industry to people in their communities as an answer to the Senate subcommittee investigation of the screen. The theatremen received the message from Claude F. Lee, Director of Public Relations for Paramount Pictures, in an address to the conference of Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan in session in Detroit.

"All the people I know in the motion picture business," Mr. Lee said to the convention delegates, "are good Americans, and the only 'isms' they love are Americanism and patriotism.

"We must continue to believe in and express ourselves in favor of our Americanism with the same fervor and energy as does the fanatical propagandist of anti-Americanism.

"Equally with industry leadership, the community exhibitor shares the responsibility of interpreting to the world the motives and conduct of the institution of the motion picture. Together they give to this business its personality and its very good character. For a good character to succeed in establishing the fact of good character is a matter of course."

The services rendered by the film industry to the communities of the land were described by Mr. Lee, who cited the growth of the screen from a nickelodeon to a giant industry, its role as public pleader for the American way of life, as an interpreter of this nation's ideals to people all over the world and the performance of the screen as the tireless provider of escape and entertainment for a busy, hard-working and often worried population.

"This industry has been good to us," he concluded. "Let us be good to the industry."

Two Receive MGM Awards

Marking the first international Honor Roll award in the year-old history of Metro Goldwyn Mayer's cooperative service sheet, the company has awarded gold buttons to R. J. Brenner, managing director for the company in Chile, and Mrs. Dorothy Shaw Faust, wife of the First Secretary of the American Embassy in that country, for the promotion of "Ziegfeld Girl" at its Metro theatre, Santiago, showing.

Vreeland Appointed Director

Frank Thorpe Vreeland, 11 years in the motion picture industry, was appointed dramatic director of WPTZ, Philco's television commercial station in Philadelphia, it was announced by E. N. Alexander, station manager. Also added to the staff's production department are Ernest Walling, formerly production manager of the Barter Theatre of Abingdon, Va., famous for its policy of accepting livestock and crops as paid admissions; and Gilbert Gould Brown, formerly a sound engineer for R.K.O.

Broadcasters Hit Two-Station Ban Proposed by FCC

The charge that it was attempting to invoke a "law-making power" which Congress never intended it to have were leveled against the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, D. C., on Monday in argument on its proposed prohibition against any single interest owning more than one station in any area.

Attorneys for the National Broadcasting Company, the Buffalo Broadcasting Corporation, the Oregonian Publishing Company, the Crosley Corporation and individuals and corporations operating more than one station in their communities under licenses renewed for years by the Commission, protested the legality, equity and desirability from any point of view of the proposed reversal of all previous practice in the issuance of station licenses.

"Contrary to Public Interest"

Representing the National Broadcasting Company, Duke M. Patrick, its counsel, said that any rule forbidding the ownership of more than one station in any locality by any entity under any circumstances would be contrary to the public interest, and an exercise of authority not conferred on the commission by Congress, which instead had defined specifically its licensing powers.

Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former assistant attorney general, who appeared on behalf of Stations WIND and WJJD in Chicago, contended that regardless of the FCC's legal power to promulgate the rule, issuance of such a blanket prohibition of multiple ownership would be beyond the bounds of equity within which law must find its source.

Similar arguments in behalf of two stations in San Francisco. of which Earl G. Anthony is the licensee, were presented orally by Louis G. Caldwell.

Condemns AFM Action

W. T. Burford, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Federation of Labor, strongly condemns the action of the local of the American Federation of Musicians in attempting to impose restrictions on broadcasting and recordings by Royal Canadian Air Force bands.

The Toronto local has banned use of the RCAF and Royal Canadian Mounted Police bands from the Canadian Broadcasting Company's network and from making records for use overseas. CBC officials declared that the local had threatened to cut off all exchange features with CBS, NBC and Mutual if military bands were used on CBC. A Government source disclosed that the Toronto local had demanded $12,000 in extra wage allowances if radio programs were to be transcribed for shipment to troops overseas.

FCC Warned on Freedom

Divorce of newspapers and broadcasting stations was urged upon the Federal Communications Commission last week during hearings on newspaper-ownership, with Professor C. J. Friedrich of Harvard University warning that the ownership of stations by papers might result in a drift toward "monopoly in opinion," the first step, he said, toward totalitarianism.

Morris L. Ernst, counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union, also appeared before the committee, declaring newspaper owned stations a threat to freedom of speech, possibly leading to Government ownership.

Rumford Award Goes to Zworykin for Electrons

Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin, associate director of RCA Laboratories, associated with the Iconoscope and Kinescope tubes for electronic television, was this week selected for the Rumford Award, by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and was to receive it at the Society's annual meeting Wednesday night, in Boston, Massachusetts.

Consisting of two medals, one gold and one silver, the award goes to Dr. Zworykin in recognition of his work in developing the RCA Electron Microscope, an instrument which permits the magnification of particles up to 100,000 diameters. In making the award to Dr. Zworykin, the Academy also called attention to his contributions in the fields of photo-cells and television.

The Rumford Award, established in 1796 by Count Rumford, originally Benjamin Thompson, is presented every two years for an important discovery or useful improvement in the fields of light or heat, made in any part of America.

British Appeal to Countrymen In Hollywood

The "British Colony" in Hollywood has been asked to contribute $250,000 to aid those in the industry back home who are sick, war-shocked and have be en "blitzed" out of home and business.

Directing an appeal to 83 players, writers and directors of British background in Hollywood, the Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund, of London, has asked that California's British motion picture colony join with those at home in observing "Cinema Day" on Saturday, October 18th, to assure continuance of the fund in England, especially for the support of "Glebelands," the British home for the needy.

Frank Tilley, writing in behalf of the fund, reminds Britishers engaged in the film business in this country that England "is your only big non-domestic market."

The size of Hollywood's "British Colony" is indicated somewhat by the following list of those from England and related lands now at coast studios to whom the fund addressed its appeal:

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Add New Faces

When Producer David Hempstead completes "Joan of Paris" he'll be around to see you exhibitors who voted in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Stars of Tomorrow poll.

Because this young man, whose last previous job was a little number called "Kitty Foyle," is in dead earnest about this "new faces" thing and counts on you to back up your convictions as concretely as he's backing up his.

If you looked closely at "Kitty Foyle"—and who didn't?—you observed that Ginger Rogers' name was the only signature in the cast which meant marquee money.

You'll have to look even more closely at the cast of "Joan of Paris" to find a surefire name, and you won't find it.

At that point you shouldn't forget to recall that Miss Rogers' "Kitty Foyle" stint won her the Academy Award.

The two names at top of the "Joan of Paris" cast are Michele Morgan and Paul Henreid. If they sound a bit familiar, it's because you've been reading about them in the publicity. You haven't been seeing them on your screen, unless you've been running French films, in which Mlle. Morgan has had some experience, or the British "Night Train," in which Mr. Henreid performed under another name which has undergone several alterations to become Henreid.

And if you think "Joan of Paris" sounds like the title of a play or book you've heard about some time, you're wrong again—it's an original and unpublished story.

It is a picture with no more pre-fabricated marketability than this that Producer Hempstead is to bring to you with a personal challenge that you proceed forthwith to demonstrate your enthusiasm for the idea of popularizing new faces—stars of and for tomorrow.

But don't jump to the conclusion that the young man—32 years old on October 2nd—is simply and somewhat belligerently passing the buck to you exhibitors.

Among the players supporting the unknown stars are Thomas Mitchell, May Robson and Laird Cregar, a trio equivalent in terms of entertainment guarantee to just about any Four Alarm star you can name offhand.

And direction of the film is being attended to by Robert Stevenson, whose last endeavors in behalf of your box office supplied you with "Back Street."

For subject matter, "Joan of Paris" utilizes the appeal of timeliness, Nazi-Occupied France affording the setting and some happenings between a Parisian bar-maid and a Free French flier in the R. A. F. supplying the complications.

Nor is that all that Producer Hempstead is going to be bringing to your door and talking to you about.

In process of evolution as yet, and subject to such handling as the possibilities may permit and warrant, is the matter of a trick start for the picture, by means of which newsreel and newscast will be utilized to take the audience at once from the interests of today's dispatches into the thick of the fiction plot. As planned up to now, this will require your cooperation in a most showmanly and engaging manner.

At this point, with about six weeks more to go on a 50-day shooting schedule, Producer Hempstead has 12 cities on his visiting list. That's a start. If the visiting begets the interest anticipated for it, he'll go on from there and on and on.

"Joan of Paris" is the producer's second venture for RKO-Radio.

On the strength of his first, "Kitty Foyle," the company has allocated this one a larger budget. That is known as "giving the colt his head." After a career in which he produced six pictures for 20th Century-Fox—he had served as assistant to Nunnally Johnson prior to that—he's pouring all he's got into the present undertaking.

He's backing his faith in new faces—stars of tomorrow—with all the chips on his side of the table.

He'll be around to see you when it's your turn to kick in with yours.

He's giving the Stars of Tomorrow theory its first all-out trial.

Will you?

WARNER BROTHERS WRECK TRADITION

Never slaves to a tradition, the Brothers Warner this week wrecked another.

Since way-back-when, a producer electing to abandon an announced production has emulated the ostrich and hoped nobody'd notice.

This week Jack L. Warner announced that his studio would not make eight scheduled pictures!

They are, or were, "Kickoff", "Night Warning", "Across the Atlantic", "Fortunes of Mamie Q", "Murder With Music", "Three of a Kind", "Back Cats" and "Man Killer".

MGM at Peak

The House of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had nine productions in shooting stage at weekend, leading the studios in their summer-long drive in behalf of entertainment supply for a population now believed returning to the market with money in pocket and amusement in mind.

Tied for second place in the backlog sweepstakes were Warner Brothers and 20th Century-Fox, with five each, Columbia and RKO-Radio following with four pictures apiece, and Paramount paired with Universal back of these with three films in progress at each place.

Out from New York to look at rushes and confer with studio executives were William F. Rodgers of MGM, Herman Wobber, A. M. Botsford and Hal Horne of 20th Century-Fox, George Schaefer of RKO Radio and Herbert J. Yates of Republic.

(UA-Roach, 1941-42)

Collegiate Comedy

Hal Roach's third streamlined feature surpasses his second in screen worthiness and crowds his first, "Tanks a Million," in point of fitness for today's requirements. It supplies more marquee material than either of the oters, offering Frances Langford, Harry Langdon, Johnny Downs, Marjorie Woodworth and Noah Beery, Jr., for ad copy as well as entertainment.

The story utilizes without embarrassment the essentials of the "Charley's Aunt" pattern, modernizing the general idea profitably by placing the masquerading college boy in a girls' school as an enrollee pledged to avenge a publicity stunt committed by that institution at expense of his fraternity. The modernization is in the nature of an improvement and, although comparisons are for audiences to make, it was remarked by many present at the preview that the dependable old formula profited by the swift and agile handling administered by the Roach experts in brevity.

Four songs worked into the proceedings snap it up whenever a lull threatens.

Production and direction by LeRoy Prinz make every inch of film and line of dialogue click.

Walter G. Samuels and Charles Newman, who may never have seen or read "Charley's Aunt," supplied a writing or rewriting job up to scratch in every particular.

Previewed at the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, to a general audience which gave every indication of enjoying the show immensely.—William R. Weaver.

Candidates Class

(U. S. Marine Corps)

For Recruits

The Photographic Section of the U. S. Marine Corps has turned out a good, workmanlike job in "Candidates Class," designed to encourage young college graduates to enter the land, sea or air service of the Corps. Without any ballhoo, the 12-minute film, in concise, quick-moving fashion, explains how graduates can apply to their local Marine stations for entry; what credentials are necessary and what is required of them during the three-month training period before they become officers.

The picture was made at the Quantico base of the Marine Corps in Virginia, under the supervision of Captain W. M. Nelson, officer in charge. Lt. William A. Halpern directed the film; Sergeant Stanley Kops wrote the script and the photography was done by Staff Sergeant John Rogers and Private Donovan Raddatz. Corporal Morris R. Abrams did the editing and Richard Starke was narrator.

"Candidate Class" is available to exhibitors at no charge at local offices of Marine Corps Recruiting stations. The film may specially appeal to college students.—J. E. Samuelson.

Lend A Paw

(Disney-RKO Radio)

An Angel, A Devil and Pluto

The latest cinema brain child bearing the Disney imprint concerns Mickey Mouse, Pluto and a little kitten whose life Pluto has saved. A modern devil warns Pluto that the kitten is transplanting him in Mickey's home and affections, and advises him "not to be a sap." A traditional angel pleads with him to the contrary. The little kitten finally falls into a well, and Pluto is torn between good and evil. Good triumphs and the three are united in happy harmony. Colorful, charming and with the devil providing humor with his stream-lined slang advice, the picture is dedicated to the "Tail-wagger Foundation in recognition of its work in lending a paw to man's animal friends."—Running time, 8 minutes.—Irene Smolen.

SANDBURG TELLS STORY OF "BOMBER"

"Bomber" is an impressionistic documentary short produced by the Office of Emergency Management and sponsored by the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense for distribution to the thousands of theatres which have agreed to show defense films. Running eight minutes, it is distinguished by a poetic commentary written and narrated by Carl Sandburg. The bomber is glorified as "an angel of death" and one of the chief defensive weapons of free people. Although relatively few words are used in the narration, it is particularly effective and unusual. Also it fits in well with the scenes and the background music.

The scenes were all photographed at the Martin plant near Baltimore, which is building great numbers of military aircraft, especially the medium bomber B-26, which is the subject of this film. A plane is shown coming off the assembly line for its first test flight, and then various scenes show the parts used and the assembly. The short concludes with a bomber flying into the dawn, the words of Longfellow first applied to a ship, "Humanity with all its fears, with all its hopes of future years, is hanging breathless on thy fate!" and then a large "V" is flashed on the screen.—M.Q., Jr.

A Letter from Home

(United Artists)

Life in London

"A Letter from Home" is an English-made production, directed by Carol Reed and imported into this country for distribution by United Artists. It is designed, primarily, to present the British way of life in war-torn London. Opening with scenes of a letter from a London mother being read to two children safe from bombs, the film flashes from the various passages in the message and compares them with the events and duties of the English people. Noticeable throughout is the British penchant for understatement and it is from his factor that the picture derives most of its charm.—Running time, 16 minutes.—George Spires.

If you have ever wondered at the wide assortment of "prizes" shown by carnival concessionaires, you will get a perspective on the mixture of stolen merchandise in a jail at Hampton, New Brunswick.

Joseph B. Boudreau, 29, who toured with carnivals in the U. S. and Canada in the summer and is accused of having concentrated on thievery in the off season—collecting "prizes" for his wheel game, opening in the spring. Caught at Sussex, N. B., while burglarizing a general store, he was sent to the county jail for nine months, talking himself out of a longer prison stretch. But every night during the five months he was a "prisoner," he led his fellow "prisoners" on sorties into the surrounding country, breaking into warehouses, stores of all kinds, garages and factories. The party, usually of at least a half dozen, stole cars for transportation and stored the stolen jewelry, watches, silverwire, cutlery, glassware, radios, batteries, tires, fancy wares, lamps and even furniture, in their jail cells and in the jail yard. There had been no difficulty in leaving and returning to the jail; some of the bars were sawed through and fitted into place when not being used.

Police, after five months of a robbery epidemic, finally found the loot in the jail. Boudreau then did a vanishing act, but now he's back in jail, having been located in the Ohio state prison, doing a one to 20 years' term for breaking and entering at Cambridge, Ohio. The Ohio attorney general has turned him over to the Kings County sheriff for trial. They'll have to plug up the holes in his favorite hoosegow.

And now that the World's Series baseball games and their attendant stuntings are over, the inside story may be told about U. S. Army Private Murray Waldenburg, who got so much newspaper and photographic attention for having defended his favorite Brooklyn Dodgers before a superior officer at Camp Wheeler in Georgia. He can thank none other than a humble "buck private," Harry Blake, for all of that attention and for the furlough and free plane ride he enjoyed to the opening game in New York.

Private Blake, who, until induction last summer, spent many an hour around our city news desk on his duties as film and radio press agent, has been doing press relations work at Camp Wheeler, and, a few days before the World's Series opener, in a spirit of innocent merriment, sent a story about Private Walkenburg to New York sports writers, following up with a news wire to Associated Press. The Hearst Journal-American got hot on the subject and made a deal with Walkenburg's Brigadier-General Hester down in Georgia to haul Walkenburg to New York.

And that's how baseball heroes are born.

ARBITRATION APPEAL BOARD RULES REAL OWNERS MUST FILE CASES

Will Hear Amended Complaint On Merits; Columbus Operator Loses; New Cincinnati Action; Five Hearings Reported

The Appeal Board of motion picture arbitration tribunals deciding its fourth case on a technicality Monday ruled that arbitration complaints must be filed in the name of the corporate operator of a theatre, rather than by the manager, or a corporation officer acting as an individual.

The ruling reversed the decision of Morton J. Hall in the consolidated clearance actions against RKO and Warners by A. P. Papayanakos, operator of the American theatre, Canton, N. Y. The demands were the first cases filed at Albany. They named Schine's Strand theatre in Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The three members of the board conditioned their dismissal and assessment of costs against the complainant on the filing within ten days at the Albany tribunal of an amended complaint. When this is done, substituting the St. Lawrence Investors, Inc., legal owner of the American for Mr. Papayanakos as the complainant and filing a new submission to arbitration the Appeal Board agreed to consider the case on its merits.

New Appeal Seen

Entry of the new complaint and a second appeal ruling on the elimination of clearance ordered by the arbitrator is considered a matter of course.

Mr. Papayanakos started his action in March. The award was reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on July 19th and the appeal reported on August 9th.

Although Mr. Papayanakos signs contracts, manages the American and is vice president and treasurer of the St. Lawrence Corporation, all of whose stock is owned by his wife, the Appeal Board held he was not entitled to file an arbitration complaint except as an officer of the corporation. The original action was signed "American Theatre by A. P. Papayanakos."

Citing Section XXII of the decree, which requires that all parties sign a submission to the arbitration the Appeal Board wrote: "There must be a submission and the submission must be executed by the party who has a right to submit a controversy for arbitration under the consent decree.

"Under Section VIII of the decree there may be arbitration of controversies 'arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable. . . .' An exhibitor is defined in footnote 9 of Section III as follows: 'Exhibitor means any individual, partnership, unincorporated association or corporation engaged in the public exhibition of motion pictures in a theatre or theatres for profit.' Complainant is not an exhibitor within the meaning of Section VIII. St. Lawrence Investors, Inc., owns the theatre, receives the profits and pays the debts incurred in the course of operation. It is apparent that complainant is in actual charge of the operations of the corporation, but neither this nor the willingness of defendants' representatives to accept exhibition contracts signed by complainant as an individual can alter the situation. The corporation is the exhibitor; complainant is merely an officer or employee and as such has no right to institute arbitration proceedings under the Decree."

The Appeal Board received its twelfth case on Friday when the Sompru Amusement Company, operator of the Cort theatre in Somerville, N. J., appealed the decision of Paul Fitzpatrick in New York's 13 case. Mr. Fitzpatrick granted the Raritan Playhouse, at Raritan, N. J., a reduction from 21 to 7 days in the margin held by the Cort in a decision reported on September 27th. All of the Big Five were involved in the action.

Lose Columbus Plea

Anthony B. Dunlap, arbitrator of Cincinnati's second complaint this week dismissed the complaint of F. W. Rowlands operating the Parsons theatre in Columbus, O., that a 21 day clearance held by the Neth circuit's Markham is unreasonable. The Big Five were defendants. Complainant must pay the costs.

Wednesday Mr. Rowlands appealed his second arbitration complaint, filed in behalf of his Main theatre against Neth's Markham. On September 16th Herbert F. Koch, arbitrator, had dismissed the action after holding that the 21 day margin held by the Markham over the Main was reasonable. The case closely paralelled the Parsons action.

The Central States Corporation operating the Olentangy theatre in Columbus, O., filed a clearance demand at Cincinnati last week naming MGM, Warners, 20th Century-Fox RKO and the Hudson theatre. It is the fourth Cincinnati case and the first complaint since May.

The complaint asserts that a 14 day margin held by the Hudson is unreasonable, and forces the Olentangy to show pictures 66 days after first run. Until June, 1938, it charges, the two theatres played day and date at 52 days. The plaintiff seeks restoration of this status.

The first St. Louis arbitration opened Friday when Victor Thien, operator of the Palm theater, North St. Louis, testified in his complaint against 20th Centutry-Fox and Paramount that his clearance depended on whether the St. Louis Amusement Company, circuit, was operating the Aubert and Union theaters, competitive houses in his district.

Mr. Thien was the only witness at the opening hearing. It was until Thursday. Former Circuit Judge J. Wesley McAfee is arbitrator.

Mr. Thien claimed he was permitted to have films only after the Aubert. The Aubert, he contended, is further away from his theater than the Union, yet 33 days elapses after the second-run Union had exhibited the pictures before he obtains them. He said his admission scale is approximately the same as the Union's, but higher than the Aubert, which he said, occasionally has triple features for 15 cents. He asks clearance between the Union and Aubert. Mr. Thien said that twice since 1928 he has had satisfactory clearance because the Aubert and Union were closed.

Three Philadelphia Hearings

The Philadelphia board tackled three complaints last week with hearings on two to be completed this week. Testimony was completed last Thursday in Case No. 7, the clearance complaint of N. Herman Bornstein, in behalf of his suburban Hatboro, theatre Arbitrator S. Eugene Kuen, Jr., local attorney, reserved decision. The complaint is against the Big Five and Warners' Grove theatre.

It was agreed by both parties that the houses are in competition with each other. The arbitrator visited both houses, the expenses to be shared by both parties. Mr. Bornstein, Ben Rogers, manager of the Hatboro; Pop Graves, manager of the Grove; Salem E. Applegate, Metro sales manager; Ulrik F. Smith, Paramount branch manager; and Charles Zagrens, RKO branch manager testified.

Hearing on Case No. 8, clearance complaint of Columbus Stamper for the Great Northern theatre after all-day sessions last Tuesday and Friday, was continued until October 9th.

At the suggestion of Stuart Aarons all parties agreed that "any rule made by the arbitrator in this case shall be binding." Observers see in such an agreement a move to forestall an appeal.

Mr. Stamper testified that he was not concerned with the seven day clearance Warners' Keystone enjoys over his Great Northern. He asked that the 21 days clearance of the circuit's Strand, which he considers a competitive house be cut to 14 days.

The first defense witness was Salem E. Applegate, Metro sales manager, who testified for the intervening theatres. Witnesses for the distributors were to be heard Thuresday.

Case No. 9, the clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis, and the Broad Theatre before Calvin H. Rankin, was continued until October 14th after an all-day session on September 29th. The complaint against RKO, Paramount, Warners and Warners' Logan, Bromley and Grange theatres, and William C. Hunt's Rockland Theatre involves the entire clearance set-up in North Philadelphia and Germantown.

Sees Independents Improved by Decree

A 33 1/3 per cent business increase was recorded by Astor Pictures in New York during the nine months ended September 30th over the corresponding period last year, Robert M. Savini, president of the corporation has announced.

Mr. Savini attributed the increase to the slowness of many theatres in closing new season deals under the consent decree, which, he said, has left increased playing time open for independent productions.

Ruth Schwerin, formerly eastern publicity representative for Sol Lesser and later handling publicity and exploitation for "That Uncertain Feeling," has joined the Tom Fisdale Agency in New York doing fashion publicity.

New York High Schools To See Broadway Plays

The New York Board of Education is planning a repertory theatre with a professional company and management, offering six plays a season at an admission price of 25 or 35 cents. The plays will be those which the students study in their high school English classes, from Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" to Maxwell Anderson's "Elizabeth the Queen."

With a top price of 35 cents, the project will need financial support in the form of a subsidy or grant, and negotiations are now proceeding with a large educational foundation. Alfred Harding, editor of Equity, who is planning the project for the Board of Education with school and theatre representatives, said that the name of the foundation could not be divulged at present.

Monogram Board Reelects Johnston

The Monogram board of directors in Hollywood at its annual meeting last week reelected W. Ray Johnston president, elected other officials and announced that sales this year to date are $400,000 more than last year for the same period. Mr. Johnston announced that a loan for a substantial amount, which he did not disclose, was arranged with the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York.

Officers named in addition to Mr. Johnston are: Trem Carr, executive director in charge of production; Samuel Broidy, vice-president in charge of sales; Herman Rifkin, vice-president; Norton V. Ritchey, vice-president in charge of foreign sales; J. P. Friedhoff, secretary and treasurer; E. R. Mulchrone, and N. Witting, assistant secretaries, and C. Boyle, assistant treasurer.

The new board is made up of Mr. Johnston, Mr. Carr, Mr. Broidy, Mr. Rifkin, John W. Mangham, Howard Stubbins, William Hurlbut, Charles Trampe and Alton A. Brody.

The board of directors is considering production of a "special" in London provided a top-ranking star can be obtained. Also a production budget increase has been authorized for eight pictures for the current season.

Madeleine White, secretary of Monogram, has been assigned to the New York office as liason between the studio and the east. Miss White moved to the coast when the home office was transferred.

The 15th annual convention of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will be held November 17th and 18th in the Hotel Antlers, Indianapolis, Don R. Rossiter, executive secretary, disclosed last week.

MGM sales policies were described and explained Friday, October 3rd, at a luncheon meeting in Chicago, of the Illinois Allied, by Jack Flynn, MGM district manager.

The association decided to pay for a series of trailers on safety, the series should be run in all theatres, in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce, the local Safety Council, and the safety campaign.

$1,281,000 A YEAR IS 2 NETWORKS' NEW BILL FOR MUSIC, RISE OF 60%

Network Payments Increased but Bill to Stations Is 40% Less under ASCAP Contracts Now Being Studied

Nine hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars to ASCAP and $327,000 to BMI. This will be the new combined yearly bill for National and Columbia broadcasting systems for fees for the public performance of copyrighted music of members of both societies with the networks agreeing to sign with ASCAP, but also deciding to continue their BMI, which was set up as an independent music catalogue in the broadcasters' long fight with ASCAP.

The latest contract proposals tendered to radio broadcasters by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, providing for the licensing of music performance rights owned by ASCAP, pave the way to a reduction of approximately 40 per cent in the cost of music to the average radio station, Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters declared in Washington on Monday. However, the overall cost to the radio network companies will be increased by about 60 per cent, the analysis says.

Payments Analyzed

Under former ASCAP contracts, Mr. Miller said, the networks made no payment on network revenue as such, but paid a sustaining fee on key stations and their managed and owned stations. Under the new proposals, based on 1940 income, NBC will pay approximately $500,000 to ASCAP. Since it also pays BMI $160,000 a year, its total cost of music will be $660,000—$250,000 more than formerly, or an increase of over 60 per cent. On the same basis, Columbia will pay approximately $454,000 to ASCAP, which, with its payment of $167,000 to BMI will make the annual cost of music to CBS approximately $621,000—$237,000 more than formerly, or an increase of over 60 per cent. These payments, it is pointed out, are out of the network's own revenue, over and above what it receives by way of reimbursement from its affiliates under the ASCAP license.

Meanwhile, return of ASCAP music to the NBC and CBS airwaves before October 15th was seen only a slight possibility by executives of the two networks, in New York this week, who pointed at the slowness of returns of ASCAP contracts from their station affiliates. October 15th was the date set by CBS in its letter to affiliates.

In a measure of leniency apparently motivated by the current happenings, ASCAP's board last week approved use of its music during football games, even though unlicensed by the Society to the stations involved.

A spokesman for the Society said at the same time that during the board meeting there was no criticism of the networks, the directors apparently feeling the delay in return of the contracts from affiliates was unavoidable.

From the networks came the note that business is ahead of last year; that sponsors do not mind the lack of ASCAP catalogues.

BMI, ASCAP's rival in supplying music to the radio, films, and stage, announced last week three more stations had obtained BMI licenses, KGIR, Butte; KRBM, Bozeman, and KPFA, Helena, all in Montana. BMI said this brought its subscribers to 716.

LENINGRAD THEATRES FILLED, DESPITE WAR

Motion picture theatres and public libraries in Leningrad, Russia, are filled to capacity every day despite the war raging on the city's borders, according to an article on life in that city appearing in a Russian newspaper, the Associated Press reported early this week.

Outlining the history of the industry's three-year attempt to obtain "on reasonable terms" the right to broadcast music available from all sources, Mr. Miller credits the present achievement of "a fair and competitive market for music" to the success of Broadcast Music, Inc., industry-sponsored music publishing organization. BMI was established two years ago, when the broadcasters and ASCAP reached an impasse in negotiations for renewal of former licensing agreements and ASCAP took all of its music off the air.

The present ASCAP proposals include four types of licensing agreements available to individual broadcasting stations and a network blanket licensing agreement which National Broadcasting and Columbia Broadcasting have accepted as satisfactory, subject to acceptance by network affiliated stations.

The licenses offered to individual stations which desire to use ASCAP music on their local programs now include:

(1) A "per program commercial" license, under which the broadcaster pays 8 per cent of gross receipts from commercial programs using ASCAP music and 2 per cent on such programs where ASCAP music is only incidental. Allowing for agency commissions and discounts, these payments would represent approximately 6.8 per cent and 1.7 per cent on the station's receipts.

(2) A "blanket commercial" license, under which the broadcaster pays 2¼ per cent for the use of ASCAP music on commercial programs. This blanket payment would represent approximately 1.91 per cent of the station's receipts from commercial programs, after deducting 15 per cent station sales commission.

(3) A "per program sustaining" license providing for a payment of 1 per cent of the local commercial rate, on non-commercial programs where ASCAP music is used, after deducting discounts, agency commissions and 15 per cent station commission.

(4) A "blanket sustaining" license, providing for a flat annual fee, based on the broadcaster's annual gross receipts. Under this form of blanket license, the broadcaster grossing under $50,000 a year would pay an annual ASCAP fee of $12.

Contracts Available

These contracts are available for acceptance at any time, run until December 31, 1949, and provide for extension for a further term of nine years thereafter.

The network blanket license accepted by the chains, subject to acceptance by their affiliates, provides for payment of an annual fee of $200 per year per station, which the network company will pay itself, and a commercial program fee amounting to 2¾ per cent of gross receipts from sponsors, less discounts and agency commissions not to exceed 15 per cent, line charges and a sales commission of 15 per cent. Each affiliate will be asked by its national network to pay its proportionate share of the amount the network pays ASCAP, this to be based on the affiliate's net receipts from the network.

No individual station is required to take any ASCAP license, even though it is affiliated with a network, since the network license covers all network programs. Furthermore, the local station may take a sustaining license only, or a commercial license only, may select any combination of licenses it desires, such as a "per program" license for its commercial programs and a "blanket" license for its sustaining programs.

In comparing the cost of all music to the station under these proposals, Mr. Miller points out that under former ASCAP contracts the station paid ASCAP an arbitrary sustaining program fee plus 5 per cent of its gross receipts, or a total of between six per cent and seven per cent of its gross income. Under the new proposals, with BMI music available, a station not only has a variety of choices of licenses, and can thereby largely regulate its music costs, depending upon its needs, but also will benefit from a considerable saving in its total music cost, Mr. Miller added.

Asks BMI Continuance

Discussing objections which have been voiced in certain quarters of the radio industry to signing with ASCAP at this time, Mr. Miller outlines the considerations which, he says, broadcasters generally are convinced that they should "settle the music problem now on terms which they think reasonable for those desiring ASCAP music," pointing to the incidence of legislative and other problems facing the industry, and a desire on the part of radio broadcasters to devote their time and energy to serving the public.

Speaking for the industry's national trade association, Mr. Miller voiced the determination of broadcasters to continue their active support of BMI "in order to insure the continuance of our power to deal on an equal basis with ASCAP for all time." "We already have the pledge of NBC and CBS, given at NAB directors' and executive board meetings, that they will continue their support of BMI for the entire nine-year period of the ASCAP contract and more, provided that the stations will also continue their support to it," he added.

"BMI is needed not only by the broadcasting stations and other users of music, but by the listening public as well. To the broadcasters and other users of music, BMI means a guaranteed free and competitive market. It also means that ASCAP, or any other performing rights society which now exists or which may hereafter come into existence, will be subject to the normal operation of the law of free competition. To the listening public and to composers, both old and new, it means an open door to opportunity and thus will stimulate creative effort in this country.

"It was never the objective of broadcasters to get along without any music that they could obtain on reasonable terms," Mr. Miller adds. "Obviously, the objective of the broadcasting industry was to make it possible for stations to give their listeners all the music at reasonable terms. We feel that BMI has accomplished this objective. We have at last established competitition in the music field, and because of that fact, the contracts now offered are better than we anticipated we could secure when we started out three years ago.

"There are many problems still remaining. There are undoubtedly many reforms which can and will be achieved in the future. The present agreements with ASCAP represent a step forward. The spirit of cooperation and understanding . . . will undoubtedly carry it forward in years to come."

The Pegler Method

When Arthur James Pegler, famous reporter, and father of Westbrook Pegler, also a famous reporter, began his metropolitan career many years ago in Chicago, his first and trial assignment was to get a picture of a certain beautiful lady, much in the news—but hard to get because the news was hard.

Every star reporter in Chicago had tried. They had searched the galleries, rifled trunks, bribed servants, stalked relatives. The skill of a dozen men, notable, even notorious, for their gimlet cunning failed.

An hour after Mr. Pegler got the assignment he was in the office with the picture. A half hour later it was in the paper, and his job was set.

As the edition rolled, the managing editor approached the new reporter's desk. "If you do not mind telling," he ventured with a deference extraordinary in that rude office, "I'd be interested to know how you got that picture." The whole city room was listening in a hush.

Certainly, sir," Mr. Pegler responded, with a tinge of something in his voice — "I just asked her for it."

The star picture chaser of them all cried out in pain. "We never thought of that!" The direct method — the Pegler method did it. Many another signal performance is just that simple, just that direct. Easy does it, but it's something hard to see.

For instance, six years ago Republic Pictures Corporation was launched, in the highly competitive, exceedingly complex motion picture industry, with the simple, direct conviction that money could be made making pictures on which theatres could make money.

Republic had nothing else to do but tend to business, and no way to make money except by tending to business. The program worked. It still works. It grows. Each year Republic has gained more accounts, more contracts. Republic has as many as 11,000 customer accounts.

It seemed possible that a great many things were being done at large expense and often much trouble that had nothing at all to do with what reached the screen.

Republic started to work with nothing to do but to tend to business, and no way to make money except by tending to business. Putting all it had on the screen where the customers could get it.

NEW TAX, PASSED ON TO PATRONS, HAS LITTLE EFFECT ON ATTENDANCE

Exhibitors Report No Reaction from Public on Increase; General Trend Is Toward Elimination of Odd Change

"Business going on as usual," with little or no reaction felt at the box office, is the general opinion throughout the motion picture industry of the new Federal admissions tax which went into effect on Wednesday, October 1st. Reports from representatives of major and independent circuits and from independent operators indicate this week that in most cases attendance was not affected to any noticeable degree by the new levy, which for the most part, has been passed on to the public without exhibitors attempting to absorb the tax.

The levy applies to all adult admissions taxed 10 per cent, starting with the first-penny, except those tickets selling for less than 10 cents to children under 12 years of age.

Officials of RKO, Loew's, Warner and National Theatres pointed out that the most tangible effect of the new tax schedule would be noticed at Saturday matinees, since the Federal levy relates most directly to juvenile admissions of 10 and 15 cents.

Business Up in New York

In New York, Broadway's major theatres reported excellent business for the first day of the tax impost, with most houses passing the tax along to the public and many neighborhood houses planning to reduce the price of special children's matinees from 10 cents to 9 cents. It was indicated that Loew's and RKO were contemplating a policy of "even admissions" in order to eliminate the odd pennies. Where the price of admission now is 28 cents with tax, the price would be put up to a 30-cent level if the plan is adopted. This policy has been in effect in 85 per cent of the Skouras theatres for some time, and the plan may be extended to the entire circuit shortly. Paramount theatres will set their own policies, but it is understood generally that the tax will be passed on to the public without trying to absorb it.

One of the important topics for discussion at the Allied Theatres of Michigan convention in Detroit this week, was the subject of the new Federal admissions tax. In Chicago last Friday, independent exhibitors who gathered at the Illinois Allied meeting, discussed the possibility of increasing admissions in view of the new tax levy. Some exhibitors suggested increasing scales from 15 cents plus two cents tax to 18 cents plus the tax, while 20-cent houses would increase to 25 cents, including the two-cent tax. Before final action was taken, however, the matter was slated for further discussion.

In the meantime, the Internal Revenue Bureau is revising Form No. 729, employed by theatres to report admission taxes, and the new forms probably will be ready for use in making October returns, it was reported this week.

In the field, reports from major and independent circuits, and independent operators all point to the tax being absorbed by the public rather than exhibitors, with few upheavals at the box office as a result. In Cleveland, for instance, Charles Raymond, Loew district manager, said this week that the public evidently preferred to pay an additional penny or two rather than be bothered with the odd cents change. Loew houses in Akron, Canton and Toledo, with 28 and 29 cent admissions, have gone up to 30 cents because of the tax.

Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager in Cleveland, said that prices were raised in houses in Lima, Mansfield, Sandusky, Massilon, Portsmouth and Sidney, in some spots, as much as five cents and in others, just pennies. RKO theatres in Cleveland also are increasing prices to round numbers. In some houses this gives the theatre an extra peny. Cooperative Theatres of Ohio, moreover, report that its members are passing the tax along to the public. Cooperative books for 54 houses in northern Ohio territory. In addition, Cleveland subsequent-run houses have passed the tax along without boosting prices.

Some Admissions Increased

In a number of Warner circuit theatres, an increase of five cents in admission prices was put into effect for Saturdays and Sundays, which move may possibly result in a general rise in admissions throughout the Warner circuit.

Ray S. Wallace, managing director of Tri-Theatres, Inc., of Ohio, reported that an increase of five cents for adults plus the new tax went into effect. At the Morrison and Columbus, two top-flight theatres in Alliance, Ohio, admissions were raised from 20 and 33 cents to 28 and 39 cents, including the tax. Children's admissions remain at 10 cents.

Theatres in Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Hazleton, Pittstown and Nanticoke, Pa., added the tax to the price of admission, with no protests reported.

Prices for first-run houses in St. Louis were changed this week, with the Fox, Ambassador and Missouri, Fanchon and Marco operated theatres, charging 30, 40 and 50 cents throughout the week. Loew's scale will be 30, 40-44 and 55 cents, the latter price on Saturday and Sunday nights. All prices include tax. Children's admissions will be 17. St. Louis' MPTOA decided to pass the tax on to the customer, but to absorb the tax, including the state sales tax, in the 10-cent admissions for children.

In Milwaukee, first-run houses made no change in adult admissions, but added the tax to children's admissions, making it 17 cents. Fox recently raised its admission top at the Strand from 55 to 65 cents and discontinued its 33 cent early bird admission price. The Warner theatre, for its current showing of "Sergeant York," increased admissions from 30, 40 and 55 cents to 40, 50 and 66 cents. Fox's the Palace and Wisconsin remain at the 33, 44 and 55-cent level. Generally, there has been no reported decline at Milwaukee box offices as a result of the tax.

A survey of Louisville theatres this week showed that admission prices now 25 cents or more are not likely to be increased, but the lower prices will be upped. First-run theatres indicated adult prices are to be unchanged, with children's tickets increased from 16 to 18 cents. Re-run houses planned to increase week-day afternoon prices from 18 to 20 cents, night prices from 22 to 24 cents and leave Saturday and Sunday admissions unchanged at 30 cents. They were uncertain, however, what to do about children's prices. Some Louisville suburban houses are expected to increase prices from 10 to 11 cents for children and from 22 to 24 cents for adults.

Children's Admissions Lowered

From Tampa, Fla., the report came in this week that the children were the only ones who are happy about the new Federal levy, for all theatres of the Florida State Theatres circuits have announced a cut of one cent in the usual 10-cent scale for children. In houses where the adult scale has been 15 or 20 cents the tax will be added.

Los Angeles theatremen revealed that no initial adverse effect on the box office resulted from the tax impost. PCCITO leaders there sought removal some months ago of all admission exemptions excepting children's tickets, which they proposed as a "defense" move.

Local theatres in Rochester are adding the tax to admissions but plan no general increase in scales, according to reports from exhibitors there. In Youngstown, Ohio, admission prices were advanced from two to five cents with the imposition of the new levy.

Detroit theatres, as a result of an exhibitor agreement reached on price increases caused by the new taxes, upped their scales generally throughout the city, with the exception of first-run houses which are not yet finally set, but will probably remain at 55 cents top and increase matinees from 39 to 40 cents. Theatres now charging 15, 20, 25 and 30 cents go to the next higher multiple of five for a total charge including tax and eliminating older split price classes. Second-run houses, however, stay at 44 cents but increase week-day matinees from 33 to 35 cents. Butterfield Theatres, controlling 100 leading upstate houses, is adding the extra tax in all cases. Subsequent-run theatres charging 15 cents for children will absorb the tax and retain the 15-cent price, although second-runs will go to 17 cents for children.

Although admission prices in downtown Buffalo theatres remained the same for adults, children, formerly admitted for 15 cents, are paying 17, the extra two cents going for the new tax. Neighborhood and community houses raised their prices this week with the new tax absorbing some of the increase. Prices adopted by Shea theatres for community houses were typical of those prevailing throughout the Buffalo district. At the Roosevelt and Niagara theatres, where children formerly were admitted for 10 cents and adults for 20 cents, admissions were raised to 11 cents for children and 25 for adults. Other neighborhood houses increased prices from 28 to 30 cents.

OHIO'S "TAX ON A TAX"

Citizens of Ohio are currently confronted with an unprecedented taxation problem, for which state officials are vainly trying to find the solution. It concerns the payment of "a tax on a tax."

Ohio now collects a three per cent state tax on each one dollar retail sale. The issue is whether the retail sales tax can be collected on the excise defense impost on such items as are subject thereto, or whether the tax is collectable only on the normal retail sale price. Specifically, a one dollar purchase becomes $1.10 with the excise tax added, on which basis the retail sales tax becomes four instead of three per cent.

LABOR NEGOTIATIONS DRAG ON ALL FRONTS

Producers To Make Counter-Proposals to Hollywood Locals in IATSE Discussions

Hollywood producers will make proposals countering those submited last week by the studio locals of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees to the producers' labor representative, Pat Casey, in New York. Expectation of the move was disclosed early this week, as business agents of the locals continued to meet in New York with Mr. Casey.

The IATSE business agents have elected to negotiate separate pacts with the producers for increased wages and altered working conditions, rather than reenter the basic studio labor agreement, renewed three weeks ago for five years by the other seven internationals with locals in the studios. Reentrance into that pact would have meant bargaining by the international officers of the Alliance for the locals. In the current negotiations, the agents are negotiating with merely the advice of the officers. Steve Newman, and Carl Cooper, West Coast IATSE leaders, have been at the meetings with Mr. Casey.

In New York, Tuesday, observers said the negotiations would probably be lengthy, inasmuch as all proposals must be submitted by the local's agents to union membership for approval.

Guilds Join CIO

Meanwhile, in the same city, development was seen of the CIO's "entering wedge" into film industry labor up to now dominated by the American Federation of Labor. Three industry guilds, the Screen Readers, the Columbia Office Workers, and the Loew-Metro Office Employees, have joined the CIO, in Local 109 of the CIO's United Office and Professional Workers of America; and the Screen Publicists Guild, union of the advertising and publicity workers of the majors' home offices, appears headed for the same destination, with a membership vote on CIO affiliation expected shortly.

Discussion on the affiliation was to be held at the Thursday night meeting. It was not known at mid-week whether a vote would be taken that night.

At the same time, the Spg News, organ of the union, charged the producers with hedging on negotiatings for a closed shop contract, as ordered by the National Labor Relations Board some time ago. The paper said: "Continued evasive tactics on the part of the film companies, with refusal to come to grips with the major issues involved in the Guild's contract demands was manifested during negotiations meetings in recent weeks."

The Chicago projectionists' union last week won a five per cent general wage increase, after long negotiations; and theatre men of the city estimated their payrolls will be increased $100,000 yearly, as the result.

A union jurisdictional dispute was seen brewing in New York this week, over attempts by the Sign Pictorial and Display Union, Local 230, AFL, to organize sign artists in the majors' home offices. These artists have been declared by the National Labor Relations Board to be in the field of the Screen Publicists Guild.

New officers elected by the American Guild of Variety Artists Pittsburgh local are president, Jack Wilson; vice-presidents, P. J. McDonough, Lou Starr, Phil Lowery, Margaret Peka, Curtis Coley and Cornell Cooper. Eva Herbert was named treasurer, and Carol Gould, recording secretary. Nat Nazzarro, Jr., continues as executive secretary.

Talent scales have been raised there by AGVA, in some instances almost double the wage average in vogue two years ago when the union set up fulltime offices and staff.

THEATRES FREE OF INSURANCE CLAIM

In a decision handed down last week, the New York Court of Appeals ruled that members of theatre orchestras under contract and employed through agents are independent contractors, rather than theatre employes and as such are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits from the theatre.

This decision involved claims of an orchestra leader employed in houses at Freeport and Huntington, N. Y., and reversed a ruling of the Unemployment Insurance Appeal Board.

RCA Hearings on Settlement Begin

In hearings conducted by Referee Abraham J. Halprin of the special supreme court in New York on the fairness of the offer of $1,000,000 made by the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company in settlement of an accounting action by stockholders of the Radio Corporation of America, Colonel Manton Davis, vice-president and general counsel of RCA, was the first witness to appear on Monday. The suit charged General Electric, Westinghouse and others with conspiring to waste and misappropriate assets of RCA.

Song Suit Pleas Filed

Cross applications to dismiss the complaint and the answer in the $50,000 damage suit of Buddy G. de Sylva and Joseph Meyer against M. Witmark and Sons, music publishers, were filed last week in the New York supreme court. The action charges sale of rights to the song "California Here I Come," for the Twentieth Century-Fox film, "Rose of Washington Square," at an inadequate price.

Fire Damages Theatre

Fire did extensive damage last Saturday night to the King Theatre, Gloucester, N. J., the blaze breaking out a half hour after the house closed for the evening. Philip Kalikman, one of the owners, said the fire swept through the office, a stockroom, the balcony and the lobby. The damage was not estimated. The fire was believed to have been started by robbers, who had broken the cash box of two candy vending machines and removed all the petty cash from the office.

Attendance Holds Despite New Tax

In Chattanooga, theatres have reduced children's admissions from 10 to nine cents in order that the newly reduced exemption on amusements will not force them to collect the extra penny. Emmett Rogers, city manager for Wilby-Kincey, which operates the Tivoli, State, Rialto and Bijou houses, said his theatres would charge 9 cents for children under 12 and adult admissions for all others. All neighborhood theatres owned by Independent Theatres, Inc., also have cut children's admissions to 9 cents.

No uniform scale of prices because of the tax was agreed upon last week at a meeting of the Greater Cincinnati Independent Exhibitors League. Some of the suburban theatres, particularly in the lower admission brackets, will pass both the Federal impost and the three per cent State tax to the public, while others will add only the Federal levy.

From Des Moines, reports indicate that suburban houses had no drop in attendance on the first day of the new tax, but that downtown second run theatres reported a noticeable decrease in matinees before 2 P.M. where admissions were advanced from 16 to 20 cents. First-run houses were not affected and expect an increase in business, it was said, because of the smaller difference now between their price and that of the downtown second-runs.

No Adverse Criticism

Other box office results following the tax levy as of last Wednesday, reported from the field are as follows:

Business in Seattle, during matinees and the dinner hour, equal to that of other Wednesdays. Some comment by the public on the new tax charge was reported, but no adverse criticism or hesitation in buying tickets.

San Francisco: the test of the tax schedule was expected last Saturday, when the levy was added to children's tickets at matinees. Slight reaction noted on Wednesday, because only children's prices were affected at most theatres.

Chicago: few complaints and those mild; the ticket-buying public generally reported to be taking the tax levy "good-naturedly." Houses charging 15 and 20 cents have been preparing their patrons for the change with trailers on the screen and signs in the lobby for a week or more.

Milwaukee: local first-run houses indicated no noticeable adverse effect on box office receipts.

Minneapolis: matinees were reported only slightly affected; the new tax was well publicized in the city's newspapers. Box offices at night are expected to be affected negligibly.

Newark: the new tax schedule went into effect "smoothly," with attendance unaffected. Some patrons expressed surprise at paying more for lower-priced tickets in some theatres.

Court Postpones Schenck, Moskowitz Appeal Hearings

The appeals of Joseph M. Schenck and Joseph Moskowitz from their conviction of alleged violation of the income tax status will be heard November 10th. Originally scheduled to be heard this week, the appeals were delayed on the motion of Mathias F. Correa, United States attorney, who said he was unable to prepare for the hearing because of the pressure of other litigations.

Former Judge Joseph M. Proskauer, chief counsel for Mr. Schenck and Mr. Moskowitz, gave his consent for an adjournment to the court.

OBITUARIES

J. Cunningham, Scenarist, Dead

Jack Cunningham, motion picture scenarist and producer for many years, died Saturday, October 4th, at Santa Monica Hospital in Los Angeles, Cal., at the age of 59. He had been ill since suffering a stroke three years ago during the filming of "Union Pacific," for which he wrote the scenario.

Born in Ionia, Ia., Mr. Cunningham became one of the pioneer scenarists in the film industry. A swift craftsman, he wrote literally hundreds of screen plays, most of them full length features. In one ten-week period, it is reported, he completed the scenarios for ten five-reel features and during the period from 1918 to 1925 he turned out 100 full-length features.

Among pictures which Mr. Cunningham wrote or collaborated on were "Don Q," "The Black Pirate," "The Covered Wagon," "The Thundering Herd," "Ruggles of Red Gap," "The Arkansas Traveler" and "Professor Beware."

In 1938 he produced "Woman Trap" and "Too Many Parents."

The stars with whom he worked ranged from such early-day personalities as Frank Keenan and Ruth Roland to such present-day names as Fredric March and Joan Bennett.

Mr. Cunningham is survived by his widow, a brother and a sister.

Thomas J. Carrigan Dies, Stage and Film Actor

Thomas J. Carrigan, stage and motion picture actor who appeared with Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead" and who had the leading role in "Checkers" and "Orphans of the Storm" before he went into motion pictures, died in Lapeer, Mich., Thursday, October 2nd.

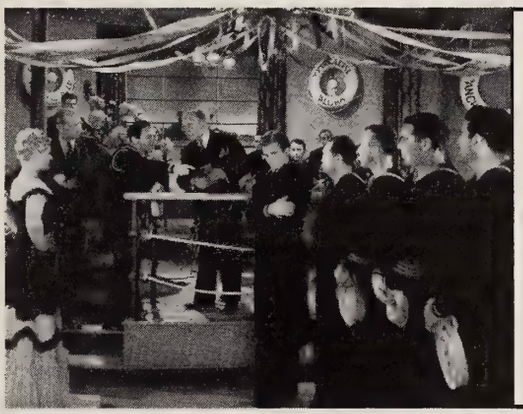
In motion pictures he appeared in one of the first two-reel films made in New York and later with Selig Productions in Chicago. During the World War he showed motion pictures at the Vatican when he served in the United States Navy in charge of entertainment of troop transports. His last film appearance was in "Wings," one of the first of the film air pictures.

Surviving are one son and three brothers.

W. Lee Vaughan

W. Lee Vaughan, 68, who built the Art theatre in Kansas City, Kas., and operated several theatres which he later sold, died Saturday, September 27th, in that city.

Tony Delorenzo



Tony Delorenzo, a motion picture exhibitor for many years in Connecticut, died Tuesday, October 7th. He was 49 years old. Twenty-five years ago he owned and operated the Crown theatre in Hartford, Conn., and in recent years owned and operated the Daly theatre, also in that city.

CHUCK: Relax, Mike, I got a great gal for you. Her name is Cobina. She'll be over as soon as she gets her hair on — up, I mean.

THOMPSON: That's all, brother. You can get a divorce tomorrow. But tonight you get married. You don't even have to propose. The boys have proposed for you. All you do is nod.

SWIFTY: How do you like that guy. A battleship costs fifty-eight million dollars—and he won't loan a dime on it!

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

HERE COMES MR. JORDAN: Robert Montgomery, Claude Rains, James Gleason—An unusual picture and different from any yet produced. This picture has to be seen from the beginning to be enjoyed. Everybody liked it. Got two good weeks out of it. Montgomery, Rains and Gleason very good. Running time, 94 minutes. Played August 28-September 10.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PENNY SERENADE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—A very fine picture that failed to draw. When Columbia makes a good picture it is hard to convince our patrons to come in after so many weak ones from this company. However, this picture will please. Played September 18-19.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THOSE HIGH GREY WALLS: Walter Connolly, Onslow Stevens, Iris Meredith—A good prison picture that was well liked by everybody. Word-of-mouth advertising brought more people the second night. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 10-11.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING FRONTIER: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith—Very satisfactory for western fan fare. Saved our other picture.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TIME OUT FOR RHYTHM: Rudy Vallee, Rosemary Lane—This kind of stuff is a mystery to me. Still they want the price of a good picture for it. You'll be better off without it. Played September 15-16.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris—Good outdoor picture with plenty of action and comedy. Walter Catlett outstanding in comedy role. Played August 30.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray—A good picture but entirely too long. Very beautiful color. Could be cut to advantage. Played September 22-23.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

KNOCKOUT: Arthur Kennedy, Olympe Bradna, Virginia Field—They tell us double features killed the moving picture game. No, it was pictures like "Knockout" that knocked out the double feature. It was terrible. No wonder we have a five picture selling plan.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SANTA FE TRAIL: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Raymond Massey, Ronald Reagan—Really went to town on this super western. Everyone seemed to like it. Played September 4-6.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan. Rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Bros., Tony Martin—Ran this with "Hurry, Charlie, Hurry" to dandy receipts. Too bad it is their last picture for a while, anyway. The climax on this outdoes the Keystone Kops' best chase. We haven't had so much laughter in a long time. Nice musical numbers help out considerably. Your Marx fans won't be disappointed in this one. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 27.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—Good picture, nice color, cute babies, plenty of weeps and no draw.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE GOES HOME: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—First "Kildare" played here and the last. Lowest business in years. Picture fair.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

FLIGHT COMMAND: Robert Taylor, Ruth Hussey, Walter Pidgeon—Good picture to excellent business. Played September 18-20.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Ann Rutherford—Good picture but business not as good as on previous Andy Hardy pictures. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 24-25.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Ann Rutherford—Oh, Oh, some unfavorable reaction and comments on this latest opus of this famous family. It did business as all of these have done before, so it was a new experience to have comments that it was rather a weak sister and they were getting a little fed up on Mickey.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PHILADELPHIA STORY: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, James Stewart—My patrons as a general run enjoyed this feature, but I would not recommend it for a small town community entertainment. A lot of good comedy situations. Running time, 112 minutes. Played September 20.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

RINGSIDE MAISIE: Ann Sothern, George Murphy —Good picture and good business. Running time, 96 minutes. Played September 23.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Red Skelton, Conrad Veidt, Ann Rutherford—Not a big picture but an entertaining comedy which did fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 28-29.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Red Skelton, Conrad Veidt, Ann Rutherford—So this is the new star that Metro is grooming for their campaign for a new comedian. As for our audience and what opinions we heard, he was a terrific flop, and the picture was not any too good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Monogram

ROLLING HOME TO TEXAS: Tex Ritter—Why do they try to make a singing cowboy out of Tex Ritter? They lots rather see him shoot. Played as a double bill with "Scattergood Baines." Weekend trade only fair. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall—A hokum show that drew well and pleased. The color is very good. This is the kind of picture that will always do business for us. Played September 11-12.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour, Lynne Overman, Eddie Bracken—Bob Hope lives up to his standard as the greatest ad-libber in the business. It had the majority of the people in the aisles—including the ushers. Running time, 81 minutes.—Richard E. Sweitzer, Whitehall Theatre, Pittsburgh, Penna. General patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Just as one would expect, this is very funny and drew extremely well. Bob Hope's typical humor is certainly at its best and there is action from beginning to end. Naturally, you'll play it! Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 25-26.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—Here's another one that two reels could have been left out of and would have made a better show. Too long for the kind of picture. Gets very boresome. Running time, 132 minutes.—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—A good picture, but business only fair. The air scenes are thrilling and though it was mighty long, no one really noticed it. I think it is a tribute to the air corps. It is worth anybody's time and money. Many good compliments from those who saw it. Running time, 132 minutes. Played September 24-25.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

IN OLD COLORADO: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—The poorest "Cassidy" in months. This series is slipping badly for lack of new ideas and change of faces. Played September 20.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOOD-BYE: Mary Martin, Don Ameche, Oscar Levant—One of the poorest shows I have ever seen. Don Ameche certainly dropped his cake when he agreed to appear in this picture. Fortunately, we didn't have many come to see it. Played August 18-19.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Charlie Ruggles, Ellen Drew, Phil Terry—Good picture and good business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 26-27.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

REACHING FOR THE SUN: Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Eddie Bracken—This is a fine little picture. Nothing big, but has that satisfying quality. Not much business on it, but no fault of the picture.—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—Interesting drama, beautiful color. Betty Field is going places, but our box office didn't. Be sure to fill in with a "funny" cartoon. Running time, 91 minutes.—Richard E. Sweitzer, Whitehall Theatre, Pittsburgh, Penna. General and rural patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—An excellent picture to good business. In fact, looked like the good old days. Best color yet. We noted that there are many scenes in this picture for a minute or so without any sound, just pantomime. When you can hold an audience so you can hear a pin drop during those scenes, it is real direction. Why have the majors overlooked Harold Bell Wright so long.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Republic

GAUCHO SERENADE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey—The average Autry musical western that always goes over big with our patrons. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 17-19.—

Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

ICE-CAPADES: Dorothy Lewis, James Ellison, Jerry Colonna—A swell picture this is, and one that pleased all who saw it. Republic should be proud of this one. Played September 15-16.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MOONLIGHT: Weaver Bros. and Elviry—Very good picture. Played it alone on Saturday and Sunday. Good business both nights. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Mrs. H. A. Proulx, Au Gres Theatre, Au Gres, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDER FIESTA STARS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Any one who passes up Autry misses a good bet. One of the best money makers for the smaller towns. What do we care about the cost of production? Autry with Smiley gets them in and they love it and we take the gate receipts.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

UNDER FIESTA STARS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Joseph Strauch, Jr.—Another bell ringer from Gene and his pals. Joseph Strauch, Jr. as Smiley's kid brother is a wow and made a great hit with our patrons. I consider this a smart idea by Republic and look forward to seeing him again. We would also like to see Mary Lee back in the Autry westerns. Played September 20.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatre, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CONSPIRACY: Allan Lane, Linda Hayes—An action filler that got by.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CYCLONE ON HORSEBACK: Tim Holt, Marjorie Reynolds—Not up to the standard of this series.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DANGER PATROL: Sally Eilers, John Beal, Harry Carey—A satisfactory western.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HURRY, CHARLIE, HURRY: Leon Errol—If your patrons like the Errol type of comedy, as mine do, this will certainly keep them laughing. The usual case of three or four people all enacting the same character certainly gets the plot into a mix-up. As Leon Errol himself says at the beginning, the title has nothing at all to do with the picture as there is no one named "Charlie" in the whole film. Ran it with "The Big Store" to fine returns. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 27.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

MR. AND MRS. SMITH: Carole Lombard, Robert Montgomery, Gene Raymond—While not a big picture, most all who saw it seemed to enjoy it. Everyone was much distressed over Gene Raymond being a brunette when he is such a nice-look blonde. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

MY LIFE WITH CAROLINE: Ronald Colman, Anna Lee—This is the poorest picture we have played in the last ten years. RKO should be ashamed to offer this to the public, and Ronald Colman should apologize for playing in it. Lay off this one by all means. Played September 4-5.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SCATTERGOOD BAINES: Guy Kibbee, Carol Hughes, John Archer, Francis Trout—Was a good little picture. Played as a double bill with "Rolling Home to Texas." Really drew the week-end crowds better than the western. Business only fair. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY: Ginger Rogers, George Murphy, Burgess Meredith—A weak sister if I have ever seen one. The few who came left before it was over, and personally, I didn't blame them. Might get by on Bargain Night, but I wouldn't use it there I could get anything else. Played August 28-29.—E. F. Ingram, Asland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

TOO MANY GIRLS: Lucille Ball, Richard Carlson, Ann Miller, Eddie Bracken—Not enough people and just too many girls.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BLOOD AND SAND: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Rita Hayworth, Nazimova—Too much bull fight. Too long, at least two reels should have been left out. Few walkouts.J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

DANCE HALL: Cesar Romero, Carole Landis—Everybody enjoyed this and left with praises.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

DANCE HALL: Cesar Romero, Carole Landis—Another good little picture from Fox.—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

DANCE HALL: Cesar Romero, Carole Landis—Good program picture. Played September 22-23.—E. F. Ingram, Ashland and Lineville Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Grable, Robert Cummings—Color is beautiful (also Betty Grable), but that's about all. The picture is too drawn out. Running time, 91 minutes.—Richard E. Sweitzer, Whitehall Theatre, Pittsburgh, Penna. General patronage.

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Grable, Robert Cummings—Fox's best in some time. Good color, good sound, fine story, and above all, good crowds. What more could be asked?—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

NIGHT TRAIN: Margaret Lockwood, Rex Harrison——Drew well first night and then died. A mediocre picture which suffers from being overrated. The sound in first two reels very poor. Played September 15-17.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

PIER 13: Lloyd Nolan, Lynn Bari—A good show with plenty of wisecracks that got plenty of laughs from our patrons. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 21-23.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

RIDE ON VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—The best of the series.—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Carmen Miranda—This is a good picture of its kind, but my patrons are getting fed up on these Spanish musicals. Any short wave radio will give all these needed.—J. N. Wells, Wells Theatre, Kingsland, Ga. General patronage.

TIN PAN ALLEY: Alice Faye, Betty Grable, Jack Oakie, John Payne—One of the best musicals that we have had for a long time and it was a howling success. Running time, 92 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

YOUNG PEOPLE: Shirley Temple, Jack Oakie, Charlotte Greenwood—A good picture and good business. Matinees broke all records for large attendances. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 18-20.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BROADWAY LIMITED: Victor McLaglen, Dennis O'Keefe, Patsy Kelly—Mediocre entertainment that didn't set the world on fire. Would consider it suitable for dual bill.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Paulette Goddard, Jack Oakie—One of the worst pictures we played in a long time from the public's point of view although personally thought picture very cleverly done. Running time, 126 minutes. Played September

1-3.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

MAJOR BARBARA: Wendy Hiller, Rex Harrison, Robert Morley—Played Canadian premiere here with a personal appearance of Gabriel Pascal, the producer, on opening nite. This is really an outstanding production and the patrons admitted it. Acting by the entire cast excellent. Lines were very clever. We had customers seeing this two and three times. Played two and a half weeks. Running time, 125 minutes. Played September 11-27.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TOPPER RETURNS: Joan Blondell, Roland Young, Carole Landis—Played second run too soo to do justice.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Universal

LA CONGA NIGHTS: Hugh Herbert, Dennis O'Keefe, Constance Moore—Nothing to it. Lowest grosser yet. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ACCIDENT: Hugh Herbert, Florence Rice, Richard Carlson—We sure lost heavy on this one. Nothing much to it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Can. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

BRIDE CAME C. O. D., THE: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Bette Davis is definitely not a comedienne. The picture has a few laughs but the story is too jumbled. Running time, 86 minutes.—Richard E. Sweitzer, Whitehall Theatre, Pittsburgh, Penna. General patronage.

SEA WOLF, THE: Edward G. Robinson, John Garfield, Ida Lupino—A picture of the sea packed with action. Much enjoyed by all my patrons. Although very tough, they all seemed thrilled throughout this feature. Some very remarkable characters in this. Play it in a spot like mine. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 27.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

AQUAPLAY: World of Sports—A good single water reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

COMMUNITY SING: No. 3—Plain title and organ music are better than living characters in this series. This features the plain titles and, as it is all college songs, it was well accompanied here. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

FRESH AS A FRESHMAN: Glove Slingers—This is a good Glove Slingers comedy with Wally Vernon sealing the show with his humorous Conga dance in the last half. They like it. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BATTLE, THE: Miniatures—Good scenes of the Navy during a sham battle. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HENPECKED DUCK: Looney Tunes Cartoons—Good enough black and white cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

Looking At It From This Corner

CELEBRATIONS for the Hallowe'en this October 31st should be more numerous, should cover a wider field of "screwballery". That would be in keeping with the present trend of all-out comedy entertainments. Traditional audience-participations are set down on a following page. With these may be adapted other trick features usually reserved for April Fool's Day and similar didoes such as the Fabian circuit "Glamour Boy" contest described in this issue.

Times are tense; money is free. Folks seek to forget the first, spend the second. Hard-hitting hilarity will do a lot to relieve both.

THE news that Interstate and Texas Consolidated employees have received wage increases to match rising living costs is the tip-off on how the Hoblitzelle-O'Donnell organization functions. Welfare of manpower is a motivating factor that has long made these Southern operations so outstanding.

THE usual "local-boy-makes-good" head now makes way for "local girl" as Miss Mollie Stickles of Waterbury, Conn., steps up from chief of service at Loew's Poli to the post of assistant manager, the first of her sex to be so appointed in the Loew organization. With the theatre since 1934, starting as usherette, the new incumbent has gathered sound experience as cashier, treasurer and bookkeeper to serve as foundation for the bigger job. Miss Stickles is to be congratulated for her attainments and for the opportunity to work with that seasoned showman, Ed Fitzpatrick.

ANOTHER round of membership applause, this time in the direction of Leo Young, promoted from manager of the Strand in Portland, Maine, to district manager in the Ralph E. Snider circuit. Long-time Round Tabler, consistently functioning on behalf of higher grosses, Leo will be continuing these endeavors as profitably over a wider horizon.

GROWTH of the drive-in theatre and its booking problems, described in last week's issue, throw more of the boxoffice weight upon skilled showmanship. Thus, theatremen concerned are breaking out with colorful exploitations to entice the trade, to bridge the extra distance from town.

One of the boys—a grand showman, too—inquires why a campaign entered in the Awards failed to land in the Third Quarter-Master listings—especially, he notes, since the job was one of his best and with which this department acknowledged itself in accord. The reason was that the member was not sufficiently represented in material forwarded during the Quarter.

The Quigley Awards justify their existence by placing a premium upon quality exploitation displayed week after week. For that purpose, each of the Awards Quarters is divided into two-week preliminary "Fortnights" to allow entrants to contribute evidences of their week-to-week activities. Those who contribute regularly in the Fortnights of each Quarter are, in justice, given more consideration by the Judges for the Quarter-Masters than those who contribute now and then.

As would be expected, Round Tablers engaged in these activities are spreading themselves accordingly. Milt Harris, now at the Cheektowaga Drive-In, Buffalo, is one of the veterans breaking fat space in the dailies to make his situation widely known.

FOR the especial interest of war-wary women patrons, Stan Lambert headed a two-column layout on "Sergeant York" as follows: "To the Ladies: This picture primarily is not about war but the true life story of an American hero, a religious man who did not believe in war. Every man, woman and child will enjoy it as top entertainment".

FIGURING the theme of "Jekyll and Hyde" well established, and Spencer Tracy's draw as almost automatic, Bill Smith sold his date at the Apex, Washington, D. C., by directing his campaign to build Ingrid Bergman. A series of trailerettes, in advance of the regular trailer, aimed at both class and mass patronage, proved the successful medium.

Round Table In Pictures

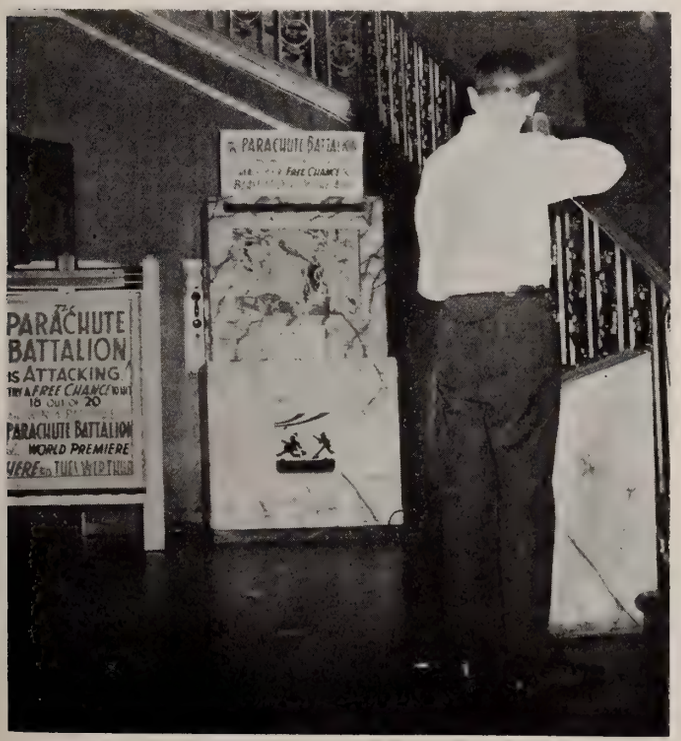
Promoting horse, Ed Lamoureux at the Empire, Windsor, Ont., Canada, for "White Devil" bannered the equine for street ballyhoo. Additional publicity was gained since the costume was loaned by former Cossack in the service of the Czar.

New type third-dimensional color-effect was employed for "Honky Tonk" at the Stanley, Philadelphia, by Al Reh. Glass background was used for filling of stars and title.



To stir up some excitement for "Aloma" at the Omaha, Omaha, Neb., Ted Emerson rigged up a "palanquin" which was carried around town by two boys dressed as natives. Seated in bannered contraption was girl wearing sarong, leis, etc.

Set up in the lobby of the Ohio, Canton, during run of "They Met in Bombay" was Manager William Elliott's home-made postoffice. Desk, writing paraphernalia and postcards were available for patrons, who were invited to address free cards of greeting to Clark Gable and Rosalind Russell, for mailing to Hollywood.

Customers at the Fabian Paramount, in Staten Island, N. Y., actually participated in the shooting of moving parachutes by means of display created by Elihu Glass ahead of "Parachute Battalion". The movement of figures, popping of guns and the clang of the bell registering hits drew vivid attention. Guest tickets were offered for bull's-eyes.

As a buildup for "Mr. Jordan" at Loew's metropolitan houses, Oscar Doob's staff rigged up a bathtub on wheels which, appropriately bannered, toured streets. Seated in tub was lad, dressed as Montgomery, playing sax, while man pulling the tub was gotten up as prize fighter Gleason, as both appeared in the picture.

Boxoffice, cashier, usher and patrons made effective display landed in Fifth Avenue window by Monroe Greenthal's U. A. forces ahead of "Lydia" at Radio City Music Hall. Easel was planted at left with scene stills, while at right was title and playdates.

Promoted from leading department store by Bill Elder at Loew's in Indianapolis was men's fashion window tied directly to his opening of "Lady Be Good". Background featured cutouts of Eleanor Powell and other stars, in addition to giant spot.

THEATREMEN PLANNING HALLOWE'EN PARTIES

Midnight and Matinee Shows To Stress Laugh-and-Scare Ideas; Civic Heads To Aid

With Hallowe'en again in the immediate offing, October 31, plans are already in work to make this year's occasion a source of continual laughs and excitement following the current emphasis on "all-out" entertainment to relieve today's tensions.

As usual, the old reliables are being brushed up for the interest of young and old and some of the things that were done and bear repeating are the "Old Fashioned Hallowe'en Party" worked out mostly for laughs by Marlowe Conner last year at the Warner Sheboygan, in Sheboygan, Wis. With a horror picture booked in especially for the occasion, Conner directed his appeal at the grownups with a "spirit chair," wherein cash was awarded to women patrons offering to sit in the chair during the celebration. The highlight of the stunt was built around a cue given by Marlowe, on stage, at which the volunteers seated in the chair would spring up, expressing themselves vocally and physically as though something had actually happened.

The traditional stage games were also employed for added laughs. Exciting was a "Pumpkin Hunt," wherein cutout paper pumpkins were tacked under the seats, some of which were good for guest tickets to following shows.

Costume Contests Recommended

Last year at Loew's Palace, in Hartford, Lou Cohen put on a costume party, prizes awarded for the funniest and most original. While stationed at the Hoosier, in Whiting, Indiana, last year, Chick Tompkins also used the costume slant, which he reported successful enough to fill the stage a number of times with the willing youngsters. Ten prizes were given in Chick's contest, which included the usual apple ducking, pie and cracker eating. Additionally, Tompkins worked for laughs with a stunt wherein children with hands tied behind were required to duck into a barrel of flour for pennies. Importantly, outside aid was had with the cooperation of the Mayor, and one of the leading merchants, who supplied the prizes and lent his official presence to the proceedings.

Spook Devices Are Favored

Since many Round Tablers will be working out scare atmosphere to fit the holiday, animations such as jagged lightning, flying bats, black cats with raised tail, etc., are suggested. Stage shows will be held with such devices as dancing spooks swaying to spook music, dangling skeletons at end of long pole swinging out over the audience, etc.

Celebrations built around the usual games are not only being held at midnight, many managers switching to the Saturday matinee ahead for direct appeal to the youngsters. In almost all instances, the costume parties will be featured for grand prizes with theatremen making efforts to promote enough gifts such as candy, cakes, etc., for all children present.

NEW YORK CIRCUITS TO STAGE GAMES

That the appeal of Hallowe'en is not confined to the smaller situations is evident in the plans now being made in New York to celebrate the holiday by such representative circuits as Loew's and RKO.

All the apple duckings and other hilarities that identify the occasion are to be staged elaborately. Colorful lobbies are also expected to contribute to the atmosphere of this joyous occasion.

Highlights of always popular stage games are again set down for general information and, of course, center on apple ideas, such as ducking party, wherein stemless apples in water in large wash tub with contestants on knees facing audience required to remove apples with teeth without aid of hands.

Another favorite is the "football bubble" game, played by teams of two, one of each team supplied with a bubble pipe and bowl of soap suds to blow bubbles. As these are formed, the team-mate endeavors to blow them over a goal post placed in the center of the stage and above heads of contestants. First team to make a goal is declared the winner.

Also good for merriment is the shoe contest for two classes, boys and girls. Contestants line up, remove shoes which are placed in a barrel and thoroughly mixed, then dumped on stage. Winner is first one finding, putting on and lacing his own shoes. another slant is the peanut race wherein piles of the fruit are placed on one side of the stage, contestants are supplied with table knives with which to carry the peanuts to opposite side of stage using the blade as a carrier. Winner is the one transporting the greatest number during three-minute period.

Pollock Serves Apple Cider

Outside slant found favorable for Les Pollock at Loew's, in Rochester, as buildup for his show is attractive girl ushers in costume out front serving promoted home-made apple cider to passersby, at the same time distributing heralds calling attention to the special show. Dave Dallas, in Parsons, Kan., recommends a Pumpkin Show to be held week ahead of Hallowe'en, which is built up by ad in local daily announcing that the farmer bringing in the largest pumpkin will receive a prize. The pumpkins with appropriate credit cards are displayed in lobby as received.

The "Safe and Sane" projects to discourage the children from property damage are again accepted. In some spots, the children will be given a goodwill party in cooperation with local police and fire departments in exchange for their good behavior. Another variation is the issuance of police cards to youngsters with community safety in mind, cards exchanged for admissions at special matinee or at specially reduced prizes.

Staten Islanders Go for "Glamour"

Since the Fabian Staten Island theatres had thoroughly exploited the boxoffice returns in various "girl" stage contests, it occurred to the Harry Black forces that an excellent follow-through would be a "Glamour Boy" competition. It was so proven recently at the St. George theatre and given wider audience appeal through a special preview of Paramount's "Glamour Boy" shown in conjunction.

Put on "straight" with prizes of merchandise and other awards, decided by audience applause, the Fabian boys nevertheless found that judicious injections of comedy were well received, in most cases the laughs supplied by "stooges" engaged for the occasion and handled skillfully by Harry Black, acting as master of ceremonies. Black started the proceedings by reading telegrams supposedly from males who demanded their "spot in the sun," the wires aimed for laughs. The contest details were then explained and entries, over 30 in number, called to center stage.

Comedy Injected Into Proceedings

Contestants were divided into two classes, those fully dressed, the others in trunks. Each was interrogated by Black before "falling in." The comedy touches were spotted to lift the program as needed. For instance, an entrant who confessed to singing in the bath tub was immediately supplied with a tub rolled out on the stage and from which he sang. A messenger boy riding a bicycle broke up the proceedings by pedalling on stage with two telegrams from the stars of the Paramount attraction, the wires subsequently given as souvenirs. Another contestant who confessed to being a dancer, a "Lindy Hopper," was supplied with a partner from the audience. Another dancer was prevailed upon to dance with a dummy figure. The comedy continued with a young mimic especially costumed in oversize leopard trunks, Black keeping the festivities "in high" with well-timed dialogue. The awards following the program were given in two classes, for entries dressed and those in trunks. The winners, popular collegian and local swimming champion, were crowned by "Miss Glamour Girl," chosen in a previous Fabian contest.

Event Covered by Dailies

Photo of the crowning broke in the local dailies, the papers contributing generously to the buildup in advance and following. The columnists and sports pages also made much of the event and the advertising elaborated with sizeable space taken by participating merchants donating the prizes. Success of the event was indicated in the attendance reported as S.R.O., with many turned away.

In recommending the contest, Edgar Goth, zone circuit ad head, calls for expert showmanship in the handling. Action must be rapid, he finds, with the gags pointed only at the "stooges" planted for laughs. Contestants are to be handled legitimately and not ridiculed, so that those attracted primarily by the contest slant were satisfied and those reacting to the comedy getting it by the pre-arranged planting. Judging by the audience was decided upon since entrants brought friends to applaud.

1941 Baby Parade Staged by Kessler

The annual Baby Parade staged at Warner's Benn, in Philadelphia by Manager Bob Kessler and recently reported resulted in another job of extensive publicity in the neighborhood and downtown papers and, as usual, close cooperation of the police and sanitation department to insure smooth operation.

Kessler started his campaign a month ahead with a trailer inviting mothers to register their babies at the boxoffice, this being followed through by stories in the neighborhood papers and advertising of cooperating merchants. Outstanding in the publicity was a contest for local girl to act as chief hostess at the parade, some 50 girls from all over the city competing for the honors.

The Warnerman was also successful in promoting prizes from neighborhood stores, those concerned displaying the awards and otherwise building up the event. Samples of Gerber's baby food were given to all participating mothers, the company also giving one of the grand prizes. Further civic cooperation was had from the Health Department with the examination of all entrants, local hospital aiding by sending baby nurses to be in attendance at the parade.

Shots Taken of Festivities

Procession was arranged to tour the entire theatre block and special pictures were taken of the celebration and shown for an entire week starting the same evening. This was also covered by the downtown papers, layouts running up to half-page spreads. In all, some 5,000 people were on hand to witness the proceedings, Kessler reports.

Further baby stuff of note is the recent grand opening of what Harland Rankin reports as Canada's first baby-buggy garage at the Centre Theatre, in Chatham, Ontario. Opening was planned so that first mothers to leave their buggies at the garage received prizes from local merchants. Garage is attractively painted in baby blue and services include checking carriages and simonizing. Harland reports all equipment supplied from local department store free of charge.

Tompkins Stages Beauty Contest

The old reliable bathing beauty contest, which he reports had not been going over very well locally for the past few years, was revived by Chick Tompkins over a four-week period at the Elco, in Elkhart, Ind., girls competing for the title of "Miss Elkhart of 1941" with term passes, cash and other prizes awarded. Initial publicity broke in the house programs and newspapers, also important being a lobby poster set out well in advance. All employees were urged to be on the alert for suitable contestants and after persuading some well-known high school girls to enter, Tompkins found little difficulty in getting a sizeable list of contestants.

Found helpful in adding prestige to the arrangements and also proving of value for future reference was the entry blank supplied by Chick, in which the girls consented to appear on the stage, to permit their photos to be used only for publicity purposes and other stipulations which impressed the entrants.

The four eliminations were held at the theatre on Mondays, with the 12 preliminary winners competing in the finals. Entrants were confined between the ages of 16 and 25. In addition to the theatre prize, cash was contributed by local merchants in exchange for usual credits. The grand prize, also promoted, was a wrist watch, while use of an official car was also obtained. For the finals, Tompkins built an especially attractive stage set, promoting garland entrance flanked with white fence, etc., from one of the local florists. Furniture store supplied beach furniture and for background, local girls sat at tables sipping cokes served by uniformed waiters.

Since similar contests were staged by Indiana-Illinois houses in other situations with winners entertained in Chicago by Alex Manta, circuit head, Tompkins secured extra publicity with photos of "Miss Elkhart" embarking at the station.

With the above listings there remain six Fortnight periods before the end of the fourth and final Quarter of the year. EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Institutional stories have been planted in the local daily by J. H. Feulner, manager of the Des Plaines, in Des Plaines, Ill., more recent of which were accounts of his reduced prices for service men, ear phones for the hard of hearing and kid matinees.

As a street attractor ahead of "They Met in Bombay" at Loew's, in Indianapolis, Manager Bill Elder sent a couple out covering downtown area, each carried a suit case lettered on both sides reading: "I'm on my way to see," etc.

Touring the streets of Lexington, Ky., ahead of "Frank Buck's Jungle Cavalcade" at the Schine Ben Ali was float arranged by city manager Lew Hensler on which were seated negroes dressed as African savages and beating tom-toms. For further effect man inside gorilla skin cavorted about the truck.

Cut out from a 24-sheet was giant figure of Betty Grable which was used by Artie Cohn of the Warner Roosevelt, in Philadelphia, ahead of "Moon Over Miami." Combined with colored blowup and transparency the display measured approximately 16 feet in length by eight feet in height.

Handled along the lines of Army vs. Navy for romance and laughs, was the special Army and Navy week programs arranged by Cassius Smith of the Annex in Detroit and Hyman Bloom at the Regent, each of which played "23½ Hours Leave" and "Sweetheart of the Navy." Both lobbies two weeks in advance carried tent displays, Army and Navy equipment, huge turret, guns, etc. Special fronts carried such copy as "Army cheering section, enter here" and the same for the Navy. Public address system played military tunes.

"Spook party" invitations were placed in all local hotel key boxes by Ralph Ayer, Stuart, Lincoln, Neb., during his "Whistling in the Dark" campaign.

A breakfast and early screening of "When Ladies Meet" for local emporium salesgirls was a feature of the campaign for the film put over by Jimmy Redmond, Bonham, Fairbury, Neb.

Two women stood at a busy local intersection and gossiped loudly about "When Ladies Meet" as one of the features of the "When Ladies Meet" campaign put over by J. W. Pickett, Rivoli, Hastings, Neb.

A photographer roamed the streets taking photos of local women, handed them cards, and explained that those whose photos appeared in the lobby of the Victoria would receive guest tickets, during the Shamokin, Pa., "When Ladies Meet" engagement campaign put over by Clem Reck.

By using a transparent mirror and an electrical connection, George Avis, Loew's, Baltimore, fixed up a "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" box which showed first a picture of Dr. Jekyll and then a change to a shot of Mr. Hyde.

MAYOR PROCLAIMS YORK-ARMY WEEK

Tying the war defense program to the opening of "Sergeant York" at the F. & M. Missouri Theatre, in St. Louis, the Mayor issued a proclamation setting aside the week of the date as "Sergeant York-Army Week". Proclamation especially urged the public to see the picture.

Follow-up was tied in with all the American Legion posts of the city, wherein letters were mailed to all local Legionnaires, urging attendance. Letter called the picture a "must see" film.

Procuring a wing of a plane which recently crashed nearby North Adams, Mass., Francis Faille at the Paramount for "I Wanted Wings" painted the wing up with picture copy and surrounded it with stills. In addition, other paraphernalia was promoted from recruiting office and planted in leading store window with appropriate tie-in copy.

The winner of a local midget auto race was presented with a "Mickey Rooney Cup" as one of the features of the "Life Begins for Andy Hardy" campaign executed by Bob Portle, College Theatre, New Haven.

Real showmanship, resulting in tremendous publicity in every local newspaper, was displayed by Bill Elder, Loew's, Indianapolis, in connection with the showing there of the "Crime Does Not Pay" short subject, "Coffin on Wheels." Elder arranged for a local judge to sentence all traffic violators to see the picture.

With pine trees plentiful around Medford, Oregon, Jack Matlack for the date on "Shepherd of the Hills" at the Hunt Craterian chopped down a few and used them as part of his atmospheric front. Entire boxoffice and sides were covered with birch bark over which were planted scene stills and six sheets.

CHARNINSKY'S "GEESE" HAVE PAPERS CALLING

Louie does not state his intentions in his letter telling about the exploitation planned for "Wild Geese Calling" and received in advance of his opening at the Capitol, Dallas.

Charninsky caged a flock of geese in his lobby, then sat down and hoped the geese would not break out and roam the streets and have the papers gag it with "Calling All Wild Geese".

Tip-off on the general idea is the postscript in Louie's letter which reads: "You know the answer."

When Frank Buck's "Jungle Cavalcade" opened at the Warner Metropolitan, in Washington, D. C., it received special attention from Frank LaFalce, director of advertising and publicity and manager Charles Grimes. One of the items in their campaign was the creation of an actionful front with "see" copy, scene stills, and six sheets.

Folks in Cleveland were recently made ghost-conscious through the efforts of Dave Bachner for "Hold That Ghost" at Warner's Hippodrome. Streamers were attached to cleaning bags, cards distributed to all music counters and record dealers and salesgirls distributed special heralds.

Lining up two of his staff, one tall and thin and the other short and fat, R. T. Barry at Warner's Capitol, in Chicago, dressed them in sailor uniforms and sent them out with back banners heralding his opening of "In the Navy." Smaller of the lads was also used for lobby stunt wherein he swung a mop and pail with back sign reading "I'm busy mopping up preparing for the big crowds that will be here next week to see," etc.

Envelopes marked "Spook Insurance," inside of which were matches attached to cards giving details about "Whistling in the Dark," were distributed by Norman Hicks, State, Raleigh, N. C., during his campaign for that film.

Planted at side of the Ritz Theatre, in McGehee, Ark., by Manager Ralph Lehman ahead of "Moon Over Miami" was 24-sheet cutout of Betty Grable, top of which reached well above the marquee. Placed at an angle, the display could be seen from the main street where it is reported to have attracted considerable comment.

Made to resemble the entrance of an air raid shelter was the display created by Julius Lamm at Warner's Uptown, in Cleveland, for "Underground." A blowup of an action shot was placed in the doorway with the opening guarded by machine gun and camouflaged with sandbags. Also in connection with this picture, Lamm distributed "V for Victory" heralds.

Old-fashioned horse and buggy appropriately bannered with "Jekyll and Hyde" copy was promoted by Sam Gilman for street bally on that date at Loew's, in Harrisburg, Pa. To tie in with the recent gasoline restriction, copy on carriage read: "Save gasoline, we're using our gasless buggy on our way to see," etc.

Man dressed in Argentine style playing a guitar toured the streets of New Haven, ahead of Ted Teschner's "They Met in Argentina" at Loew's Poli-Bijou. Music counters displayed Argentine music, displays were landed in travel bureaus and book shops and a contest was held over Station WELI with folks invited to guess names of songs played from the picture for guest tickets.

REPRESENTATIVE NEWSPAPER ADS

(Above) For the United Detroit Theatres dates on "Jekyll and Hyde" Earl J. Hudson decided upon horror appeal, as noted by this 110 lines on 3 col. Layout was stressed with face cuts of Tracy in both characterizations, plus few words of identifying copy.

(Below) Since the earlier Movie Vacation campaign in Syracuse was found of mutual benefit to theatres and papers, Harry Unterfort, Schines' city manager, was able to promote an additional series of two-column ads built around Vitamin "M", as here illustrated.

THE SUCCESS STORY of

LYDIA

EVERYBODY wants to see a success. The news of a great motion picture travels fast.

Ever since LYDIA opened at the Radio City Music Hall nine days ago, it has played to capacity audiences. And as each audience went from the theatre to its homes, men and women alike spread the word of LYDIA'S charm—and of Merle Oberon's beautiful and thrilling interpretation.

They talked about the exciting story of LYDIA and her four loves . . . about the performances of Alan Marshal, Joseph Cotten, Hans Yaray and George Reeves—and, in particular, about the high comedy contributed by that mistress of laughter, Edne May Oliver.

But exciting as a story may be, talented as may be any cast gathered to play it, expert as may be the direction—in the final analysis it is the genius of one man, the producer, who welds all these together and makes of them a motion picture with the power to entertain thousands and thousands of people.

The success story of LYDIA has been written by the hand of Alexander Korda—who poured into it all his great gifts as a maker of superlatively fine films.

If you haven't seen LYDIA, you have a treat in store for you—an exciting afternoon or evening in the theatre, meeting the girl whom New York has taken to its heart.

Never Give a Sucker an Even Break

W. C. Fields Improvises

W. C. Fields improvises in this film, which he improvised for the purpose under the nom de script of Otis Criblecoblis, running the scale from whimsy to whamstick. It is, therefore, as good as he is in the opinion of his followers and vice versa.

According to a clocking of the laughs given off by an unprepared preview audience, the film is at its best in an early sequence depicting confusion on a movie set and in the final section wherein the star pilots an automobile in one of those chases such as he used in "The Bank Dick" and Mack Sennett used long before that in just about everything that bore his signature. This stuff never loses its flavour and gets the picture to a closing in good order.

The other talent brought to the fore is that of Gloria Jean, who portrays Fields' niece and also Gloria Jean, with plenty of opportunity for singing.

A device which gives a lot of zest to the enterprise is that of calling all the players by their own names throughout.

The Fields narrative is a fantastic series of separate sketches, none of which bear much relation to any of the others and none whatever to the title.

Edward Cline directed the enterprise precisely as if it were in fact a Sennett comedy.

Previewed for the trade press at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, and a goodly crowd of paying guests was there, young, old, average, laughing uproariously when moved to and silent in its confusion between outbursts, which were clustered at start and finish of the footage. —WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Sailors on Leave

Navy Antics

A swift succession of old and new gags keeps this tale moving during the shore leave of a crew of zany sailors. If your patrons are not sticklers for probability, or devotees of sophisticated comedy, this should give them a pleasant evening.

The sailors see an opportunity to be paid off on an interfleet bet only at the cost of marrying off their unfortunate ship-mate "Chuck," who is allergic to women; so marry him they will. "Chuck," learning there will be no money in it, hopes to upset the plan without incurring the wrath of the entire ship. But there's still the girl to be reckoned with, given a girl like Shirley Ross. Director Albert S. Rogell keeps the action fast, and William Lundigan plays the hapless gob creditably.

Even with a Navy background Producer Albert J. Cohen hasn't made a propaganda picture.

Moonlight in Hawaii

Musical Comedy

Built upon humor, song and dance, with the story and plot in the background but never overshadowing these, this is a picture produced in the tradition of "light entertainment." It fulfills the demands of the exhibitor for entertainment.

Johnny Downs and Jane Frazee, formerly of the singing Frazee trio which appeared in many Universal short subjects, do much of the singing while the Merry Macs and Mary Lou Cook are in sequences which are as pleasing to the eye as to the ear. Comedy roles are handled adequately by Leon Errol and Richard Carle, as the production and distribution end of a pineapple juice partnership, and Mischa Auer as the band leader.

Directed by Charles Lamont, with Ken Goldsmith as associate producer, the story has to do with a quartet who get to Hawaii "on the cuff" and work themselves into a radio contract only after many adventures. It is in between these adventures that the singing and dancing members of the cast display their talent. Worthy of mention also is Leon Errol in his scene as the inebriate with the rubber legs. Gene De Paul wrote the music and Don Raye the lyrics for the many songs which include "Poi," "Moonlight in Hawaii," "All for One," "Aloha Low Down" and a number of Hawaiian native songs.

Screened for the trade press in the Universal projection room in New York. Those in attendance seemed to enjoy the comedy of the picture and kept their feet tapping during the many tricky musical arrangements. — GEORGE SPIRES.

The Masked Rider

Western Melodrama

Following the general pattern of western productions, "The Masked Rider" is a story of a bandit chief in Mexico who plunders the silver trains and is a constant threat to the residents of the territory. On the other side, as usual are the forces of law and order.

For his seventeenth time as a Universal western star Johnny Mack Brown returns in the featured role supported by his perennial side-kick Fuzzy Knight, who lends the comedy to the production. Others in supporting roles are Nell O'Day, Grant Withers and Guy D'Ennery

Interspersed with musical renditions and folk-dances of the Mexican people by Carmela Cansino, The Guadalajara Trio, the Jose Cansino Dancers and Fuzzy Knight, the picture has much to offer in the way of western entertainment. Will Cowan was the associate producer and Ford Beebe directed.

Mercy Island

Swamp Melodrama

Here are some thrilling shots of life in the Florida Keys, pointing up the brutalizing effect of heat, hunger and frustration on man.

Ray Middleton plays an ambitious young lawyer whose ultimate failure might be traced to his ruthlessness, insanity, or a blow on the head. All these are suggested and allowed to clutter up the essentials of a potentially strong picture. Marooned on an island with his wife, a friend, and the seaman and boy who ran the boat, he finds an old man who had fled there after a pitiful accident and who is under suspicion of murder. His decision to bring the man back to face trial for his personal prestige is contested by the whole party, and finally prevented by fate, accident or design. The director, William Morgan, never seems to make up his mind.

The cast is competent — Otto Kruger and Terry Kilburn are better than that. The photography, especially in some under-water scenes, is fine.

The picture was produced by Armand Schaefer.

Desperate Cargo

(Producers Releasing Corp., 1940-41)

A Flying Clipper and Love

"Desperate Cargo" is a reasonably pleasant little feature about an aeroplane and love, with nothing ever becoming quite as desperate as the title would indicate.

The plot is twofold in nature and is presented simply but logically. The action sequence centers around a flying clipper, and attempts on the part of a gang of hi-jackers to take control of it. Ralph Byrd, pursuer of the plane, circumvents their plot. The love sequence concerns Ralph Byrd, purser-hero, and Julie Duncan, showgirl—and Carol Hughes, showgirl, and Jack Mulhall, newspaper correspondent. Everything turns out as it should in the best of all possible worlds.

It was directed by William Beaudine and George R. Batcheller was in charge of production.

Belowstairs Extravaganza

Arthur Askey is one of Britain's top line comics, on stage, and more notably on radio. In his first year as a screen comedian he reached fourth place in the list of Best British Stars. His star is still in the ascendant, and this latest comedy romp, an ebullient essay in sheer slapstick clowning, female masquerade and all, is obviously cast-iron box office material for the British picture house. Its humors are probably too native to meet with quite the same result in the American equivalent, but Askey has an inimitable personality and is probably one of the greatest contemporary drolls, with points of appeal in any language. Indications are that with such films as this—and its predecessors—he will continue to climb the ladder of Fame.

With his radio and vaudeville partner, Richard "Stinker" Murdoch—now an officer in the R. A. F.—he appears as a bustup hoofer posing as a female cook in the house of a titled lady who, he hopes, may subsidize a new show. The comedy is of the obvious brand, slapstick in the service lift, culinary mishaps and encounters with a firebrand cook next door, but "Big's" own irresistible personality makes it crackle like a firework display.

Varnel's direction keeps things moving throughout and the cast is a rich one by British standards. Issy Bonn, the Yiddish comedian, as a tempestuous and tongue-tied agent, the American comedy team Forsythe, Seman and Farrell, Lily Morris, Number One low comedienne of British vaudeville as a starchy Duchess, Graham Moffatt, and the inimitable and ingratiating Moore Marriott as a senile old invalid who makes for the whisky bottle as soon as the specialist's back is turned, all help to swell a mass total of exhilarating nonsense. One sequence recreates the famous Aldwych Tube Shelter where a concert is staged. There are songs and dances in the right places, most of them attractive.

Technically, with its camera work lighting and sets, the film is a standard which will call for no wisecracks.

Nothing could be more suited to the relaxation of the wartime audience in Britain, a purpose to which producers Maurice Ostrerer and Edward Black seem to have devoted themselves successfully.

A London trade show audience laughed uproariously throughout. Exhibitors seemed a little difference about the box office pull of Big Hearted Arthur.—AUBREY FLANAGAN.

Spooks Run Wild

Horror Comedy

"Spooks Run Wild" turns out to be a burlesque on horror pictures. It wasn't mean to be.

Producer Sam Katzman combines the comedy talents of the popular "East Side Kids" and the macabreness with which Bela Lugosi is associated cinematically, and the result is a picture which, at its preview, had the audience laughing with it and at it, mostly the latter.

The youths are sent to a camp for underprivileged children in a mountain community where a mysterious killer, called "The Monster," is loose. They suspect a magician and his dwarf companion as the culprits, have quite a session in a house with mysterious passages, and aid in the capture of the real criminal.

There is jerky direction by Phil Rosen of poorly presented script material. The "kids" consist of Leo Gorcey, Bobby Jordan, Huntz Hall, "Sunshine Sammy" Morrison, David Gorcey and Donald Haines. Adults in the cast, in addition to Lugosi, are David O'Brien, Dorothy Short, Dennis Moore, P. J. Kelley, Angelo Rossitto, and Guy Wilkerson.

Previewed at the Studio City theatre, North Hollywood, where the audience had a better time laughing at it than with it.—VANCE KING.

Man from Montana

Western Melodrama

Directed by Ray Taylor this production, the eighteenth in the series of Johnny Mack Brown westerns, is an action packed, rough ridin' picture of the old west in the days of the homesteaders.

The star appears as the sheriff of a community duty-bound to protect the lives and property of the homesteaders invading the grazing lands of his friends, the cattlemen. Supported by Fuzzy Knight and Nell O'Day, the star, besides keeping the cattlemen and invaders on peaceful terms, must also cope with a band of outlaws who threaten everyone's lives in the territory. Of course, the cause of justice is triumphant at the conclusion.

Butch and Buddy, the mischievous musical kids, and the King's Men offer a number of musical interludes during the progress of the film, and Fuzzy Knight again handles his comedy role capably.

A Girl Must Live

Life Backstage

Produced in England by Gainsborough and directed by Carol Reed "A Girl Must Live" is a story of three chorines, their backstage and boarding house existence and their unceasing search for a wealthy husband—anybody's husband.

Originally released in England in 1939 and reviewed from that country in the May 13th, 1939, issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Universal has imported the production, re-edited it, shortened it from its original 92 minutes running time to 69 minutes. In streamlining the picture none of its romantic or comedy action nor continuity of story has been lost.

Studded with a cast of British motion picture stars, many of whom will be familiar to American audiences, including Margaret Lockwood, Renee Houston and Lilli Palmer as the three chorines, and Hugh Sinclair as the eligible earl, the picture is a swift-paced romantic comedy.

Reviewed in the Universal projection room in New York at a screening attended by the trade press. Those in the audience found many enjoyable moments.—G. S.

The Common Touch

(British National-Anglo American)

Social Drama

Motion pictures with a message are not necessarily the easiest to sell in Britain, particularly a Britain with plenty on its mind just now. John Baxter's latest social drama has a message, an obvious uplift note, but it has, as have all his films, a grand flavor of humanity, realism, and a narrative flow the easier for the sympathy of its characterization. In spite of the unnecessary and discordant frills, west-end cabarets, stage shows and whatnot, the low life flavor is the real thing, and as long as Charlie's dosshouse and its denizens are on the screen the film is captivating. Baxter's sympathy is always in the right place and his characters live. Though the performances are almost entirely excellent, the film has no particular star value and the exhibitor will have to go all out and sell it on its merits as a slice of human drama.

The "Common Touch" is Kipling's—("If you can walk with crowds and keep your virtue. . . .")—and it impels a boy inheritor of an immense business to go down into a tramp's dosshouse and see how the other nine-tenths live.

It may be hard to believe in this callow youth taking over a giant corporation, but it is easy to believe in Charlie the lodging house keeper, in his inmates, "Lincoln's Inn," the down and out lawyer, "Tich," the mopper up, "Nobby," with his penchant for picking the ponies, "Inky," forger with a cabaret-star daughter, Old Ben, the philosophic toy pedlar. In the hands of Harry Welchman, Edward Rigby, Wally Patch, Eliot Makeham, and Bransby Williams, they become lovable, vivid characters. Geoffrey Hibbert as the boy is a natural, and Joyce Howard as the girl is youthful and charming. Greta Gynt is the cabaret star and there are others in the cast whose names are known to British audiences.

The film has been well made and no expense spared. Its technical qualities are high. Audiences will thus find nothing much to mar their appreciation of its humanity and drama.

Passages in the film provoked spontaneous burst of applause during the London trade screenings and the consensus of opinion was that it had many qualities of entertainment and humanity.—A. F.

The Man Who Seeks the Truth

(Dome Films, 1941-42)

Irony A la Française

"The Man Who Seeks the Truth," completed in Paris before the occupation, is a French film, done in the best French tradition, and with characteristic Gallic wit, about a man who sought the truth, found it, and what happened in consequence.

"Vernet (an honest man)," portrayed by Raimu, is a banker of world renown, respected in his office, and loved, ostensibly, by his family, consisting of his sister, brother-in-law, god-son and mistress. He is a happy man until his sister, by an artifice, arouses his jealousy and suspicion of his mistress. Frantic, and miserable with doubt, "Vernet" pretends he is deaf in order to ascertain the truth. He learns not only that his mistress and his god-son have had a liaison, but many other truths as well.

The cast and the language spoken are French, with English titles superimposed. Raimu, famous for his role in "The Baker's Wife," is outstanding.

The film will appeal to French audiences, the intelligentsia, art theatres and lovers of French literature, drama and irony.

Although treated subtly, the subject matter confines the picture to adult audiences.

Previewed at the World Theatre, in New York, at a showing for the benefit of the French War Veterans, to an invited audience and professional reviewers who seemed to enjoy the picture very much.—I. S.

Dangerous Lady

(Producers Rel. Corp., 1940-41)

Detective Melodrama

This film stands up very well in its budget class. It follows the general pattern of similar high budget productions made in recent years by other studios. The cast is headed by a private detective and his wife who contributes more to the solution of the crimes than he does. Also present is the police officer who always suspects the wrong man.

Neil Hamilton plays the part of the detective and June Storey is the wife who is not an amateur detective but a practicing lawyer. The picture was produced and directed by Bernard B. Ray with the intention of emphasizing humorous dialogue of the type popularized in a number of modern detective films, notably those of "The Thin Man." George R. Batcheler was in charge of production.

The story which is entirely adequate for the purposes concerns the efforts of the detective and his attorney-wife to clear a girl falsely convicted of murdering a judge. Two persons who know the truth are killed and the detective is shot at. After some interference by the sergeant, an auto chase and some deduction the case is solved in time to prevent the death of the detective and his wife who both find themselves held by the real murderers. The acting and production values are satisfactory.

Jungle Man

(Producers Rel. Corp., 1940-41)

Jungle Melodrama

If this were a satire on African and other adventure-travel films, it might have been extremely amusing. But there is no comedy and every one of the "thrills" of animal pictures was included, plus several extra ones. Considerable footage is given over to library shots of lions, monkeys, snakes and other African animals.

Buster Crabbe is starred in the role of a doctor who has worked five years on a serum to cure a deadly disease. Sheila Darcy, playing a girl who is tired of life in the United States, comes to Africa with her fiance, his friend and her father to visit her uncle, a missionary. Some of the party seek the Dead City and have the expected encounters with wild animals and natives. The doctor saves the life of the girl.

The picture was directed by Harry Fraser and produced by T. H. Richmond, with Mervyn Freeman as associate producer.

Texas

Super Western

"Texas" is a western that has all the sweep, immensity and grandeur of the state from which it derives its name. There is enough material, action and plot development to make three westerns.

Painted on the immense canvas of Texas in the post Civil War period, with the transportation of cattle the motivating theme (synopsis appears on Page 181 of the Product Digest) the picture tells of the careers of William Holden and Glenn Ford. Starting out as friends, they have exciting adventures together, but their paths and then their ethics diverge. Holden falls on the wrong side of the scales of justice and pays for it with his life. Ford attains respect, admiration and the girl.

Other members of the cast are Claire Trevor as the girl who is loved by both men, George Bancroft and Edgar Buchanan, but it is William Holden who is the focal point of interest. His is a fine performance. The "Dan Thomas" he portrays is more than just a typical bad man of the West: he is a human being. Edgar Buchanan is interesting as a dentist-villain, synonymous terms.

Deserving special mention is a prizefight between William Holden and an opponent. Lasting a mere thirty-five rounds, it is an exhibition of brute strength, power and realism, something in the nature of a classic.

Samuel Bischoff, producer, and George Marshall, director, have fashioned a western of large-scale proportions that has much to offer to exhibitor and audience alike.

Previewed at the company projection room before an audience of one, the writer, whose personal reaction was definitely favorable.—I. S.

Mob Town

Crime Prevention Melodrama

The East Side Kids and the Little Tough Guys commit more than the usual amount of knocking about and also more than the usual amount of entertainment in this elaboration of the "Crime Does Not Pay" theme. The film offers some opportunity for showmen to enlist exploitation support of the police department in that it features the success of the big-brother type of endeavor on the part of policemen in the education of juveniles on the evils of criminal association.

Although emphasizing a moral, the film as produced by Ken Goldsmith and directed by William Nigh abounds in action ranging from street fights to hold-ups, murders and motor chases through city streets with guns blazing. Outcome of the story is not too clearly forecast at any point and considerable suspense is generated.

Billy Halop heads the juvenile contingent. Dick Foran and Ann Gwynne carrying on the slight romantic interest.

Previewed for the trade press at the studio. —W. R. W.

THE INDIANS HAD IT

OUT of the broad field of public relations and the many concerns of the "business way of life," so vital to the motion picture and all the amusement industries, this week arose much discussion of the place of advertising in this war ruled world of today.

Problems appeared to be manifest in two somewhat related but distinct categories. First there was for many manufacturers, facing diversion from consumer goods to war materiel, a problem of the maintenance of trade mark and good will with a short-memoried public, with less goods, or no goods, to deliver. Second, perhaps of more sweeping importance, was what many expert practitioners of the art of advertising, and publishers, saw as promises of adverse pressures, by projected taxations and such, against the very principle of advertising itself.

Each Monday brings a tide of expression from all manner of sources across this desk. This week the most militant manifestations are in defense of and for the cause of advertising as a business and social instrument.

Advertising may not be, on the whole, so utterly menaced as some seem to feel, but nonetheless advertising is to the motion picture only slightly less important than product itself. And that is because, as has been observed here so often, the customer becomes a box office customer when he pays for his own anticipation of the product. That anticipation has to be created by advertising. There is no other process. Principal among the media used by the motion picture theatre in retailing is the printed word, and chiefly in the newspaper press.

THE subject of advertising and its rising problems was exposed in careful detail before an association convention in Montreal last week by Dr. L. D. H. Weld of McCann-Erikson, Inc., of New York—an agency which, incidentally and irrelevantly, has in its day had a deal to do with Technicolor promotions.

Any governmental opposition to advertising, remarked Dr. Weld, "is merely a reflection of public opinion. . . . Advertising men urge others to advertise, but have done little to advertise their own wares."

The speaker made emphatic his observation that according to the standards of the Federal Trade Commission, American advertising is practically 100 per cent honest—finding after examination of a million pieces of copy in 1940 only about one-twentieth of one per cent misleading.

While projected taxes on radio broadcasting and billboards have been killed in the Senate, the observers view with continuing degrees of alarm and interest the possibility of the revival of advertising taxes when new sources of revenue are sought. Also the price control bill would deliver to the President the power to regulate or prohibit "selling, marketing or inventory practises," which seems broad enough to include advertising. In that connection it is to be recalled that Mr. Leon Henderson wrote to bakers that one device for reducing expenses would be to cut advertising. Further, current considerations bring Mr. Thurman Arnold and his viewpoints into the arena of discussion, what with his assertions that advertising creates monopoly by sheer weight of selling power.

Among current impingements of federal control advertising authorities are citing control over financial copy by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the grade labelling movement of the Department of Agriculture, federal encouragement of the consumer movement, and the censorship of liquor copy and labels. These are, it is to be admitted, only indirect addresses at advertising since the obviously major, and probably only, purposes have been influence upon merchandise itself. Also it is to be remembered that pure food and drug legislation, many and many a year ago—remembering too, Dr. Wiley—exerted a very considerable influence by government on advertising. The subject is not entirely new.

ALSO, of aggressive bearing on the causes of advertising, comes an expression from Charles W. Collier, president of the Pacific Advertising association, recorded for our news pages of this week by Mr. William R. Weaver, Hollywood editor, as saying: "Advertising is the very voice of business. Without it the kind of progress which has brought the country to the highest living standards in the world would cease. It is no accident that we have this standard of living, nor is it something that just happened because of our natural resources. The Indians had all we have today, but it took the Yankee to put them to work."

It is germane to observe, in behalf of advertising and its place in the American scene, that its influence has been all-important in creating mass demand which has in turn empowered mass production and thereby reduced both the cost of distribution and the cost of manufacture. It is trite, but relevant, to observe that a hand made Ford car, turned out in a machine shop and not a motor factory, might readily cost about $10,000—and not be as good a machine as the assembly line automobile. Advertising creates a pooling of the buying power of popular wishes. That is democracy in tangible product.

THE most concerned note among the discussions has come from a page pronouncement, perhaps advertisement by the Scripps-Howard newspapers in their New York World Telegram: "There are other forces in this country hostile to a free press for sinister reasons. There are other forces, sincerely interested in the public welfare, equally dangerous to a free press.

"These are those people—some in high government places—who contend that advertising is 'unsocial' or that it is an 'economic waste.' . . . The effect of their theories and economic fallacies would be the same. . . . The effect would be to destroy American freedoms. . . .

"But American newspapers can make one claim proudly—that they are free. They are free because the American people are free, because the American system is a system of free enterprise. The American press will always be free as long as the system of free enterprise endures in this country."

This Week in the News

Walter Wanger Quits, U. A. will Produce

AN UNEXPECTED turn in Hollywood production occurred on Wednesday with the withdrawal of Walter Wanger from United Artists, and that distributing company's announcement of its first entrance into production.

From Walter Wanger Productions, Inc., at the headquarters of United Artists, in New York, came the following terse announcement:

"Walter Wanger has terminated his association with United Artists Corporation.

"He has sold his stock in Walter Wanger Productions, Inc. to United Artists Corporation for its full value. He intends to organize promptly a new production unit and in pursuance of that plan, he is leaving on Saturday for England to commence work on his first picture, 'The Eagle Squadron.'"

The same messenger from the multigraphing room of UA's publicity department brought the equally unexpected announcement that United Artists will enter actual production for the first time in its 25-years, thereby becoming the sixth producer-distributor-exhibitor in the business, UA having announced some time ago that it was out to build-up a circuit of "show-window" theatres.

Mr. Wanger's withdrawal follows by only one week the association of David O. Selznick as a producer-owner of United Artists. (The Selznick-Korda-Pickford story appears on page 16.)

Mr. Wanger had been producing for United Artists since 1937, many of his 17 UA productions having performed importantly on that company's programs. His UA pictures are reputed to have grossed $17,000,000. His contract had four years to run.

In purchasing Mr. Wanger's interest in Walter Wanger Productions, Inc., UA, it is understood, acquired precisely the producer's 50 per cent holdings in Wanger negatives, UA already holding the other half ownership.

United Artists, always a distributor only, now will have as production affiliate the new United Artists Productions, Inc., productions of which will be made "in accordance with the decisions of the board of directors of United Artists Distributing Company."

A production head is to be selected as soon as the producer owners now in New York return to Hollywood. Out of the New York meetings there also is supposed to come the selection of a president for the distributor.

Meanwhile, there is to be obtained producing finances, stories, and producer, director, acting and writing talent, and, of course, studio headquarters.

With speculation in the industry continuing this week to point to several "likely" candidates for the presidency of United Artists, including, among others, Joseph Bernhard, general manager of United Artists, and George Schaefer, president of RKO, "a group of Southwestern Exhibitors"—identities undisclosed, addressed an airmail letter to David O. Selznick, "nominating and recommending" for the UA presidency, George F. Dembow, who is now sales manager for National Screen trailers and accessories.

Junior Premiere

JUVENILE activities in theatre promotion were given a new emphasis with a "world's premiere" exclusively for children, staged by Manager Gordon Spradley, at the Wometco Centre Theatre, in Miami, on behalf of Columbia's "The Royal Mounted Patrol." Put on with the same attentions directed to that circuit's noted Hollywood openings, the premiere was distinguished by lobby microphones, wires from Hollywood, coverage by news wire services and roto section layouts in the local press. Details of the promotion appear in this week's Managers Round Table, starting on page 61.

Writers Listen, at 35¢

HOLLYWOOD film writers, aggrieved by journalistic treatment of their wares, and film critics disposed to tell them how come, met head on to a draw in a two-hour debate staged last Sunday evening at the Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood, by the League of American Writers, at 35 cents the ringside reservation, and a goodly crowd was there.

Principal among the contentions presented by screen writers John Huston, Robert Rossen and Fred Rialdo, was the claim that press critics, in addressing their analytical attentions to a bad picture, too conveniently assess to script and scripter the major responsibility for faults actually chargeable to producer, director and/or others.

Principal among the counter-contentions presented by film critics Douglas Churchill, James Francis Crow and Jack Grant, was the assertion that scripters do not sufficiently exercise their right to showmanship to the end of making known the precise nature and degree of their contributions to the pictures on which their signatures appear.

Nobody on either side referred to a standing resolution adopted some years ago by the Screen Writers Guild proscribing direct methods of self-assertion as "unethical" for writers.

Frank Nugent, former New York Times critic, now into his second year as a studio scripter, was judge of the contest.

Fox Pas

WILLIAM FOX's sentence in Philadelphia Federal Court—for conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States—finally drew near this week, as the result of a Department of Justice decision that ex-Judge J. Warren Davis, a co-defendant, will not be tried again, after two jury disagreements.

The Department announced in Washington last Friday, that Mr. Fox would be sentenced soon.

Mr. Fox was a Government witness in the Federal charge against ex-Judge Davis, that he received $12,500 from the former film executive. The alleged bribery occurred during litigation in the Fox bankruptcy in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia. Judge Davis, since retired, was presiding at the time.

Mr. Fox admitted guilt; Judge Davis didn't. Mr. Fox may be jailed. Judge Davis presumably won't.

Films & Trade Treaties

ARGENTINA has reduced its import duty one third, on American raw film, will reduce the duty similarly on negatives when her import receipts reach 270,000,000 pesos per year, and will maintain the duty on positives at the present rate. These are provisions included in the reciprocal trade agreement announced in Washington this week.

In New York home offices, speculation continued about the progress and terms of negotiations between American film companies and the British Treasury for renewal of the current monetary agreement expiring October 29th. The Americans withdrew $12,900,000 under that agreement. They hope to withdraw more, because that figure is estimated to have been only one third of their revenue from Britain; the rest is frozen.

Memory of "K" Street

UNDER headlines of "President-Maker," Harry Micajah Daugherty's obituary appeared in this week's papers, with varying reference to the "Ohio Gang," in a period referred to as "one of the nation's most unsavoury political interludes." The President he made was Warren G. Harding. Mr. Daugherty was 81 years of age. He died October 12.

Mr. Daugherty, Harding's attorney general, is said to have spent his declining years on a job yet unfinished, a defensive autobiography. In the world of the motion picture some remembered and wondered if in that unpublished manuscript there might be a chapter on certain matters at Mr. McLean's "Little Green House in K Street," Washington, D. C., and a very special showing there of pictures of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight of July 2, 1921, which went illegally into national circulation, with many consequences, including picture persons and indictments. Testimonies concerned Jess Smith, who had an unofficial desk in the attorney general's office, and who shot himself, in Mr. Daugherty's apartment. Discussions of the day involved more than fight films and included such matters as oil and Teapot Dome.

Ever after that, until the recent repeal of the Sims bill, and legalization of traffic in fight films, there was a notorious interstate traffic in them—with scheduled arrangements dating from the days of the Little Green House in K Street.

What, No Music?

RADIO at mid-week was in the midst of one of its most serious operating problems: a strike call was sent out by the American Federation of Musicians, pulling all bands on New York sustaining programs of NBC and CBS networks.

James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, ordered the move, Wednesday, in New York. G. B. Henderson, business agent for the union said it was the result of a dispute originating in Pittsburgh. Commercial broadcasts were not affected by the edict. Mr. Henderson said the order would effect only New York thus far.

CBS, for one, had adjusted its programs and was piping in from Detroit and Louisville bands to fill the sustaining time and also was using dramas and choral societies.

Mr. Petrillo directed his orders specifically at stations WJAS and KQV in Pittsburgh, owned by H. J. Brennan. The musicians' local in that city demanded that WJAS, a CBS affiliate, employ a staff band for a minimum of 44 weeks, but Mr. Brennan refused.

Can Tour Canned Music

MUSICIANS may not interfere, by striking or picketing, with the use of canned music in lieu of live musicians. Such was the practical result of the refusal by the United States Supreme Court, Monday, in Washington, to review the New York State Court of Appeals' permanent injunction restraining the American Federation of Musicians and its contractual ally, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees from interfering with the performance of "Opera-on-Tour," Inc.

Opera-on-Tour, a New York organization, formed two years ago to give opera in smaller cities with the aid of records, was stopped in a southern tour of "Faust" when the AFM called upon the IATSE for aid, under its 25-year mutual assistance pact. Stagehands in various southern cities refused to service the show and its New York attorneys appealed to the courts for an injunction, which was granted after a year of fighting.

The Supreme Court says the dispute was not a Federal matter. The lower court had ruled labor unions may not "insist that machinery be discarded, in order that manual labor may take its place."

Shirley Selling Watches

TIME was when radio sponsors fell over each other in bidding for the much-prized guest star appearance of Shirley Temple, but her managing parents, for years, refused offers reputedly in excess of $10,000 for a single guest spot.

Now Shirley is taking to commercial broadcasts for $4,000 per show. She is to appear in four Christmas musical plays selling Elgin watches over Columbia Broadcasting, beginning Friday, December 5th.

William Esty and Company, advertising agency, arranged the Elgin deal. The watch firm will spend $45,000 for the four shows, $16,000 going to the little lady who, at 12, must ponder a Hollywood come-back; the remainder to go to other program talent.

Anti-Trust Suit No. ? ?

M. E. BLATT and Oliver Unger, presidents, respectively, of Mebco Realty, and Theatre, companies, this week sued in Atlantic City, N. J., Federal Court the eight majors and Mortimer Lewis, George Weilland, Frank Gravatt, Flora Gravatt, and Ventnor Realty Company, charging a conspiracy to prevent the Empress Theatre, that city, from obtaining pictures it had obtained during the ten years it was operated by the Ventnor company. During that period it was called the Embassy. Mr. Blatt and Mr. Unger now operate the theatre.

They also ask $570,000 damages, alleging the present Embassy, run by the Ventnor company, now receives the films due the Empress.

FROM this 410-foot tower, erected on a man-made island in Long Island Sound, WABC, home station for the Columbia Broadcasting System, cast its entertainment for the millions with a new voice this week—a salt-water start for a 50,000-watt signal. The structure, with warning lights extinguished in a blackout, also might make a nice, comfortable de-winger for dive bombers.

Willkie exults in Industry Job at Senate Inquiry

by TERRY RAMSAYE
editor of
MOTION PICTURE HERALD

AT INTERIM, or whatever it may be, in the course of the Washington inquisition into the motion picture, Wendell L. Willkie, for this case the attorney in fact for the motion picture industry and its producers, sat for a midday hour this week with his feet on the edge of the desk, watching the blue smoke curl upward and considering that matters as of now were standing rather well—even better than that.

With that reposeful picture there remained, however, a decided and militant alertness to the fact that the story of that caucus room hearing in the national Capitol is not yet a closed document, that, if there is to be one, no official conclusion has yet been recorded, or is precisely to be anticipated. The case is still on, officially, maybe in reality. Mr. Willkie, the attorney, was having no expressed opinions about that. That would not be chess, or even checkers.

Essentially it is the judgment of Mr. Willkie that the motion picture has on the stand in a Washington investigation conferred distinction on itself and has identified itself as a great industry, an American industry, with all of the rights of an industry and the perhaps larger rights of an art.

The motion picture exhibitor, in the expressed opinion of Mr. Willkie, is the important party at interest, the one who should be the most concerned, the most fortified and the most gratified.

His over-all viewpoint was summed up by Mr. Willkie in: "No legislative body, of any kind, has in this country a right to dictate or seek to dictate to this or any of the arts, except in the broadest terms of common decency.

"Further, there is no right even to suggest to the motion picture exhibitor what kind of pictures he should buy and present. His choice is his business, and his right."

The conversation was in that high-up and walnut lined office of Mr. Willkie's at 15 Broad street, in the heart of New York's "Downtown." Around below in the area were the U. S. subtreasury, the House of Morgan, the Chase National bank, the New York Stock Exchange, and, in the skyscrapers about, the offices of most of American industry. It matters not at all, but the rotunda like reception room of that firm of lawyers with Willkie for a first name, also panelled in walnut, has decor in Della Robbia which is Latin, while his comfortable but not imposing cubicle has a carved Ionic frieze, which is Greek. A balanced cosmopolitanism, perhaps. Anyway the acute modernism of some of the offices of cinemaland has not penetrated this office of this attorney, industrialist and Indiana farmer.

"I am here to suggest," observed the editor of the HERALD, "that in this issue of the nature and purposes of the motion picture, at this juncture in the proceedings which have culminated in the Washington inquiry, we might present to the exhibitor a sort of crystaline and summary picture of where the industry gets off, as of now."

Mr. Willkie got his feet off the desk and squared away across it to get emphatic.

"I'd like to convey," he answered, "some of my own experience in this case. It will be probably typical of many.

"I would not pretend to be a profound motion picture fan, you'll understand. I have always gone to see movies now and then, on special occasion, when for instance Mrs. Willkie has urged or recommended something or when some friend has given me an especially enthusiastic account of something he has seen, or when I've been vacationing and had the time, the opportunity and the impulse all at once.

"A Quality of Substance"

"I saw the motion picture generally as I suppose most people see it. I had an impression taken, I realize, from the more superficial and external manifestations of the selling side of showmanship, something to be taken casually and lightly.

"When I got into this matter I discovered something. I found a quality of substance, of years of working and building and study, a real industry, in fact a real American industry."

There was an interlude of discussion of the coverage of industry affairs and the witnesses—of which the motion picture industry had four principals, Nicholas M. Schenck, Barney Balaban, Harry M. Warner and Darryl Zanuck, representing everything from Hollywood to home office.

"Now, as you know," Mr. Willkie continued, "I've had experience in such matters as this Washington hearing. I have attended and participated in occasions of the kind, and I have been on the witness stand, too.

"Sitting on the witness stand in a Washington investigation is a special experience. The witness is subject to every pressure that can be put on a witness in a court room, and many more. He has no protection of rules of evidence, no protection of counsel, in such cases as

"No legislative body, of any kind, has in this country a right to dictate, or seek to dictate, to this or any of the arts, except in the broadest terms of common decency. Further, there is no right even to suggest to the motion picture exhibitor what kind of pictures he should buy and present."

this. He can be questioned in any manner at all and questioned about anything at all, whether relevant or not. He is at every disadvantage.

"In the face of that I am proud of the showing that our four principal witnesses for the motion picture industry have made in Washington for themselves and for their industry.

"They have proved it is an industry.

"They have proved how well founded and how well built an industry it is.

"They have demonstrated their own long considered and constructive approach to the work of their industry and its problems as an industry and an art.

Pageant of Names

"I have seen many of the great men of American industry down there at Washington going through just such an ordeal and I'll say that not one in fifty of them has performed as well, has come off as well for themselves or their business as have these men of the motion picture.

"I shall not name them, but we could count up a dozen of them in a moment who have gone to the witness stand in such Washington hearings and have come away damaged, invaded, and sometimes really destroyed.

Mr. Willkie gestured with a broad sweep at that canyon lined with business skyscrapers, and a pageant of unspoken great names, and once great names, even midgets, marched through the consciousness of the interview.

"Those men, some of them, were torn to tatters in Washington," continued Mr. Willkie, "sometimes because of a lack of skill in such a position. In this motion picture inquiry our witnesses have alike demonstrated that not only do they have a business but that they know it and that it has been built with work and thought.

"Those four men could not have made the remarkable showing that they did, and could not have come through that hearing with all of its examination, except as the representatives and participants in a sound industry with a sound story to tell.

"The important, honest facts were right there—and of such a substantial nature as to put the motion picture in a new light."

"Aggressive Defense"

"Happily," observed the interviewer, "this is and has been no 'rear guard action.'"

At that a reminiscent glint came into the attentive eyes across the paper laden desk. "Remember," Mr. Wilkie responded, "that it was a condition of my entering this case that the defense should be positive, aggressive.

"It is perhaps of interest that these witnesses required no coaching, had no coaching—and in fact no amount of that could avail in so broad and complex a mater as these issues about the motion picture. I spent hours talking to these men, but I did not tell them what to say. Their testimonies were out of an industry speaking for itself."

"You are talking of four men," the interviewer remarked. "They have stood out, as individuals—and our public has not been given to thinking about persons and individuals behind the screen—to them it is all lumped into just 'the movies.'"

"Yes, and that has been a mistake," urged Mr. Willkie.

"The men of the movies have sold the movies but not themselves in their positions of leadership, their individual positions."

The discussion went a-field for analogies.

There was mention of the wide diversity of personalities, policies and opinions in the field of publication, especially among the newspapers.

"Also," remarked Mr. Willkie, with emphatic hand, "consider the way the same reasoning you mention might apply to, let us say, press associations. There are three big press associations. I'd guess that maybe about 80 percent of a typical newspaper, aside from entirely local material, was delivered by one or more of these three press associations. It could be a hasty opinion therefore that all the news of the nation was entirely in the control of the three men who run those press associations. We know, and everyone, I presume, knows that is not so.

"Things just do not go that way in America. The expressions of the press and of the arts alike follow the flow of events and public thought. Something gives a writer a notion for a story. It becomes a story, it becomes a play or a novel, or both and maybe it becomes a motion picture, with somebody, and probably many persons adding and changing things as it goes along through all of these complex processes. It comes out in these various forms, including the motion picture, as the work of many minds.

"There is no possibility of the kind of one-man controls that some seem to assume. It is not the way of the arts and and of expression.

"Nobody," insisted Mr. Willkie, "can do anything about that."

MEET NEXT WEEK "TO DISCUSS FUTURE"

From Washington

Future of the Nye-Clark film propaganda inquiry remained shrouded in uncertainty this week as Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of which the Clark group is a subsidiary, just returned from a lengthy speaking tour, said he had no idea what Senator D. Worth Clark would do regarding further hearings.

Chairman Wheeler said he had taken no part in the investigation, and did not expect to participate. He refused to comment on the hearings.

Senator Clark also had little to say, other than that it was not expected anything further would be done this week but that members of the group might get together next week to discuss their future activities.

ARMY, INDUSTRY, STAGE, RED CROSS PUSH SHOWS-FOR-SOLDIERS MOVE

65 New Theatres Planned for Hospital Units To Be Independent of Regular Camps; Soldiers Cheer 'Automovie'

New and widespread extension of the shows-for-soldiers movement came this week with the immediate launching of plans by the motion picture industry to aid in starting a film circuit in army camps; the decision of the Citizen's Committee for the Army and Navy to place 24 touring stage units on the Army Camp route; the disclosure by the War Department in Washington of a brand new circuit of 65 film theatres being built by the American Red Cross, from Alaska to Porto Rico, and with a report by the United Service Organization of the progress it is making with its mobile motion picture units.

The Red Cross will operate a film circuit of 65 houses in conjunction with its hospitals in camps. These theatres, to seat from 145 to 500 persons, depending upon the size of the encampment, will have no relation to the regular soldiers' Army theatres.

Construction Started

The Red Cross has allotted an undisclosed sum of money for the project. It already has started construction of theatres, it has contracted for regular R.C.A. photophone standard sound equipment, and has arranged for a regular film supply with nine major distributors.

The present emergency has required an expansion in the national Red Cross budget from 4,360,000 to $11,478,000, approximately $7,000,000 for services to the armed forces.

A new booking arrangement has been made. Each local exchange will be furnished with a list of its pictures which the Red Cross believes suitable for showing to those servicemen who are hospitalized. So-called "deep" subjects will be avoided. From the list of approved pictures furnished by the Red Cross to each local exchange manager, the latter will select the film, depending on whatever is available in approved product. In other words, the local manager really will select the show.

The Red Cross will pay for the equipment, its deal with R.C.A. providing that the equipment company make installation and teach projectionists. The Red Cross will pay all film rentals. Whether a special price has been obtained from the distributors is unknown.

Divisional Heads Recruited

Hampton W. Howard is director of the American National Red Cross Motion Picture Service, established comparatively recently, with national headquarters in Washington. Mr. Howard will have under him three divisional supervisors recruited from the motion picture field, one in the east, one in the west, and the third in the middle west. The director at one time was on the advertising-publicity-exploitation staff of Robert Gillham at Paramount. He also was a former theatre manager for the Paramount affiliated Mullin and Pinanski circuit in New England.

The Adjutant General's office of the U. S. War Department in Washington has already notified all commanding generals of the U. S. Army and all commanding officers of army hospitals of the new project.

The Red Cross theatres will operate at the following 46 Army stations:

Fort Devens, Mass.
Camp Edwards, Mass.
Fort Dix, New Jersey
Fort Monmouth, N. J.
Camp Upton, New York
Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland
Edgewood Arsenal, Maryland

Entertainment Circuit Set

Meanwhile, at the Washington conference last week, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of October 11th, leaders of the motion picture and radio industries met with legitimate stage producers and with top-ranking officials of the War and Navy departments for the establishment of a regular circuit of shows for men in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps. Determined to provide camp entertainment for servicemen on a permanent basis, the group achieved in one day what it had been expected would require at least two days to accomplish. The meeting terminated with the understanding that definite plans for the shows would be announced following further consultations with various groups which are to participate.

The Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy was designated to handle entertainment in the camps, posts and naval stations, and the motion picture groups which are participating will work closely with that organization.

Services of film organizations were placed at the disposal of the Government by Y. Frank Freeman, chairman, and Jock Lawrence, secretary, of the Hollywood division of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense, and Lawrence Beilenson of the Screen Actors Guild.

Others who attended the conference were Alfred Harding of Actors Equity; George Heller, American Federation of Radio Artists; Lawrence Phillips, executive director, and Eddie Dowling, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Citizens Committee; Lee Shubert, New York producer, and Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters.

24 Units Planned

As a result of the Washington meeting, the Citizens Committee announced on Monday of this week, that it was planning one of the largest aggregations of live talent shows ever to tour the country, a total of 24 touring units to play before soldiers and sailors, to be in operation by December 1st. These units, Committee officers declared, are scheduled to give 4,000 performances in the six-month period beginning with December 1st. Vaudeville, musical shows and legitimate stage plays are planned. Six units are now in operation in various sections.

The projected program will supplement the six-times-weekly picture shows at camps which are run by the Army directly. As Winter shows will have to be given indoors, except in the South, the committee aims to take over the film theatre on nights when a touring unit arrives in camp. A live talent unit will reach each camp about once a fortnight, it is expected, although some units may play engagements of several days in the larger camps.

The shows will be varied, to include vaudeville, streamlined musical comedies, stage comedies and a few dramas. It is planned that the units will play 72 Army camp theatres and 13 Naval stations, at an admission charge of 25 cents, thus abandoning the committee's policy of free shows.

At a meeting of the committee in New York last Friday, representatives of all theatrical unions pledged their full cooperation in the program.

Servicemen Welcome Shows

Meanwhile, an official report released this week by the United Service Organization at its New York headquarters told how service men welcome opportunities for recreation and entertainment through USO's mobile motion picture units.

The "automovie" is one of several such units being operated in the southern maneuvers area by the USO to bring entertainment to the soldiers taking part in the gigantic war games. The unit, carrying a self-contained projector and sound system, consists of a large trailer-type truck. The rear section, containing the screen, can be raised above the level of the truck top, so that as many as 3,500 men can watch a showing while seated on a flat stretch of ground. The sound equipment can be used as a public address system or in connection with a phonograph or radio.

NIGHT EFFECTS FOR TRAINING PICTURE

Darryl F. Zanuck, chairman of the research council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, announced on Monday in Hollywood the start of another War Department training film, known as "Operation of a Reconnaissance Patrol at Night".

The picture, to be made by MGM, presents peculiar technical problems, for the reason that it must be photographed entirely in daylight with "night effects" filters so as to appear on the screen as having been shot after dark. Additional photographic difficulties are introduced by the fact that the faces of all of the men appearing in the film are blackened in accordance with usual military procedure to reduce the possibilities of detection by the enemy. "Operations" will be directed by Roy Rowland.

Major Charles S. Stodter will be War Department Liaison Officer, assisted by Lt. Col. Gordon P. Savage, Infantry Technical Adviser. The film will be made from a script written by E. Maurice Adler, Charles Greene and Julian Hockfelder from information furnished by the Army Chief of Infantry.

ODLUM'S PRIORITIES ORDER HALTS THEATRE BUILDING, REMODELING

U. S. Allocations Board Calls a Halt to All "Unnecessary" Construction Requiring the Use of Any Priority Materials

In one of the most far-reaching moves yet taken to place the nation on a "total defense" basis, the U. S. Supply Priorities and Allocations Board in Washington last Friday, placed a prohibition upon all new construction not essential to the national defense or public health and safety, clamping down on further new theatre construction for the duration of the emergency.

Co-incidentally, the Priorities Board issuing this drastic order is headed by Floyd Odlum, who has very large interests in Radio-Keith-Orpheum, whose subsidiaries operate motion pictures and produce motion pictures for theatres.

The Board's order covered all types of construction, private, industrial, utility, state and Federal, which might use scarce materials.

"This applies to public projects—Federal, state and local—such as the building of post offices, courthouses and similar structures; to the construction of roads and highways, to river and harbor improvements; and to flood control and other power projects," the board said.

"It applies to construction of factories, lofts, warehouses, office buildings and all other commercial construction. It applies to residential construction and to construction for public utilities.

"It will not be possible for the United States to build all of the warships, planes, tanks and other things essential to the national security if the scarce metals are unnecessarily used in building projects which are not vital to defense," it was declared.

Radio Stations Included

There was no question of the intention of SPAB to halt the building of new exhibition houses, and similary it was indicated that new broadcasting stations also would come under the ban. The latter, particularly, require the use of scare materials for equipment, antennae and other parts of the installation.

To aid it in carrying out its program, SPAB recommended that state and local authorities refrain from issuing building permits for construction work on which priorities would have to be denied, and urged also the revision of building codes to relax the requirements for the use of needed materials.

Primarily, the order is designed to conserve steel, copper, brass, bronze, aluminum, supplies of which are very short, as well as other materials which threaten to become scarce in the near future.

Decision as to whether new projects will be permitted to be undertaken will depend on one question—does the construction involve the use of appreciable quantities of critical materials? If the answer is no, there will be no objection, but if scare materials are required applications will be rejected in all cases where the projects do not contribute to the defense program or public health and safety.

Projects now under construction will be permitted to go ahead to completion, it was said. This was interpreted to mean that if a building was part way up, assistance would be given in securing materials. However, if the construction had gone no further than the digging of a cellar, it was questionable whether it would be permitted to proceed, and if it was only in the blueprint stage, it would have to meet the test.

SPAB officials had no information as to how seriously the order would affect the motion picture industry. They pointed out that in the past few years a number of new houses have been built and many others modernized, but admitted that it was probable new theatres were planned for construction in cities which are enjoying the defense boom in population and income; those theatres, they indicated, are "out" for the duration.

Hits Radio, Warns Fly

The SPAB order, Federal Communications Commission Chairman James L. Fly disclosed Monday, in Washington, will have a "definite" effect on the construction of new radio broadcasting stations.

The matter has been one of concern to the Commission, and conferences have been held with SPAB and OPM officials with a view to working out some arrangements for the encouragement of new stations in areas now without primary service. In all likelihood, however, he said, there will be no hope for new stations in localities already getting service.

The FCC chairman said frankly he "would not advise anyone to attempt to go into the broadcasting industry at this time," but admitted that no decision had been made as to whether the FCC should continue to consider applications for construction permits for new stations.

In areas not now getting primary service, he said, the Commission considers new stations to have a defense advantage and it is hoped to work out some system whereby such stations can be constructed. In areas already getting service, however, it will be difficult to show that additional transmitters are essential to defense.

Power Another Threat

Rationing of power, which most certainly will affect theatre lighting and displays, may hit the Southeast and New England, shortly, according to officials of the Federal Power Commission, in Washington, who noted the lack of rainfall recently has aggravated the "power shortage" for defense factories.

Daylight saving time, however, was ruled out by the FPC spokesman. This may be good news for exhibitors, who generally oppose the time system because it robs them of an hour of the darkness during which people seek film recreation.

But the FPC added a qualificaiton: "The Commission reiterates its conviction that, in order to meet effectively any emergency which might arise in the future, the bill now under consideration by the Congress, which would authorize the President to establish daylight saving time whenever required, should be enacted as an essential part of the defense program."

Stressing gasoline conservation by motorists of the East a five-minute short subject, "The Reluctant Mr. Benchley," has been completed by Paramount in Hollywood under the sponsorship of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense. Robert Benchley is the star.

SHANGHAI THEATRES PROTEST POWER CUT

Reports reaching Portland, Ore., from Shanghai, China, say that motion picture theatres in China are protesting against the proposal of the power company to cut electrical power and electrical lighting from the present quota of 70 per cent of last year's monthly consumption. The theatres complain that almost every business except theirs is given some kind of preferential consideration.

Shows for Army Program Pushed

From a point outside Rockingham, N. C., the operator of one of the "automovie" units reported: "They watched this one in a pouring rain. Thomas Jenks, USO field worker, was amazed to see these men stand for two hours in the rain to see a movie." The 350 men who endured the downpour to see the film show had spent the day maneuvering in the rain.

Others reports from operators of the mobile units told interesting stories of the conditions under which the shows were presented and of the way in which they were received by the men.

One report from Alexandria, La., said the men were "very appreciative, due to the fact we were working under fire all during the picture. This is really roughing it, but a great experience. They told me in the camp that I was a casualty; had been fired on going through the lines."

Also from Alexandria: "I am working under fire and may be bombed any minute—or captured."

"The major reported the morale before we arrived very low," wrote another USO "automovie" operator from Olla, Okla. "When we left, everyone was singing and laughing."

From a spot eight miles west of Lake Charles, La.: "A grand group of boys, who assisted the 'automovie' in every way possible, such as cutting off tree limbs for clear vision, as this showing was right in the swamps."

In Winfield, La., the streets were so crowded by the sudden influx of maneuvering troops that the commanding officer and the Mayor asked the USO representative to bring an "automovie" into town and give a show in the ballpark. "The idea was to relieve the congestion in town," wrote the operator; an attendance of 4,000 indicated how well the idea worked.

In many places, the film showing is supplemented by entertainment presented by the soldiers themselves from the small stage on the back of the truck. During the World Series, the radio broadcasts of the games were boomed out through the woods and swamps of the maneuvers areas, "much to the delight of all the men, except the Dodgers rooters," as one operator phrased it.

On Sundays and during the recent Jewish High Holidays, the "automovie" loudspeaker systems have been used for church services in the open. In several instances, portable organs have been set up in the field for the religious services, and the music presented over the loudspeakers.

U.A. LEADS MAJORS IN MOVING FROM MINNESOTA DUE TO ANTI-BLOCK LAW

Company Closes Minneapolis Exchange; Says "Legislation Makes It Impossible to Do Business"; Others May Follow

United Artists will close its Minneapolis exchange next Saturday. It is the first major to announce such a move, prompted, according to its executives by the impossibility of doing business in a state which has a law compelling majors to offer their entire season's product for sale at one time, with a 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

Its anouncement was made Mouday, Haskell M. Masters, western sales manager, telegraphing to the exchange manager and staff, called the move "necessary due to legislation in the State of Minnesota, which makes it impossible for us to operate in that state."

United Artists has always sold its pictures individually and thus it has been an ally of the other five majors, bound by the Federal consent decree to sell films in blocks of five, and battling until two weeks ago in a St. Paul District Court to obtain a temporary injunction against the Minnesota law. That law has now been pronounced constitutional, by Judge Hugo Hanft, of the Ramsey County Court, who also denied the majors' request for an injunction. (See page 29, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, October 11th.)

Majors Meet in New York

His ruling led last week to hurried meetings in New York between majors' attorneys, and their Minneapolis representative, David Shearer, and between them and the sales executives.

Gradwell A. Sears, general sales manager of Warners, almost immediately upon receipt of the decision, said his company would observe the decree, but he did not set a date for closing of the exchange and he added that, whatever move Warner made, it would be made independently.

Ned Depinet, RKO executive, said Wednesday that his company, bound by the decree, would not sell in Minesota, and that RKO would not request a release from the decree in federal court.

MGM's decision was expected later this week. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, said in New York following a return from the Coast, that he would first confer with other sales officials, and with counsel.

What Twentieth Century-Fox would do, was not indicated at mid-week.

Paramount intimated a "plan," but what it was, no one predicted at mid-week. It is drawn by that company's attorneys, according to report, and is designed to "solve" the problem of selling films in Minnesota without violating the decree or the state's law.

Speculation on the majors' course, last week, centered on their closing of exchanges, a la United Artists; on a possible battle through higher courts, in the meanwhile delaying film selling; and on possible application to the New York Federal Court for relief from the decree, so the state law could be observed.

As did Mr. Sears, Neil Agnew, Paramount's sales manager, replied last week to T. E. Mortensen's telegram. Mr. Mortensen, publisher of Greater Amusements, had asked film company sales heads to keep product flowing to Minnesota theatres, warning many might be forced to close by the year's end, and claiming the state law had the disapproval of many exhibitors.

Mr. Agnew said "You may be sure we are fully cognizant of the gravity of the Minnesota situation, and are doing everything possible to alleviate it. Austin Keough (Paramount general counsel) assures me nothing is being left undone to bring about necessary relief within the shortest possible time. It is our hope the entire situation will be cleared up within a week."

Of the United Artists' Minneapolis exchange closing, the home office in New York remarked Monday, "Plans are now being completed to utilize the services of as many employees as possible in nearby exchanges."

Meanwhile, in that city, industry observers predicted the majors would test the constitutionality of the state law in the U. S. Supreme Court, adding also that Northwest Allied, proponent of the law, might also attempt to force the majors to sell in accordance with it, rather than close.

If the companies appeal Judge Hanft's decision, they must do so by next Thursday.

Industry observers and attorneys in Minneapolis this week were discussing the legality of servicing Minesota theatre accounts from outside the state. Such servicing would be in interstate commerce. Proponents of the Minesota law, however, are reported to be insisting that the state anti-block-of-five law would apply even in such cases because interstate commerce agents must be registered in the state.

SHOPPER-FILM PASSES PUBLICIZE STARS

Space on approximately 100,000 shopper-theatre passes introduced by the St. Louis Public Service Corporation, operator of the transit system in that city, has been given to local exhibitors to exploit stars and forthcomcoming films in that city. This, however, does not include theatre listings.

Les Kaufman, head of the Fanchon & Marco advertising and publicity department in St. Louis, is in charge of the promotional campaign and will handle it for Loew's as well as four other major first run houses.

The pass, costing 75 cents, was introduced by the transit company to encourage housewives to leave their home for shopping downtown and to visit theatres in the downtown and midtown areas.

Selznick, Korda, Pickford Meet on New U.A. Deal

David O. Selznick, new producer-owner in United Artists, met with Mary Pickford and Alexander Korda in New York this week to confer on the agreement, by which Mr. Selznick became a fourth partner in U. A. Mr. Selznick is planning to remain in New York for at least two weeks, until the task of selecting a president for United Artists is completed.

The "Gone With the Wind" producer said no complications have arisen in connection with the new agreement, that it was in good order and that several phases of the deal had been closed but that some papers remained to be signed. This confirmed an earlier report that the partnership-production contract with United Artists had not been completed.

Walter Wanger late Wednesday resigned from United Artists. The company announced at the same that it would produce under the UA name. See page 8.

To Produce Two

Mr. Selznick said he expected to have his first new production for UA release in work by the end of the year and that he probably will start work on the second production by the end of January. He said he was unable to identify the two films at this time.

In connection with "Gone With the Wind," the producer announced it would be released again, through MGM, before March 1, 1942, to the smaller theatres which have not already played the film. He pointed out that "GWTW" would not be cut or shown at lower admission scales, but that exhibitors might be given a better percentage leeway in terms than previously, in order to compensate smaller houses for the less frequent turnover due to the length of the picture.

With Mr. Selznick on his arrival in New York last Friday were Laudy Lawrence, his newly appointed special representative, and Val Lewton, his story editor. Mr. Selznick is reported to have denied that his appointment of Mr. Lawrence was an anticipatory move to the naming of Mr. Lawrence as sales manager.

Meanwhile, Charles Chaplin, who had been expected to come East for the owner-producer meetings, and to testify at the Senate subcommittee hearings in Washington, cancelled plans for his trip when the hearings were postponed indefinitely. In the event the UA board of directors holds a meeting in New York this week, Mr. Chaplin will be represented by Charles Schwartz, his New York counsel.

Miss Pickford was present at the Monday meeting with Mr. Korda and Mr. Selznick.

The meeting of United Artists owner-producers, it was reported early this week, would not take place at a formal board of directors session but would be in the nature of an "informal" conference to determine the new administrative policy of the company and to discuss selection of its president.

Harry D. Buckley, vice-president of United Artists, left New York for Detroit Tuesday, to acquire an unnamed first-run theatre there for the company.

SCHENCK, BERNSTEIN, MAYER TELL OF PAYMENTS TO BROWNE AND BIOFF

Executives on Stand at Extortion Trial of Union Leaders in New York; Payments Made in Cash in Hotel

A tale of millions choked out of industry by racketeers wearing the badge of labor and plying the noose of strike—a tangled web spun from New York to Hollywood with Chicago between, in the background of the motion picture—bales of $100 greenbacks tossed on hotel beds—whispered, fugitive, grim, conferences in gay Fifty-second street cafes—intricacies of accounting to deal with this amazing flow of dollars across corporation books—bizarre expenses, curious commissions—all this unfolds this week in the Browne-Bioff extortion trial in Federal Court in New York's Foley Square.

The telling is coming from a witness stand where three major executives of major corporations have been seated to respond to the questionings of Mathias F. Correa, United States district attorney. Nicholas M. Schenck of Loew's, David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of that concern, and Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of direction of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, at Culver City, had, at mid-week, told their stories. More of like rank and others with varying contacts with and parts in this spectacular drama of fanciful fact were to come at call.

$2,000,000 Total Seen

The indictment on which George E. Browne, a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor and president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and William Bioff, known as his "personal representative" but recorded as really his master by testimony, are on trial specifically charges them with extortion of $550,000 from four major picture companies. Seeping through the testimonies and related manifestations are appearing indications of a much larger total price of peace paid to labor agents, perhaps as much as the two millions that Bioff is alleged to have first demanded for himself.

The court room, where Judge John C. Knox presides, for the opening days of the trial has been seated to its capacity with a waiting line of spectators, mostly men of mature age and many of them figures in organized labor. The court room on the other side of the spectators' railing is crowded with reporters, lawyers, G-men and internal revenue agents, curious and attentive to incidental developments of the case, in all as numerous as the unofficial spectators.

Especially is it to be noted that a large staff of official court reporters, working in fifteen-minute shifts, are pouring out the record and all the words said there, almost as rapidly as they fall. Copies are going many places. There is more concerned than the case at bar.

The prosecution began its presentation Thursday of last week with the testimony of Nicholas M. Schenck, so elicited as to present an over-all picture of the transactions under examination and the whole case under the indictment.

Mr. Schenck told how Bioff approached industry leaders, told them he was boss of the union and demanded tribute of $2,000,000 as the price of peace. Later Bioff reduced his demands to an annual payment of $50,000 from the big companies, and $25,000 from the smaller ones, Mr. Schenck reported. He told how in a bedroom of the Waldorf-Astoria in New York he had made his payment in company with Sydney R. Kent, head of 20th Century-Fox, who made a payment, too.

George Browne introduced Bioff to him at New York in April, 1936, Mr. Schenck testified. He quoted Bioff as saying:

"Now look, I'll tell you why I'm here. I want you to know that I'm the boss. I elected Browne president for one purpose and one purpose only. I want from the movie industry $2,000,000."

Mr. Schenck recalled that he was amazed. His first reply to Bioff was, "You're crazy." Bioff warned him to "stop all this nonsense, it will cost you a lot more if you don't do it," Mr. Schenck related, and left him to think it over.

The meeting, which Mr. Schenck recalled as "outstanding and terrible," took place shortly before a reconsideration of the basic studio labor agreement between union heads and the film executives. It was followed, on the same day, by another session between Mr. Schenck, Browne and Bioff, and this time, Sidney Kent, head of the 20th Century-Fox studios. The union men repeated their demands, Mr. Schenck said, but reduced the sum demanded to one million dollars.

Demand Cut to $50,000

Two days later, on April 18, 1936, Mr. Schenck continued, he and Mr. Kent met with Browne and Bioff and told them that the industry could not possibly pay out a million dollars in one lump. Bioff, he said, replied:

"Maybe you're right. I'll tell you what I'll do, but remember it's my last offer. It's got to be $50,000 a year from the big companies and $25,000 from the small ones."

Bioff left the executives little time to make up their minds, Mr. Schenck continued. Two days later they met with the union leader who told them he was tired of waiting any longer and wanted their answer at once.

"Mr. Kent and I said we would do it, and that we couldn't see any way out if we were to remain in business," the witness said, after which Bioff demanded the money at once. Later he gave them two days in which to raise it.

Payment of the first installment was made at the Waldorf-Astoria, Mr. Schenck testified. "I got the $50,000 in United States currency from the treasurer of the company, and then called Mr. Kent." He then told how he and the Fox executive went to the Waldorf as directed by Browne.

He tossed his little bundle of money on a bed at the hotel, Mr. Schenck said, and Bioff picked it up and counted it at Browne's suggestion. Mr. Schenck said he stood looking out of the window, smoking, as Mr. Kent also tossed his payment on the bed and it was counted. The Loew president recalled that his bundle had been mostly $100 bills. The payments had been in cash at the union leaders' instructions.

A year later, in April 1937, Mr. Schenck continued, Bioff reminded him that payment was again due. He asked the union leader if he really meant it. "Stop that nonsense," was Bioff's reply, Mr. Schenck said. He prepared another bundle of currency.

The second payment was also made at a New York hotel where it was received by Browne and Bioff after the witness again tossed the package of money on a bed.

Subsequent payments to Bioff were not in cash, Mr. Schenck testified. He explained a device whereby he was spared the "distasteful" task of delivering the money in person. Instead, he said, Bioff designated his brother-in-law, Norman Thor Nelson, an agent for Smith and Aller, California distributors of DuPont raw film, to collect commissions on the purchase of film for MGM studios. This arrangement of payments, Mr. Schenck testified, continued until May 1941.

Followed Union Negotiations

The payoff demands, Mr. Schenck's testimony explained, were preceded by the efforts of Mr. Browne to lead his union back into the studio basic pact after he was elected president in 1934. The other unions refused to admit the IATSE, Mr. Schenck explained. A strike of projectionists was called in Chicago, Minneapolis and Omaha on November 30, 1935. The witness told how the basic agreement union leaders met with producers in New York and after they had said they could not furnish licensed operators they were persuaded to readmit the Browne-Bioff union.

Within four months the demands for money had been received, Mr. Schenck said. He admitted that the Chicago strike had made the industry very much afraid of disastrous financial losses through labor shutdowns.

Under cross-examination by George Breslin, Bioff's California attorney, Mr. Schenck said that while he had had prior dealings with the IATSE he was surprised by Bioff's demands. The witness described a strike of projectionists in 60 Loew theatres in New York in 1935 prior to the meeting with Bioff.

Negotiations with Local 306 at New York were unsuccessful, Mr. Schenck continued, until Loew's hired an intermediary, Mort Singer, of Chicago, for $100,000 to appeal to the union's international president, Browne, at Chicago. The witness indicated that the money went to Browne and said that soon afterwards the strike was settled.

Judge Knox adjourned the trial Thursday over the Columbus Day holiday until Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Schenck again took the stand at 2:00 P.M. on Tuesday to tell why the "peace" payments had been kept secret until the government indicted Browne and Bioff last May. He repeated his Thursday story, telling again how Bioff had called himself "boss" of the IATSE union, and demanded, first $2,000,000, then $50,000 a year. Mr. Schenck, in testimony and cross-examination, revealed how the money was paid.

Not fear of violence to himself, but the fact

A. F. OF L. OUSTS GEORGE BROWNE

The American Federation of Labor in convention at Seattle, Wednesday, rejected George E. Browne, IATSE president, as an AFL vice-president by a vote of 37,944 to 421. All votes favoring Browne came from IATSE delegates.

The convention also adopted an anti-racketeering resolution.

SCHENK TELLS OF BIOFF PAYMENT

that "I was afraid of the consequences that would occur to our business if the demands were not met" was the reason for the five-year silence about the payments to the union leaders, Mr. Schenck testified under cross-examination by Martin Conboy, former U. S. Attorney in New York, and now chief of Browne's defense staff.

He told the defense counsel that he had not gone to state or federal authorities for fear that the film industry would be permanently injured by strikes.

A motion for a mistrial made by Mr. Conboy after the cross-examination was denied by Judge Knox. Browne's attorney sought the mistrial on the grounds that the re-examination had brought testimony from Mr. Schenck of other payments to the defendants than those previously described. Judge Knox ordered the record amended after Mr. Schenck admitted that he had not made the other payments to Browne personally but denied the mistrial motion.

Payment Settled Strike

Mr. Schenck during the re-examination repeated his testimony from Thursday on how, in 1935, Browne had been paid to settle a strike against Loew's and RKO theatres in New York. He said that Loew's had paid $100,000 and RKO $50,000 through Mort Singer, then identified as RKO midwest manager, for payment to Browne for his intercession in the New York strike. The intermediary, Mr. Schenck added, received an additional $50,000 to cover income tax payments on the money, which passed through his personal account.

An attempt by defense counsel to bring into the cross-examination the court actions against the witness's brother, Joseph, brought an angry denial from Nicholas Schenck that it was a motive for his testimony. He said that the question had not once been mentioned by Mr. Correa during pre-trial questioning.

Under questioning by Mr. Conboy, Mr. Schenck denied he had failed to attend one of the meetings on the basic pact in 1936. He insisted he had attended all of them.

Mr. Bernstein, the treasurer of Loew's, followed the Loew's president on the stand Tuesday, and told how the details of payment to Bioff had been arranged. He described how Mr. Schenck had told him of Bioff's demands in 1936, and how he had secured the $50,000 paid by Mr. Schenck in the first installment, from the personal Bernstein vault in a New York bank. He did so again in 1937.

Under cross-questioning by Defense Attorney Uterhart, Mr. Bernstein explained that the $50,000 which he gave Mr. Schenck for Bioff was secured from his own deposit box at the National City Bank of New York in which, he said, he customarily kept $200,000 in cash.

Expense Vouchers Used

In response to questioning by Boris Kostelanetz, Assistant U. S. Attorney, Mr Bernstein said that Loew's executives had written expense vouchers to repay the sum, piecemeal. A number of the vouchers were introduced in evidence, over the objection of the defense counsel. The repayment was through convention and travel expense vouchers, Mr. Bernstein explained, to keep the actual use of the money off the records.

Wednesday, on the stand again under cross-examination, Mr. Bernstein mentioned Marvin Schenck, Leopold Friedman, Al Lichtman, Charles C. Moskowitz, and Joseph Vogel as the Loew executives who had so written their expense vouchers.

Under cross-examination by the defense, Mr. Bernstein added that he considered the vouchers were "for legitimate expenses of the company," although they did not reveal their true purpose.

Mr. Correa again took up the examination and the Loew treasurer explained that the only other time he had used such vouchers was for a $25,000 advance to Mr. Moskowitz for a payment to Browne. The court permitted Mr. Bernstein to say that he had given the money to Mr. Moskowitz but ordered the jury to disregard the reference to Browne.

The head of the MGM studio, Mr. Mayer, on the stand Wednesday elaborated on the raw-film commission method of paying Bioff. He said that in 1937, Mr. Schenck telephoned him to ask whether it was still possible to set up a sub-agency with Smith and Aller for the purchase of DuPont film, with seven per cent commissions.

Agent Assigned

"I said I thought it could be," Mr. Mayer said. "Mr. Schenck then told me 'I want you to give the sub-agency to a friend of Willie Bioff'." Mr. Mayer said that he had asked why and that Mr. Schenck had replied, "Because he can make us plenty of trouble."

Mr. Mayer testified that he followed instructions and that Mr. Bioff later appeared with his brother-in-law, Norman Thor Nelson, whom he introduced to John Wesley Smith of Smith and Aller. In 1939, he continued, Harry Beatty was substituted for Mr. Nelson as sub-agent at Bioff's request. Mr. Mayer said that MGM purchases of film were about evenly divided between Du Pont and Eastman Kodak and estimated yearly commissions from the Du Pont purchases at $70,000.

SALARY LEVELS AND CALIFORNIA WEATHER

George Breslin, of Willie Bioff's counsel, was cross-examining Louis B. Mayer Wednesday afternoon, at the Browne-Bioff extortion trial in New York, on the question of whose status in Loew's was superior—that of Mr. Mayer, as production chief, or of Nicholas M. Schenck, president. Presiding Judge John C. Knox cut short Attorney Breslin's digging into the relative salary levels of the two executives.

"Look," reminded Judge Knox, "a referee in bankruptcy gets $25,000 to $30,000 a year. And I get $10,000."

"That settles that," conceded Mr. Breslin, and he sat down.

At another point, the more or less delicate-to-native-sons subject of California weather came up for open discussion and that, too, ended abruptly.

Norman Thor Nelson, Bioff's brother-in-law, was testifying about how he and Bioff had driven into the California countryside one day and Bioff had expressed high admiration for both country and climate.

"Let's stop," admonished Judge Knox, "everybody in California discusses that."

He said he knew nothing of the Bioff demands on the industry until just before the indictments in May 1941. At that time, he testified, Mr. Schenck assured him that there was nothing to be disturbed about and that he had merely to testify about the introduction to Mr. Smith.

Mr. Nelson took the stand on Wednesday as a government witness in the prosecution of his wife's brother. He told how he had accepted the Smith and Aller commissions and turned the entire amount over to Bioff, less a weekly salary of $125 for himself. He said that he had gone to California in 1937 at Bioff's request.

Bioff explained, Mr. Nelson testified, that MGM was indebted to him but could not pay him because of his post as a union official. "It was up to me to collect," Mr. Nelson said.

Commissions, he explained, were drawn weekly from Smith and Aller and deposited in a savings account in the Hollywood branch of Bank of America. They were turned over to Bioff in cash in 16 payments totaling $55,820 between July 26, 1937 and January 14, 1939, Nelson declared.

Periodically, Bioff inspected his bank book to see that the checks were being deposited, Mr. Nelson said, and on one such occasion Browne was present. A separate ledger kept by Mr. Nelson showing deposits and payments was admitted in evidence over the objection of defense counsel.

Totalled $236,477

Nicholas Nayfack, a Loew studio executive under Mr. Mayer, corroborated the latter's testimony and explained how he had arranged for Mr. Beatty to replace Mr. Nelson in 1939. At that time, Mr. Nayfack asserted, Bioff told him that he had "had some difficulty" with Mr. Nelson and didn't want his brother-in-law "to know too much of his business."

Mr. Smith followed Mr. Nayfack to the stand. Once a week, he said, Mr. Nelson came to the Smith and Aller office to collect his check. Orders for film were received direct from the MGM laboratory. The total payments to both Mr. Nelson and Mr. Beatty amounted to $236,477, he said. Du Pont's business with MGM increased from $10,000 a month to $100,000 after the arrangement with Mr. Nelson, Mr. Smith testified. He denied, however, that the agreement had been made with MGM in order to give a rebate. It was specifically understood that the sub-agent was not to be an MGM employe, he declared, and asserted the money would have been paid to anyone who could have increased the business tenfold.

Thursday the defense was scheduled to cross-examine Mr. Nelson, and other witnesses introduced by the government on Tuesday. At the conclusion of the Wednesday session Judge Knox announced that the trial would recess Thursday evening until Monday morning because of other court engagements.

Answer Receivership Suit. Judge Orders Newark IATSE

Six members of Newark local 244, Moving Picture Machine Operators Union, IATSE affiliate, suing in Chancery Court for appointment of a receivership for the union's affairs Tuesday won an order to officials to show why Louis Kaufman, business agent and other officials should not be enjoined from exercising their offices.

Vice Chancellor John O. Bigelow ordered Mr. Kaufman, one of those indicted on September 29th along with William Bioff, George Browne, and Nick Circello for pocketing $14,500 in union dues, to show cause why he should not be suspended from office.

ARBITRATION 'SUPREME COURT' RULES AGAINST AFFILIATE 'EXCLUSIVE-RUNS'

Loew's Loses Appeal in Earle Case; Wilmington Exclusive Run Hit; Two New Appeals, Consent Award Settlements

Consenting distributors were forbidden to grant exclusive runs to affiliated theatres, in effect, by the Appeal Board of the motion picture arbitration tribunals in a precedent setting decision last week, on Friday, October 10th.

The ruling upheld an award by a Philadelphia arbitrator ordering Loew's, Incorporated to offer pictures on "some run" to the Earle Theatre, Newcastle, Del. Its result will be to end the exclusive hold on MGM product in the Wilmington area held for over ten years by Loew's Parkway theatre. The distributor owns the theatre, and claimed that under Section XVII of the consent decree it was permitted to maintain exclusive run of MGM pictures for its own theatre.

The Appeal Board ruled that Section XVII "refers merely to arrangements made by the distributor defendant for the exhibition of its own pictures in its own theatres" or in affiliated theatres. There is nothing in the section which limits the right of independent exhibitors to obtain pictures on "some run" as provided by Section VI of the decree, the Appeal Board wrote.

Favors Independents

"To enable independent exhibitors to obtain pictures for exhibition in their theatres is a basic part of the decree" the three judges, Van Vechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam, and George W. Alger wrote. They warned that if Section XVII was interpreted as granting a monopoly to affiliated houses it might nullify to a large extent one of the main purposes of the decree. If the consenting distributors had the right to grant its own theatres "an exclusive license such as the Parkway has enjoyed" the result, they said might well be disastrous to independent exhibitors who would be able to obtain few if any pictures if the Big Five exercised their right.

The action was started against MGM on April 2nd when David Silver, then owner of the Earle filed the some run complaint at Philadelphia. It was the tribunal's second case. Ruppert C. Schaeffer, lawyer, and a professor at the Wharton School of Business of the University of Pennsylvania granted the Earle "some run" in early July and Loews immediately appealed.

The original complaint was entered by Mr. Silver. After the hearing, but before the award he sold the Earle to John and Grace Koczak. With the consent of the defendant the new owners entered submissions to the rules of arbitration and the award and appeal were decided on merits.

Distributors are amply protected against loss under Section VI the Board declared. If the distributor can show that granting "some run" to a theatre will reduce its total revenue in a competitive district it may refuse a license, the board observed.

Costs of the action were levied against Loew's. Under the rules of the consent decree the Earle must be offered "some run" on MGM pictures within ten days after the decision is rendered.

Two more decisions by arbitrators, in St. Louis and Pittsburgh, went to the Appeals Board this week. They are the 14th and 15th cases to reach the supreme motion picture arbitration tribunal.

Louis M. Sosna, Mexico, Mo. independent on Friday asked a review of the dismissal of his "some run" action against Loew's. He asks a reversal on merits and declares that the licenses offered his Sosna theatre were priced so high as to defeat the purposes of Section VI.

In New York the winner of an arbitration complaint asked a review of the arbitrator's award for the first time when the Andora Amusement Corporation operating the Liberty theatre, Plainfield, N. J., asked the Appeal Board to cut still further the clearance granted by James A. O'Gorman, arbitrator. As reported in Motion Picture Herald for September 27th, page 24, Mr. O'Gorman reduced the margins held by the Strand and Oxford theatres over the Liberty from 30 to 21 days.

Joseph Siccardi, president of the Andora company in his original complaint had asked that Warners, RKO, and 20th Century-Fox

Highlights of Appeal Decision

Following are highlights of the fifth Appeal Board decision upholding the award of "some run" MGM pictures to the Earle theatre, New Castle, Del.:

"This is an appeal by the defendant from an award by an Arbitrator holding that, contrary to the provisions of Section VI of the Decree, the distributor has refused to license its pictures to the complainant, and directing Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures to offer its pictures for license to the complainant for exhibition in complainant's theatre in New Castle, Delaware, on a run to be designated by the distributor and upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat Section VI of the Decree.

"The defendant is a producer, a distributor and an exhibitor of motion picture. It owns and operates Loew's Parkway Theatre in Wilmington, Delaware. This theatre has first run in the Wilmington competitive area on all pictures distributed by defendant. These pictures are often referred to as M-G-M Pictures. For approximately ten years defendant has adopted a policy not to license in the Wilmington competitive area for a second or subsequent run any pictures actually shown in the Parkway theatre. A few M-G-M Pictures are not shown in the Parkway theatre. Some of these are shown in other theatres in Wilmington first run and as to those pictures the defendant is willing to license other theatres, including the Earle, in the Wilmington competitive area for a second or subsequent run.

Quoting Section VI (some run), of the decree the board said:

"Complainants rely on this Section and seek some run of M-G-M pictures for the Earle theatre. Defendant has made no claim that complainants do not meet the conditions stated in Section VI and has offered no evidence to show that the granting of some run to the Earle theatre would have the effect of reducing defendant's total film revenue in the Wilmington competitive area. Complainants therefore are clearly entitled to an award of some run unless defendant is correct in claiming that Section XVII of the Decree has the effect of nullifying the provisions of Section VI with respect to a producer's own pictures distributed to and exhibited in its own theatre.

Citing the provisions of Section XVII the Board continued:

"The only question involved in this appeal is whether Section XVII permits the defendant to maintain an exclusive run policy for the exhibition of its own pictures in its own theatre in the competitive area which includes the City of Wilmington and such nearby towns as New Castle. A proper construction of Section XVII does not permit the exclusive run policy claimed by the defendant.

"Section XVII refers merely to arrangements made by a distributor defendant for the exhibition of its own pictures in its own theatres or in the theatres in which it is interested to the extent provided by Section XVII. The right of each distributor defendant to contract with its own theatres for the exhibition of its own pictures is not limited, impaired or restricted; but there Section XVII stops. There is nothing in that Section limiting the right of independent exhibitors to obtain pictures pursuant to the provisions of Section VI. If the contention of the defendant should be upheld it might nullify to a large extent one of the main purposes of the Decree.

"To enable independent exhibitors to obtain pictures for exhibition in their theatres is a basic object of the Decree. If each one of the five distributors, who were parties to the Decree, had the right in each competitive district where it had a theatre of its own to grant its theatre an exclusive license, such as the Parkway has enjoyed, the result might well be, if all five exercised their right, disastrous to many independent exhibitors who would be able to obtain few if any pictures for exhibition in their theatres. In such event many independent exhibitors might well be put out of business. The Decree does not contemplate any such result. In view of our construction of the Decree it is unnecessary to consider the rights that the defendant may have had with respect to licensing films to its own theatres prior to the entry of the Decree.

"Section VI gives each distributor ample protection. If a distributor can show that the granting of a run on any terms to an exhibitor will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the exhibitor's theatre is located then the distributor may refuse a license. If the contrary is true and the distributor's film revenue is not reduced by granting an independent exhibitor a run then the distributor cannot possibly be injured."

CALIFORNIA, NEW YORK CASES END

be ordered to grant the two Walter Reade circuit houses not more than 14 days clearance on single bills and not more than seven days on double bills over the Liberty. The appeal was filed on October 10th.

Rotus Harvey, operator of the Westwood theatre, Westwood, Calif., lost his clearance complaint against the Big Five at San Francisco when F. J. Hellman, arbitrator dismissed the action. The decision held that the demand for day and date run with the Sierra theatre, Susanville, did not come under Section VIII.

A consent award entered on October 11th at the New York tribunal ended the clearance complaint of the Cornwall Amusement Company, operating the Storm King theatre, Cornwall, N. Y. The case was New York's 14th. All five distributors and the Broadway and Ritz, Newburgh were cited in the demand for a cut from 30 to seven days.

Under the award entered by Osmond K. Fraenkel, arbitrator, Warners, MGM and 20th-Fox agreed to reduce the Ritz and Broadway margin to 20 days. RKO and Paramount were dismissed on the grounds that they do not sell to the Storm King.

Settle in Philadelphia

Philadelphia's eighth case, a clearance action by Columbus Stamper in behalf of the Great Northern theatre, ended in a consent dismissal Thursday when Walter H. Robinson, arbitrator announced that Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and MGM conceded that 7 days was reasonable clearance for the competing Keystone theatre. The settlement also provided a 21 day margin after the Warner circuit Strand. Costs were shared.

Memphis Award, New Case

The second Memphis case, "some run" action by the Petit Jean theatre, Memphis against MGM ended in a dismissal Monday when Hunter Lee, arbitrator, ruled that the distributor had offered product to the theatre. He said that Metro complied with the intent of Section VI and denied that the licensing prices were so high as to defeat the decree's purpose. Costs were assessed against the complainant.

A third case was filed at Memphis on Friday when the Cotton Bowl theatre at Lepanto, Ark., filed for "some run." It accused RKO, Paramount, 20th-Fox, and Warners of refusing product. The Strand theatre, also in Lepanto was named as an interested party.

Fifth New Haven Case

At New Haven Joseph Shulman, doing business as Plaza Theatre, Windsor, has filed a clearance complaint against the Big Five, asking elimination of the 30-day clearance now granted the Windsor Theatre. Mr. Shulman asserts he opened his house in December, 1939, shortly after the Lockwood and Gordon circuit took over and renovated the Windsor Theatre. This is the territory's fifth complaint.

St. Louis

Union classification of theaters was injected into the hearing of Victor Thien's clearance complaint against Paramount and Twentieth Century Fox at St. Louis on October 9th.

Defending the clearance held by the Union and Aubert, F&M-St. Louis Amusement Co., operated theaters, over Thien's Palm, Matt Schuler, booker for the amusement company, testified the two theaters are required to pay operators $80 a week, as compared to $55 a week at the Palm, and are required to employ two stagehands at $78 a week while Mr. Thien has none.

Mr. Thien contends he is given films from the two companies as much as 34 days behind the Union, his closest competition, and seven to 14 days behind the Aubert, located some distance from his house.

Mr. Schuler testified the clearance granted the Aubert and Union was established in 1930 by the old Film Board of Trade and is in line with clearance granted the company at its 25 theaters over the city. The St. Louis Amusement Company has intervened in the complaint.

Maurice Schweitzer and Ben Reingold, branch managers of Paramount and Twentieth-Century Fox, respectively testified to the definition of clearance and stipulations in contracts. The hearing was adjourned until Oct. 18th.

John J. Nangle, St. Louis attorney will arbitrate the complaint of Mrs. Mildred Karch, operating the Rolla in Rolla, Mo. against the Big Five for "some run." Hearings will begin October 21st.

Philadelphia

Hearings on Philadelphia's 11th case, clearance action of the Parkside theatre, Camden were halted Friday by the last minute intervention of Joseph Varballow in behalf of the Victoria theatre. Robert J. Callaghan arbitrator deferred the hearings until October 17th. He also ruled that Case No. 10 also scheduled for the 17th and involving the Liberty theatre Camden owned by the same complainant. Abe M. Ellis will be heard immediately afterwards. He is arbitrator of both cases.

A request by Warner's circuit to intervene in behalf of the Lyric theatre was taken under advisement. Meanwhile the arbitrator will visit the involved houses.

Case No. 9, the third clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis, in behalf of his Broad theatre Philadelphia, was heard on Tuesday. The action is against RKO, Paramount, Warners and Warners' Logan, Grange and Bromley theatres and William C. Hunt's Rockland Theatre. Calvin H. Rankin is the arbitrator.

Case No. 12, the clearance complaint of Lewen Pizor in behalf of his Tioga Theatre here, was postponed until October 29th, upon agreement of all the parties.

Washington

At Baltimore the Metco Theatres, Inc. have intervened in the clearance complaint of the Linden theatre against Loew's, Warners and Paramount. The case is Washington's eighth.

The seventh Washington case, clearance complaint against MGM and the Reese theatre, Harrington, Del., was heard Wednesday. Phil Babys, Loew salesman, was the only witness for the complainant Sam Mellitts. Joseph A. Cantrell, lawyer, was arbitrator.

Washington received its ninth case this week when John H. Taylor, owner of the Charles theatre in La Plata, Md., filed his second complaint. The complaint was directed against Loew's and charged that the clearance afforded the Marlboro at Marlboro, Md., was involved. It also asked that the arbitrator "clarify Loew's selling policy in respect to the Charles theatre and the Waldorf in Waldorf, Md." The Sydney Lust circuit operates the Waldorf and Marlboro. RKO, 20th-Fox and Paramount were cited as interested parties.

Mr. Taylor's first complaint, filed in March, and Washington's second case was settled and withdrawn.

Detroit

A former governor and former attorney general will arbitrate Michigan's fifth and sixth cases. Wilbur H. Brucker, former governor will hear the Parkside theatre, Detroit, specific run complaint on October 28th. Paul W. Voorhies, ex-attorney general of Michigan will hear the clearance case, Detroit No. 5, filed by the Ritz theatre of Watervleit. Hearings begin on October 27th.

Chicago

Th Oriental Theater clearance case has been postponed until October 20th by stipulation of the parties concerned. This is the third date that has been set for Case No. 6.

Alexander Eulenberg, an attorney, will arbitrate Case No. 7, clearance demand of the K & S circuit's Sheridan.

Portland

Irving Rand, Portland, Ore., attorney, has been named arbitrator in the action brought by Graeper's Egyptian theatre asking that clearance following first-run be shortened from 91 to 45 days.

The date of the hearing has not been set. The defendants are Paramount, Loew's, Warners, 20th Century-Fox, National Theatres Corporation and Fox West Coast Corporation.

New Haven

New Haven's fourth case, the College Open Air Theatre, Middleton against the Big Five has been adjourned without date at the request of Warner Brothers.

New York

Lloyd Buchman, New York attorney, has been named arbitrator in the clearance case of the Kisco theatre in Mt. Kisco, New York. Hearings will start on October 19th. It is New York Case No. 19.

Group Takes Option On Inland Theatres

An operating option on theatres owned by Inland Theatre Company in Walla Walla, Ellensburg, Toppenish, Sunnyside, Kennewick and Pasco—but not those in Yakima —has been taken by a middle western group of operators, represented by P. J. Dee and S. J. Gregory, and expiring February 1st, 1942.

This announcement has been made by Frederick Mercy, Sr., of Yakima, Wash., president and founder of the chain of thetres.

The Yakima theatres will continue under Mr. Mercy's personal supervision, while the others will be supervised by his son, Frederick Mercy, Jr., as general manager.

Walla Walla will be the operating headquarters of the circuit during the term of the option.

Joe Fisher on Tour

"Singapore Joe" Fisher, former operator of the Capitol theatre in Singapore and 30 other film houses in the Malay States, is currently in the United States on a lecture tour with a color picture called "Singapore," a series of scenic and current news short subjects put together by Mr. Fisher during the past ten years. Mr. Fisher was induced to make the film by his friends, after monetary restrictions tied up his funds in the far east.

TELEVISION PATENTS POOL FORMED BY RCA AND DUMONT LABORATORIES

Cross - Licensing Agreement, Signed by Radio Company and Paramount Affiliate, Permits Patent Exchanges

A television patents pool between the Radio Corporation of America and the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories at New York gave evidence this week that the strangle lock of defense priorities has not completely halted important new television activity.

There were also innovations in the program techniques of stations licensed for commercial television programs and promises of motion picture film specially produced for television to show that all was not completely quiet in the visual broadcasting field. Hope of increasing the size of television audiences while the defense emergency lasts, however, appears to have faded completely. Nevertheless television executives, and pioneer commercial sponsors express confidence in the industry's future when restrictions are lifted. They will, they say, persist with program experimentation.

Exchange All Rights

The Du Mont laboratories last week announced the consummation with RCA of cross-licensing agreements covering all the television patents held by the two corporations. The deal, which, it is reported, does not involve any financial transaction, permits the exchange of non-exclusive, non-assignable rights to all the major television and cathode ray oscillography patents held by the two companies.

Currently the agreement is not expected to result in any change in the design of receivers. Work on new television equipment has virtually ceased in both plants. Even if current stocks of raw material are not confiscated for national defense work it is reported doubtful that more than 1,500 new receivers could be produced without a priority status for the industry. There is little chance of the OPM granting this now.

The potential significance of the agreement between the two companies, bitter rivals in the development of practical electronic television, is seen in the possibilities of standardization of future developments. The widely divergent demands of RCA and Du Mont during the hearings by the Federal Communication Commission and before the National Television Standards Committee were considered major obstacles in the year long effort of the industry to agree on commercial standards.

All transmission and reception equipment perfected by the two companies is covered by the exchange formula, it is reported. During the emergency it is expected to facilitate continued experimentation. When priorities are lifted the agreement will make mass production and sales promotion easier.

The announcement of the deal by Allen B. Du Mont said that it licensed the Du Mont Laboratories under "standard RCA patent license agreements, while Du Mont in turn grants RCA a non-exclusive, non-transferable license under all Du Mont patents covering important advances and refinements in cathode-ray oscillography and in television transmission and reception."

A new producer of animated motion pictures invaded the television film field at New York this week when Douglas Leigh and his outdoor advertising agency prepared a series of 14 weather forecasts for a sponsored program over the National Broadcasting Company's WNBT.

Mr. Leigh, creator of the animated spectacular electric signs which have revolutionized outdoor display practice in Times Square adopted the black and white cartoon motion pictures used for his animated signs. The pictures, drawn and photographed, are produced in his own laboratories on 16 mm film. NBC calls them commercial television's "first specially prepared animated cartoons" and "filmdom's first special contribution since the advent of commercial television."

The Leigh reels were produced by Otto Messmer and Hutch Hutchinson, former motion picture animators. Mr. Messmer was the originator of the "Felix the Cat" cartoons and Mr. Hutchinson is a former Walt Disney animator.

The 14 one-minute reels, to cover all ordinary weather forecasts, were previewed at the NBC studios on Tuesday. They were amusing and will undoubtedly add interest to the television weather forecasts. They did not however measure up to Hollywood film cartoon standards. Dialogue and sound were particularly weak. Pert verses introduced the reels but the "scenario," although of only a minute's duration, did not sustain them.

Botany Will Sponsor Forecasts

The forecasts will be sponsored nightly by the Botany Worsted Mills to advertise neckties. The commercials are worked into the forecasts. In some of the reels the "plugs" were cleverly executed. In others they rather obviously intruded on the telling of the weather forecast,

A woolly lamb is the central character of the weather shorts. He is an appealing character but has a repellently squeaky voice. The scheme is an interesting solution of the television commercial problem and if successfully developed might well open an important field for the use of film on the television programs.

The general run of programs over the New York stations continued to maintain an interesting calibre. WCBW, the Columbia Broadcasting System station at New York continues to concentrate on studio material, varying between informative and entertainment items.

On Friday it continued its national Defense series by showing the final stages of assembly of an airplane engine. Mechanics from the Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corporation assembled an in-line air-cooled engine of the type used in Army training planes while engineers and Office of Emergency Management officials explained the workings of the defense aircraft subcontracting and production. The program had educational interest.

Television Newsreel

The first specially edited television newsreel in the nation has been launched by Photo & Sound, Inc., of San Francisco, in conjunction with the Telenews Theaters Company. The first one-reel release processed by Precision Laboratories of New York, already has been shown at the Telenews in San Francisco and aired via W6XAO, the Don Lee television station in Hollywood.

It is being forwarded to NBC and CBS in New York, and future test releases will be made available to all television stations in the country. Releases are obtained through a deal with the Telenews Theatres Company, which uses its own cameras in San Francisco, New York, Washington, Cleveland, Seattle, Chicago, Los Angeles and El Paso, in addition to obtaining material elsewhere.

Only the latest newsreels and time subjects will be used, it is asserted, all on 35 mm. film. The reel is edited by John Tobin, manager of the San Francisco Telenews Theatre, and Andy Potter of Photo & Sound, Inc. It will be airmailed to the New York laboratory for processing and printing. A two-month test campaign is planned, to determine marketability and profit, according to Mr. Potter.

The sample reel includes recent views of the siege of Leningrad, through courtesy of Russian War Films (Artkino), plus commentary by Walter Duranty; a football forecast by Dick Hyland, an auto crash on Oakland Speedway, views of the new California State Guard, and a picturization of Cleveland, Ohio, as one of the nation's defense centers. The reel was shown to the public and press in San Francisco for the first time last week.

Sponsor in Philadelphia

At Philadelphia the Atlantic Refining Company, through the N. W. Ayer agency was the first commercial television sponsor on WPTZ, television station of Philco Radio & Television Corp., Philadelphia. Atlantic Refining sponsored a Temple U.-Kansas night football game on September 26th. This was the first time that a night football game has been telecast. It required five cameras on the playing field and in the station's studios. The commercial announcements were televised from the studios between periods. Philco also has appointed Frank Thorpe Vreeland, playwright and former drama critic of the New York Herald-Tribune and the New York Sun to the post of dramatic director for WPTZ. He has been previously engaged in motion picture writing. Ernest Walling is in charge of Philco studio productions and Gilbert G. Brown has joined the remote pick-up production staff. He is a former sound engineer at the RKO studios in Hollywood.

Balaban & Katz theatre circuit executives at Chicago are expressing elation over interest in the television demonstrations which have been given on the mezzanine floor of the Chicago Theatre for the past five weeks. The demonstrations ended Friday, October 10th. The equipment for lobby demonstration will be moved to one of the neighborhood B. & K. houses like the Uptown, Southtown or Tivoli theatres, or installed in an out-of-town house, within the next two weeks for further promotional tests.

SILENT FILM POLICY PROVES SUCCESSFUL

Finishing its third month, the old Green Street theatre in San Francisco, renamed the Cinemat and running on a silent film policy is a success. San Francisco motion picture circles predicted that the theatre would not last more than two weeks.

The Cinemat is operated by Mr. and Mrs. Stabford E. Moses, Jr. Patrons who attend are labeled "curiosity seekers" by exhibitors as the Cinemat has never taken any display advertisements nor issued publicity stories.

Unlike the Movie Parade in Hollywood which shows 16mm silent films, the Cinemat shows 35mm films. Such films as William S. Hart in "Tumbleweed," "Dracula" and "The Phantom of the Opera" are currently being shown.

CIRCUITS, DISTRIBUTORS PICK UP HUDSON'S FILM TESTIMONIAL PLAN

Endorsements of Motion Pictures by Civic and Religious Leaders to Be Stressed in Trailer and Newspaper Advertising Copy

The testimonial advertising technique, adapted to a national institutional selling campaign for motion pictures, proposed by Earl J. Hudson, president of United Detroit Theatres, at the convention of Michigan Allied in Detroit last week, is already in process of formulation throughout that state. Attracting nation wide interest, both within and outside the industry the plan appears likely to be the first of several pending proposals for institutional selling to evoke a concrete response from both distributors and exhibitors in all sections.

There has been a marked trend of late towards the selling of motion pictures as an entertainment institution. During the summer the "Movie Vacation" advertising program inaugurated by the Philadelphia Bulletin was copied with success by exhibitors and newspapers all over the country. In July, Henderson M. Richey, director of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exhibitor relations urged the industry to go "doorbell ringing." Speaking at the North and South Carolina MPTO convention, he told exhibitors that the industry must sell itself to its neighbors as an institution by the equivalent of a door-to-door campaign.

Endorsed by Companies

Endorsement of the new plan spread rapidly this week. At Paramount, on Wednesday morning, Sam Dembow, Jr., said, a good percentage of the theatre partners and associates in the Paramount exhibition group were going ahead with it.

Columbia Pictures, through its general sales manager, A. Montague, approved the institutional promotion at its eastern regional sales convention in New York over the weekend. Mr. Montague, who was a leader in spreading the "Movie Vacation" scheme described the new proposal as "a constructive one" and said his company would actively assist.

Among others reportedly interested in the plan are Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the Loew circuit.

Testimonial advertising, Mr. Hudson told the Michigan Allied members last week, has been proved by research and sampling to be one of the most productive type. It has surpassed all other forms, he said, when the names of the persons paying tribute to an idea were names that were nationally known and commanded public confidence and respect.

So many persons have thrown bricks at the industry, he said, that he sought to determine if there were not many prominent persons willing to express praise for the screen as an entertainment medium. In a sample campaign Mr. Hudson is reported to have secured fifteen endorsements of motion pictures. These, it is understood, will form the basis of the campaign to be launched in mid-November via trailer, newspaper advertising, publicity and display throughout Michigan.

At the convention Mr. Hudson warned that mere eulogy of the screen would be insufficient. He outlined a campaign of endorsements of its entertainment, educational and informative attributes as well as such specific aspects as the comfort and safety of theatre recreation, its convenience, and inspirational values. Also he suggested seeking endorsement from women of the screen's style leadership, and from other experts of its architectural and home decorating inspiration, its pictorial presentation of current history and many accurate contributions to education.

15 Endorsements Obtained

The names secured for the first fifteen endorsements at Detroit are led by President Roosevelt. The other testimonials are from: Mrs. S. S. Sutherland, Federation of Women's Clubs and Detroit Council of Churches; Frank Cody, superintendent of Detroit schools; Monsignor Edward J. Hickey, Chancellor of the archdiocese of Detroit; Major General C. H. Bonesteel, Commander, Sixth Corps Area, U.S.A.; Private Kenneth E. Wilkinson, U. S. Army; Louella O. Parsons, and Hedda Hopper, columnists; Harold Heffernan, North American Newspaper Alliance; Rabbi Leon Fram, Temple Beth-El; Murray D. Van Wagoner, governor of Michigan; and Damon Runyon and Malcolm W. Bingay, writers.

In Detroit, Ray Branch, president of Michigan Allied, announced that the organization members would launch the institutional drive with trailers of President Roosevelt's remarks on the motion picture as an American institution. They were made for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences dinner in February.

The Butterfield circuit, Cooperative Theatres of Michigan and many Wolverine state independents are reportedly preparing to join the drive. There will be a meeting with Mr. Hudson and Mr. Branch to discuss coordination at Detroit this week.

National Screen Service, Mr. Hudson said, will make trailers and other advertising accessories of the testimonials for distribution at cost. George Dembow, vice president in charge of National Screen sales at New York, said the offer extended not only to members of Michigan Allied and other theatres who use the Detroit campaign but to any theatres using the plan elsewhere.

For United Detroit theatres, Mr. Hudson reported, the initial statements will be made up in trailers using text rather than voice. Each statement will be highlighted with an appropriate background of design and scored with semi-patriotic music.

Emphasis will be placed on the American origin, development, and distinctly American character of the motion picture. Citing the many distinctive American contributions of the film art Mr. Hudson expressed the belief that the industry had the right to be patriotic about itself in words or music.

Statements Run Singly

Each statement will be run, singly, in each of the UDT theatres for an entire change of program. It will be spotted in the newsreel or otherwise placed for maximum attention. Concurrently the testimonials will appear in display newspaper advertisements, in lobby displays, and on panel easels and in programs and other institutional literature.

Local as well as national testimonials were also urged by Mr. Hudson in his outline of the plan. He observed that community leaders, with the respect and confidence of local citizens, could be as effective, or more so, as national personages. Even the smallest communities have persons whose commendations will command the attention of the public, he pointed out.

It is well worth the effort involved for exhibitors or their representative to contact regional leaders, as was done in Detroit, he said, to explain the thought behind the campaign, obtain their statements and send them to National Screen Service for preparation in trailer form.

Great benefits will accrue to all the industry, it was predicted when the general public realizes that motion pictures have enthusiastic friends, as well as critics, among people of importance and authority in professions, in business, public office, the various religious faiths and in the fields of education and public service. Many of these leaders, Mr. Hudson said, have already shown that they are glad to defend and pay tribute to the American screen.

SOME TESTIMONIALS FROM MICHIGAN

Typical of endorsements reaching the industry secured for the new Earl Hudson institutional campaign are the following quotations:

"There's ample evidence that motion pictures stimulate an interest in good literature. . . ."—Frank Cody, Superintendent of Schools.

"The motion picture is a magic carpet of fun for the whole family. . . ."—Mrs. S. S. Sutherland, Federation of Women's Clubs and Council of Churches.

"Motion pictures artistically and conscientiously produced can be a source of recreation and relaxation quite in keeping with our religious and cultural heritage." — Monsignor Edward J. Hickey, Chancellor of the Archdiocese of Detroit.

"Motion pictures have a definite place in the Army's morale program." —Major General C. H. Bonesteel.

"The greatest of all modern miracles is the motion picture . . . the window through which we all may behold the great dramas and comedies of yesterday and today . . . and the news events that prophecy what our tomorrow will be."—Governor Murray D. Van Wagoner.

Roy Reichelder, Ohio Censor Head, Resigns

Roy Reichelder, supervisor of film censorship in Ohio since being appointed to the then newly-created office in 1938, has resigned, and there will be a general reorganization of the censor board. Mr. Reichelderfer's successor has not been appointed. It is understood that Susan Warfield, film censor, will be retained, and that two or more inspectors will be appointed for work throughout the state.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

With tongue in cheek, MGM publishes in its distribution department house organ a touching little tale from Ellis Shafton, its St. Louis film salesmen, who swears it actually happened in his territory in connection with the showmanship promotion of the Metro picture, "Blossoms in the Dust."

Seems that Metro field exploiteer Irving Waterstreet worked out a stunt, "which proved very successful," based on a cooperative plan, with local merchants giving a present to the first baby born after the start of the picture. The first born after the start of the engagement was an illegitimate child. Then, at ————, Missouri, about a week later, Irv applied the same campaign. "The gross there was terrific." And—the first child born after the start of the show was also illegitimate! "Is this a coincidence—or what do you think?" Ellis queried his home office.

Levin wishes that the free-pass moochers would telephone the play's Jack H. Levin.

The little town of Wynard, far north in Saskatchewan, is making much progress these days in local improvements, and to prove it, exhibitor George Miller sends along a copy of the Wynyard Advance, local weekly newspaper, which headlines the opening of his new Vogue Theatre up that way. And, in an adjoining column, we find that the management of the local hospital also is going in for improvements in a big way, deciding that, after running the place these many years without operating room equipment, they think it's about time to buy some. At the same time the hospital appeals for donations of eggs, poultry and vegetables.

Restaurateurs of the National Restaurant Association feel that Alexander Woolcott's play, "The Man Who Came To Dinner," has done "the most good for the cause of Dining Out," and that Monty Woolley, playing the name part in the play, and now in the motion picture, is the specific individual contributing the most to that influence.

To show their appreciation, the restaurant men, the other day, sent Woolley a special invitation to be their epicurean guest at a big, all-out banquet at the association's convention dinner in Chicago. But the actor couldn't show, because he was hard to schedule in the filming of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" at Warners in Burbank, Cal. So instead the restaurateurs sent wires to Woolley as each banquet course was served, virtually wiring the courses—in explanation, not in food. All of which was undernourshing for Woolley.

Gay Churchill, 21, a brunet, and Bartan Lowell, 20, a redhead, two young misses in New York, from Pennsylvania and Long Island, respectively, want to act in the worst way; they've already appeared in some stock shows. But, meanwhile, they want a job so they can eat—any kind of a job requiring any or all of the qualifications which they described in the following newspaper want-ad:

P. S. The girls have received offers of jobs running all the way from waitresses to husband entertaining.

Heeding explicit instructions given by John Rowberry, circuit manager of Cedar City, Utah, to do everything possible in the interest of public comfort and well-being while they are at the theatres required doormen and ushers at the Parks to call upon their dental skill to make an extraction the other Sunday. A young gentleman loosened a tooth while in the show and found he couldn't concentrate on the show while wiggling the tooth around in his month. So he went out to the lobby and nonchalantly asked the doorman to pull it with an old pair of pliers he had in his pocket. Lyle Barton, on duty at that time, looked at the pliers and shuddered and looked at the tooth, deciding something had to be done. So he sent for a pair of long mechanic's pliers used in the projection room and with the usual order, "Wider, please" firmly yanked the offending molar clear. With a grateful "Thanks" the smiling fellow returned to the show without a wiggling tooth.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

NOAA Meets

A Hollywood intent upon itself and its affairs, including Washington ramifications, gave scant heed last week to the Golden Anniversary of an organization accountable, in greater degree than most of today's Hollywood figurantes know, for the universal acceptance which the motion picture has won from a worshipful populace.

The National Outdoor Advertising Association, fifty years a power in the world of men and women who read as they run, held its annual convention at the Los Angeles Ambassador Hotel, Sunday through Thursday, elected officers, attended business sessions, heard experts speak on vital topics and topped off the proceedings with a dinner dance at Earl Carroll's Theatre Restaurant.

Five hundred delegates, representing all of the 48 states and Canada, were in attendance.

Among the principal speakers was Charles W. Collier, president of the Pacific Advertising Association, who spoke on the importance of advertising to American business in a period of pressures.

Mr. Collier said in part, "Advertising is the very voice of business. Without it, business would be muzzled and the kind of progress which has brought the country to the highest living standards in the world would cease.

"I believe it was no accident that we have this standard of living which is the envy of the world. Nor is it something that just happened because of our natural resources. America and the Indians had all of the things we have today, but it took the practical, inquiring mind of the Yankee to put them to work.

Mr. Collier said that advertising, by helping the free press and radio to remain solvent, helps to preserve the Bill of Rights. "And perhaps most important of all," he said, "is the part which advertising plays in lowering our cost of living by expanding markets and distribution, enabling economies which reduce prices through mass production and bringing products which are luxuries in other lands within the reach of all."

The NOAA elected Frank Dunnigan of Fort Wayne, Ind., president, Hen Jackson of Reading, Pa., vice president, and Harry Crawford of Mobile, Ala., chairman of the board.

EDWARD KAUFMAN, former Twentieth Century-Fox production executive, will produce "He Kissed the Bride" as his first Columbia picture.

GEORGE CUKOR will direct MGM's remake of "Her Cardboard Lover" to be produced by J. Walter Ruben.

JACK HIVELY has been assigned to direct "Why Worry?" for RKO-Radio.

WILLIAM CLEMENS has been awarded a term contract by Paramount, for which company he directed "The Night of January 16th," "Sweater Girl" and is presently engaged in making "The Morning After."

DAVID MILLER, MGM director, whose first feature production, "Billy the Kid" was a Box Office Champion for June, has been assigned to direction of "Council of Crime," with Edward Arnold, Ian Hunter and Ruth Hussey tentatively cast, as his second film. At 30 years of age, and ten years up from the National Screen Service trailer department, through MGM short subjects and cutting room divisions, Mr. Miller is Leo's youngest motion picture director.

PHIL ROSEN, whose direction of "Paper Bullets" for the Kozinsky Brothers, newcomers to production, was accounted a triumph over budget, has been retained to direct the second offering of the producers, "I Killed That Man," which will be distributed by Monogram. JOAN WOODBURY, of the "Paper Bullets" cast, carries over as star of the new project.

PANDRO BERMAN has been named as producer of "Nothing Ventured," a new acquisition by MGM.

JOSEPH SANTLEY, who recently completed direction of GENE AUTRY's "Down Mexico Way" for Republic, has been named to direct the Al Pearce comedy, "Marines on Parade," for the same studio.

VICTOR FLEMING, honored by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for his direction of "Gone With the Wind," will direct SPENCER TRACY in MGM's "Tortilla Flats," the John Steinbeck novel long contemplated for production and now seemingly in a fair way to get started. It'll be Fleming's fourth Tracy job.

Leo in Front

Finishing two productions during the week and starting two more to take their places on its stages, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer continued this week to lead the studio field in point of films before the camera.

The House of Warner, still and as usual well ahead of its competitors in point of pictures in backlog with 19 films listed as in editing stage, had five productions on its sound stages at weekend.

Twentieth Century-Fox had four pictures going, while Universal, RKO-Radio, Republic, Paramount and Columbia had three each in shooting stage.

FCC MODIFIES AIR RULES; "THEY'RE JUST AS DANGEROUS," SAY NETWORKS

Broadcasters Vow to Carry the Fight to Courts and Congress; Regulations Would Prohibit Exclusive Programs for Chains

by FRANCIS L. BURT in Washington

The Federal Communications Commission in Washington this week was facing what Washington described as "the fight of its life," in the courts and in Congress, as a four-man FCC majority pressed ahead with its plan for eliminating "monopoly" in radio chain broadcasting.

Basis of the fight was the FCC orders, issued last Saturday, increasing the license period of standard broadcasting stations from one to two years and providing for the elimination of chain-station contracts giving networks exclusive program and territorial rights. The new orders are to go into effect November 15th.

The Commission suspended indefinitely its proposed order requiring the divorce of the NBC Red and Blue networks, expressing the opinion that separation was "so desirable that we believe a separation will soon occur without the spur of a legal mandate."

Companies To Appeal

Immediately upon receipt of the order, the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Company announced they would immediately appeal to the Federal courts, and the National Association of Broadcasters issued a statement calling the "modified" rules "just as dangerous to broadcasting as the original regulations."

A Supreme Court decision on the powers of the FCC as delineated by the Communications Act, long desired by the radio industry, was assured late last Saturday by the declarations of presidents of both major networks. Niles Trammell, of NBC, and William S. Paley, of CBS, declared that recourse to the courts would be taken immediately "to stay the usurpation of power" implicit in the amended network regulations issued late Saturday by the Commission.

The Commission's action was a climax to a six-months' drive to eliminate "network monopoly." Regulations sharply revising the operation of networks and their relations with stations were issued by the FCC May 2nd last, but were approved in principal by the Mutual hearings and negotiations with the chain companies. The proposed rules have been subjects to the opposition of the National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System, but were approved in principal by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

In the adoption of the latest orders, the commission maintained the four-two split which has marked its entire consideration of the subject, Commissioners Paul S. Walker, George Henry Payne and Ray C. Wakefield joining with Chairman James Lawrence Fly in approving them, while Commissioners T. A. M. Craven and Norman S. Case issued a sharp dissent.

In addition to extending the licensing period and suspending the NBC divorce order, the new rules extend the contract period between chains and stations from one to two years; permit stations to option three hours out of each of four periods into which the broadcast day is divided, but on a non-exclusive basis; require networks to give stations with which they have time option contracts 56 days' notice of intention to exercise the option, and permit stations to contract with networks for first call on chain programs.

The regulations would eliminate the present exclusivity, under which a station affiliated with one chain may not carry another network's program; territorial exclusivity, under which a chain may not furnish a program to any station in an area served by an affiliate, and restrictions on the right of stations to reject chain programs.

The Commission majority issued a lengthy report in which it stressed the advantages to be derived from its regulations which, it said, "will tend to decentralize the tremendous power over what the public may hear which is now lodged in the major network organizations, and will remove existing restraints upon competition without interfering unduly with the operations of the network organizations."

Seeks "Stability"

In an explanatory statement, Chairman Fly explained the purpose of the rules to be "to achieve a greater measure of stability throughout the broadcasting industry," which will be brought about through the extension of the licensing period and the limitation on network contracts, now generally for five years.

"The Commission has engaged in long study of these matters and in extensive discussions with the heads of the networks," Mr. Fly said. "It will carefully observe the operations from month to month in the future and will always stand ready upon any appropriate showing to review the rules in light of actual operations.

"It is our intention to foster wholesome competition and to provide the diversity in the control of the channels of information which is so essential to our democracy. At the same time, we recognize that there must be a continuance and indeed an extension of network operations and that those operations must be upon an efficient and profitable basis. Whenever it may be shown that in the course of actual operation these regulations fall short of any one of these basic objectives, the commission stands ready to meet with the parties in interest and to make such further modifications as will accomplish the basic purposes."

Opposition to the regulations came immediately upon their publication, in the form of the dissenting opinion by Commissioners Case and Craven, who charged the majority of the Commission with having exceeded the power delegated the FCC in the Communications Act and asserted that the aggregate effect of the rules would not be a broadcasting system more in the public interest than that of today, but rather an impairment in the nation's radio service at a time when efficient service is most needed.

"No Time for Revolution"

"The present is no time to force revolutionary reforms upon an industry which has served the public interest of the nation, particularly when such reforms bear no relation whatsoever to the national defense effort," the two commissioners declared. "These economic changes may cause vast readjustments in all industry as well as by the entire public. The cumulative effects of these basic national economic readjustments upon the radio industry cannot be determined with accuracy at this time; therefore, it appears to us that to add to the instability of the radio industry by enforcing new Government regulations, which in themselves superimpose fundamental economic readjustments, is unwise."

The dissenting commissioners contended that a three-year license period would be preferable to a two-year term. With respect to the limitations on options, they held absurd a regulation which permits an affiliate to contract for first call on a chain's programs, but does not permit the network to obtain first call on the station's time. Further, it was asserted, now is no time for the Government to force private enterprise to dispose of its property on an unsound business basis.

To Go to Court

Immediate appeal to the courts for review of the regulations was assured by CBS in the statement issued simultaneously in New York and Washington.

The "modified" regulations are no improvement over the original proposals, it was asserted by William S. Paley, president of the company, who charged that the commission "is stretching its loosely defined authority far beyond any area of regulation it has ever attempted to invade before."

The new regulations, Mr. Paley said, are "unnecessary, unlawful, and definitely destructive of freedom of the air.

"There is only one possible solution for the present unfortunate situation," he said, "a staying of the new regulations and the enactment of a new radio law which will definitely delimit the powers and duties of the Federal Communications Commission and which will embody such changes as the Congress may want to make in the light of modern developments in the art of broadcasting."

CBS's challenge was quickly taken up by Chairman Fly, who contended that the new regulations contain "generous modifications not even discussed with Mr. Paley.

"The public ought to know moreover, that CBS has always refused and continues to refuse to submit to any form of regulation,

Networks Fight FCC Regulations; Court Appeal Set

regardless of the public interest reflected therein," Fly added. "It ought to be clear also that no member of the commission has ever questioned the propriety of the company's going to court on any issue concerning the commission."

Niles Trammel, president of NBC, declared in a statement, "in good faith and as expeditiously as possible the National Broadcasting Company is ready to present to the courts the far-reaching questions raised by the new FCC regulations. We rely upon Chairman Fly's statement that he will stay the operations of these regulations pending the final outcome of the court proceedings.

Ask "Due Process"

"The position of NBC," Mr. Trammel continued, "has been consistently that it does not oppose regulations by the Government but that such regulation should be through the processes of law." He reiterated the company's desire and willingness to cooperate with the Commission but added, "The conception of Chairman Fly as to what the existing law is differs diametrically from that of any or all his predecessors. Conceivably that of his successors in turn may vary again. The broadcasting industry can not operate on a stable basis and adequately serve the public if it is to be governed by bureaucratic fiat instead of by law."

Mr. Trammel also expressed regret that "in these critical days when the National Broadcasting Company is making every effort to assist the national defense program, and is giving every cooperation to the Government through its domestic and international broadcasting facilities, that a part of the Federal Communications Commission should insist on disrupting our operations and on revising the whole method of network broadcasting."

Sincerity of the Commission in dealing with the problem was directly questioned by Neville Miller, president of the NAB, who also challenged the authority of the commission to compel NBC to dispose of its blue network.

"The Commission is apparently attempting to create the impression that it wants to aid the broadcasting industry and that it has substantially modified its original drastic rulings in response to widespread public demand," Mr. Miller said. "The fact is that these new rules are merely the same old regulations in new dress. They threaten the future continuance of orderly broadcasting service just as seriously as did the original regulations. And they threaten that service at a time when radio is playing a vitally important part in our program of national defense.

Rights of Congress Cited

"Apart from the manifest danger to broadcasting service in the United States, the commission's latest action raises a serious public question with respect to the powers and duties of Congress and its responsibility to the people. There is before Congress right at this moment proposed legislation dealing with the future conduct of radio broadcasting in this country and particularly network broadcasting. Under a bill now before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the Federal Communications Commission is directed to report to Congress upon some of the very matters with respect to which the commission itself is now attempting to legislate. There is no doubt that the radio law should be substantially amended; it is hopelessly antiquated. But that is a function of the Congress."

At the Capitol, Senator Wallace White, author of the resolution under which the Commission's handling of the network question was the subject of extensive hearings last spring, announced that he would ask for immediate action either on the resolution or on legislation he had introduced calling for reorganization of the Commission and clarification of its authority.

The Senator said he was less concerned with the desirability of the amendments than with the question of the Commission's power to promulgate them.

Also on Monday, President Roosevelt sent to the Senate the nomination of Clifford J. Durr of Alabama to be a member of the FCC for a term of seven years from July 1, last, succeeding Frederick I. Thompson, also of Alabama, whose term expired June 30.

Mr. Durr was born in Montgomery, Ala., March 2, 1899, and was educated at the University of Alabama and Oxford University, England, where he was a Rhodes scholar. He entered the Government service some years ago, and in 1937 became assistant general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In August of this year he was made chief counsel of the Defense Plant Corporation, a RFC subsidiary. He is a brother-in-law of Mr. Hugo Black, former Senator from Alabama and now a member of the Supreme Court.

Independents Plan To Organize

Last week, at the Drake Hotel in Chicago, independent broadcasters representing 26 stations affiliated with major networks, agreed at a two-day meeting to set up an organization, based upon immediate needs, of independent broadcasters to protect their interests.

The problems cited concerning which protection is needed were outlined at the meeting as follows: demands of the super-power applicants; demands of the musicians union and action on the ASCAP situation. The group contended that the proposed ASCAP licenses should be modified before acceptance, in spite of approval by the National Association of Broadcasters and the Independent Radio Network Affiliates.

An invitation was extended to independent broadcasters to meet this week, on Tuesday, at the Drake Hotel for the purpose of further discussing the problems confronting them and in order to form an organization. The committee in charge includes: William J. Scripps, WWJ, Detroit; Hoyt Wooten, WREC, Memphis; Eugene Pulliam, WIRE, Indianapolis; Stanley Hubbard, KSTP, St. Paul, and William O'Neill, WJW, Akron.

At Tuesday's meeting at the Drake Hotel, representatives of 68 stations formed independent Broadcasters, Inc. Another meeting, to which all net work affiliates, excluding clear channel and M. and O. stations will be invited, will be held at the Drake in November when the election of officers and directors will be held.

Wallis Receives Award

For his part in "awakening public consciousness of the role played by pioneer fighters of the Old West in American History," the United Indian War Veterans will confer the Order of Merit upon Hal B. Wallis, associate executive in charge of production at the Warner studios. The announcement of the award was made by Captain Guy W. Hassler of Berkeley, Cal.

McGrann Leaves Columbia

Frank McGrann, Columbia exploitation manager for the past seven years in New York, has resigned to become vice-president of Modern Merchandising Bureau, for which he will handle motion picture tieups. Frank P. Rosenberg, assistant exploitation manager, has been named acting head of the department.

Child Film Week Set by Library

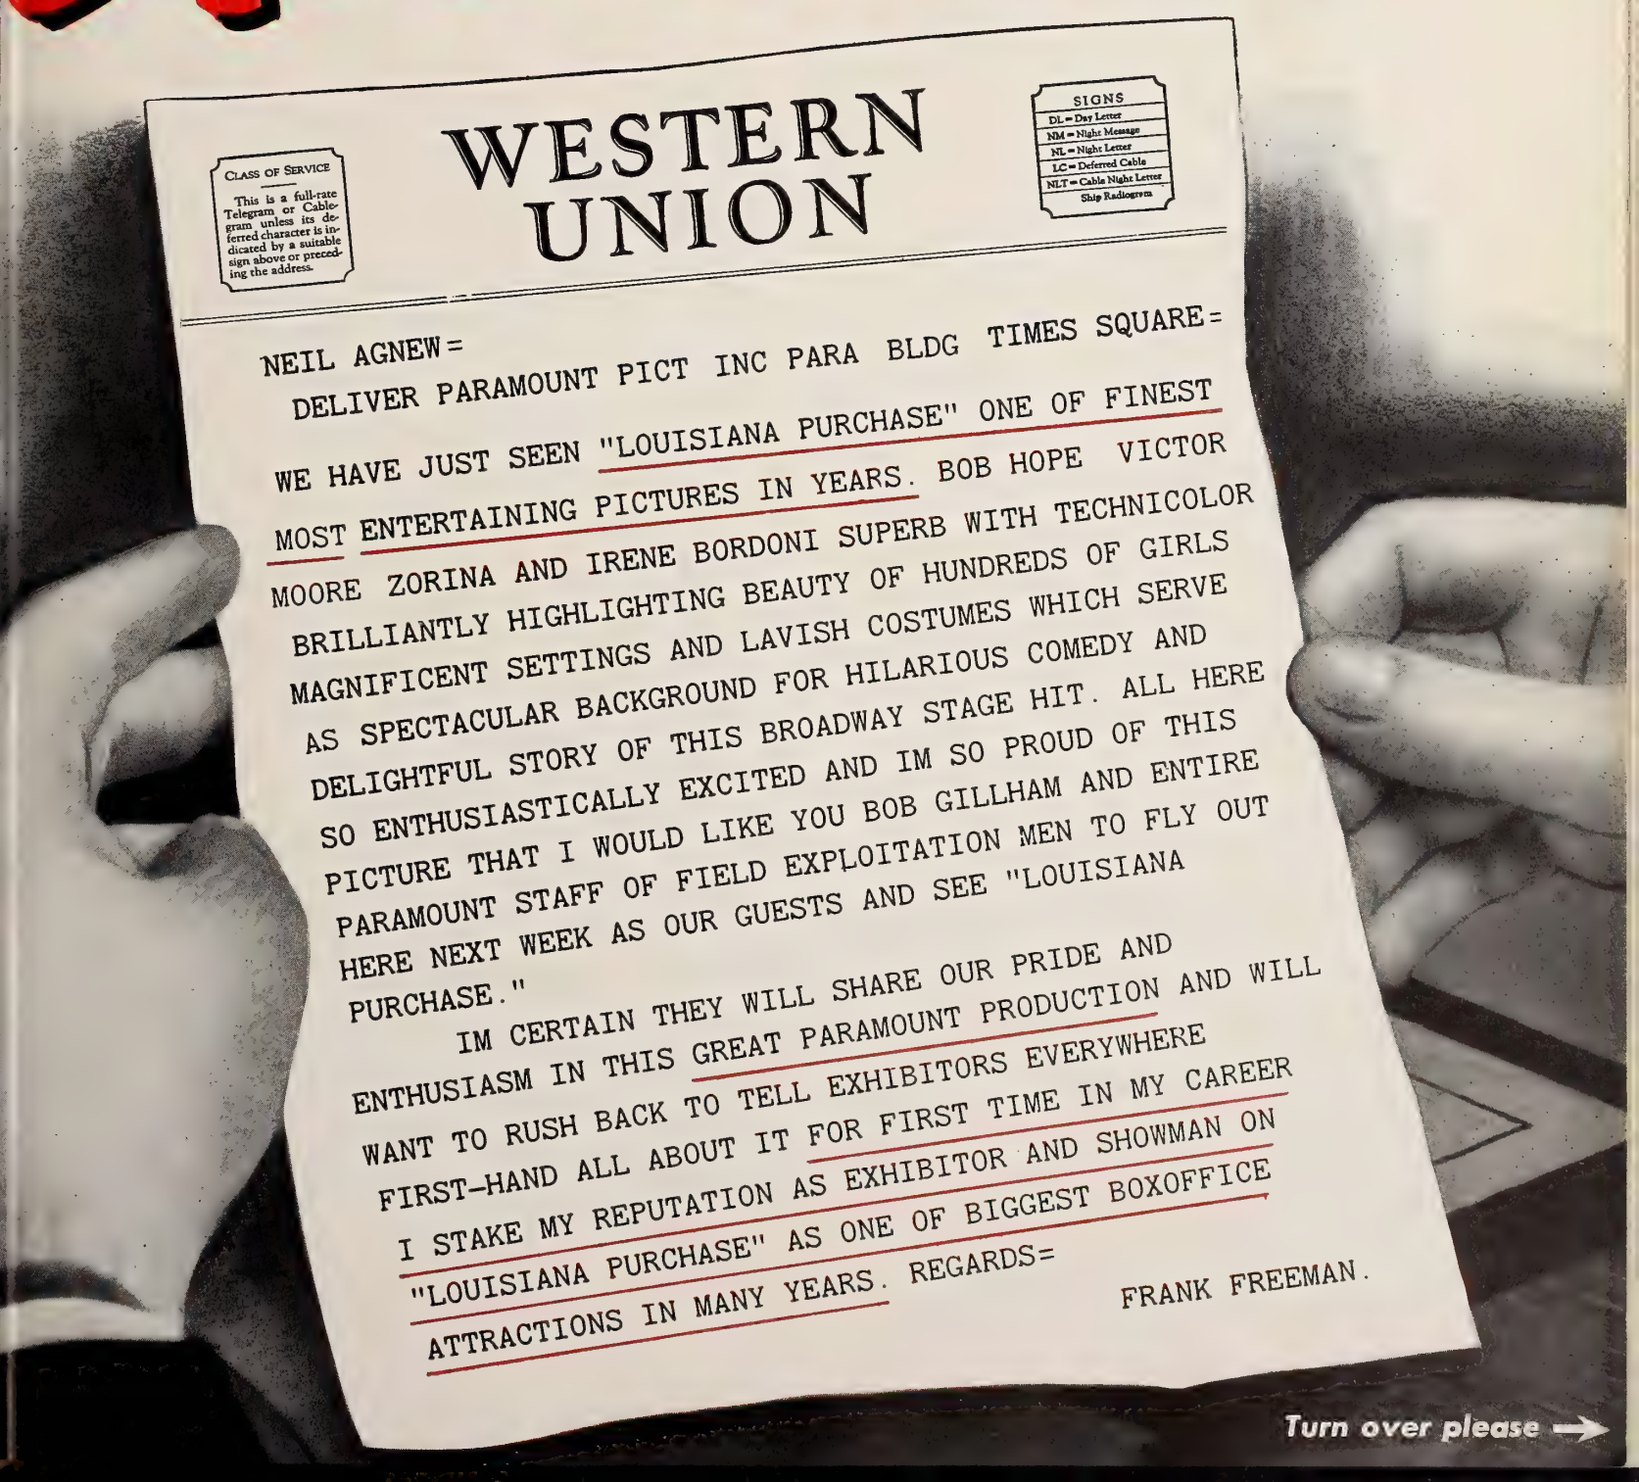
Plans for a Children's Motion Picture Week, beginning October 27th, are under way at the New York Public Library, in which the library, the film industry, the Schools Motion Picture Committee and the National Board of Review are participating, for the purpose of "building the taste of young people for good films." It is planned to make this Children's Motion Picture Week an annual affair, to promote "better motion pictures for young people" not through the "fan approach, but on the subject matter, the production and the dramatic technique of a good picture."

According to a release issued by the Library, "Young people spend one-fourth as much time at the motion picture as they do in school." This figure was estimated by Dr. Frederick M. Thrasher and Paul G. Cressey, educators, who are writing a book for the Payne Foundation. The three sponsoring groups of Children's Motion Picture Week believe that a taste "can be built up for good films as it has been built up in the schools and libraries, for good books."

Branch Set Aside

The children's room of the Nathan Straus Branch of the Public Library, the only branch in New York built for, directed for and attended by young people, will be the center of activities. Sketches, working drawings and scale models used in the production of current films have been sent on from Hollywood by major producing companies to the branch so that school children in the city may learn first hand of the technical work necessary for preparation of Hollywood films.

On October 30th, at 8:30 P.M., educators, representatives of the motion picture industry, newspaper film critics and library and school officials will meet with young high school students for a discussion of "better motion pictures for young people." Those scheduled to speak are: Miss Margaret Scoggin, Librarian of the Nathan Straus Branch, who will preside; Mrs. Alonzo Klaw, chairman of the Schools Motion Picture Committee and Miss Mabel Williams, Superintendent of Work with Schools in the New York Public Library. Kenneth MacGown, director of the documentary film division for the Rockefeller committee on Inter-American affairs, Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Robert Flaherty, producer of "Man of Aran," "Nanook of the North" and other documentary pictures, have been invited to speak. Representatives of the Young Reviewers of the National Board of Review, will speak for young people.



Frank C. Walker Injured

Frank C. Walker, Postmaster General and principal in the Comerford Pennsylvania theatre interests, was injured Monday, October 13th, when the National Limited of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad slid into a freight locomotive near Chillicothe, Ohio. Mr. Walker, accompanied by his wife who was uninjured, was treated for a slight head abrasion.

Gould to West Indies

Dave Gould has been given charge of Republic's new British West Indies office, headquarters of which will be in Trinidad. The company already has offices in Panama, and in Santiago, Chile. Mr. Gould had been MGM's Puerto Rico manager for 10 years.

"Blues" Opening Dispute

The world premiere of Paramount's "Birth of the Blues," slated for October 31st, has provoked a bone of contention between Tennessee and Louisiana. The opening, originally scheduled for Memphis, Tenn., on the theory that the "blues" originated on Beale Street in that city, was contested by Governor Sam H. Jones of Louisiana, who sent a letter to Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount's studio chief, and asked that the premiere be held in New Orleans. Governor Jones claims that the "blues" originated in Basin Street, New Orleans. He appointed Roark Bradford, novelist and playwright, his emissary to Hollywood to present New Orleans' claim to the title of "cradle of jazz music" and to the opening of the Bing Crosby-Mary Martin musical. His wire to Mr. Freeman said, "I have appointed Roark Bradford as special envoy to Hollywood to defend Louisiana's claim to the authentic birthplace of the blues type of music. I feel that Louisiana should be rightfully credited with originating this unique type of music."

"Foot in Heaven" Plans

Warner Bros. screen version of the Hartzell Spence novel, "One Foot in Heaven," will make its New York bow on October 30th at Radio City Music Hall. The film had its world premiere in Washington on October 2nd, before a distinguished first night audience of church dignitaries, Government officials and high-ranking officers of the United States Army, Navy and Air corps.

For the first time in its history, the Philadelphia Board of Education has ordered a feature picture produced for theatre use to be screened for the educational body. Alexander J. Stoddard, superintendent of schools and head of the city's Board of Education, asked Warner Bros. for a showing of "One Foot in Heaven." The screening took place Tuesday, October 14th, in the Board of Education Building.

"Target" Premiere

Warner Bros. held the American premiere of "Target for Tonight" at the Globe Theatre, New York, this Friday night, October 17th. "Target" is the first factual feature picture of the RAF force in action ever shown in this country. The entire British anti-aircraft service is depicted in action. Warner's is distributing the film in America, which was produced by a Crown film unit of the British Government.

A special shortwave radio broadcast from England, picked up in this country, was arranged for the American premiere of "Target." Robert Montgomery, now attached to a Naval mission in London, was master of ceremonies on the show and introduced a number of celebrities.

Holdovers and Grosses Increase

March 1, 1942, it was reported by David O. Selznick, producer, last week. It is understood that exhibitors will be required to charge a minimum admission price of 50 cents and that selling terms again probably will be on a 50-50 basis. "GWTW" is being withdrawn from all screens; and contracts for the picture must be played out by October 15th.

Anent a Walt Disney publicity office item about "Fantasia," the claim has been made that receipts for the Disney-Stowkowski opus at the Broadway Theatre, New York, for the Columbus Day matinee, were $1,492, capacity house, and, incidentally, the year that Columbus discovered America.

Completing its first week at the Strand, New York, Warner's "The Maltese Falcon" grossed $42,575 for the seven days, according to the company's records. The film starring Humphrey Bogart, with Mary Astor and Peter Lorre, is now in its second week. "Sergeant York" follows the "Falcon" as the Strand's next tenant.

Warner Bros. also reports that "York" piled up a total gross of $113,866 in three weeks at the company's Hollywood and Downtown houses in Los Angeles, establishing a new all-time high for business at these two theatres. To date, Warner's claims, "York" has smashed every house record for combined weekly business and opening business at both houses. The Gary Cooper-Joan Leslie film is now in its fourth week at the Hollywood and Downtown, with the third week-end 100 per cent over business done by "Meet John Doe."

"Vatican" Held Over

RKO reports that "The Story of the Vatican," the first complete film ever made inside the independent Papal State, is being held over for the fourth week of its New York engagement at the Belmont Theatre. Paramount's "Hold Back the Dawn," meanwhile, played its third and final week at the Paramount theatre. The Charles Boyer-Olivia de Havilland picture ended its engagement at that theatre on Wednesday.

"The Little Foxes," communication from RKO reveals, in its first regular run engagements has been held over 100 per cent and in most of the houses topped all records for the last two years. High marks for the past two years have been set at the Palace, New York, except for "Citizen Kane" first run; the Albee, Brooklyn; Proctor's, Newark; Keith's Boston; Golden Gate, San Francisco; Hillstreet and Pantages, Los Angeles.

"Foxes" also was held over for third weeks at Washington and Buffalo, and for second weeks at Rochester, Syracuse, Cleveland, Denver, New Orleans, Omaha and Trenton.

"Honky Tonk," MGM claims, is sustaining the "sensational" holdover pace it set in its first engagements. The company reported "Honky" will get second weeks in 16 additional key city runs, making a total of 25 extended runs thus far reported. At Loew's State, Houston, the new Clark Gable-Lana Turner film started its third week. and the Capitol, N. Y., run entered its second week. Newest holdover spots for "Honky Tonk" are Atlanta, Nashville, New Orleans, Bridgeport, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Louisville, Evansville, Wilmington, Norfolk, Richmond, Reading, Harrisburg, Baltimore, Toledo and Akron.

Fox's, "Week-End in Havana," Technicolor musical, meanwhile, smashed the 10-year opening day record at the Denver Theatre in Denver, topping by $299 the take of "A Yank in the R.A.F.," according to 20th Century-Fox.

Clearing House for Health, Medical Films

A section on films in health education and medicine has been established at the American Film Center, Donald Slesinger, director, announced last week at the Center's offices, 45 Rockefeller Plaza, New York. The new section, which has received a three-year grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, will be a clearing house and information center on the use and production of health education and medical films. Dr. Adolf Nichtenhauser is in charge of the section.

Through this section the American Film Center will evaluate existing health films in collaboration with health experts and publish from time to time lists of recommended films. Cooperation with the many groups using health films will be sought in order to create a solid economic basis for their production. A long range production program will be developed in collaboration with competent agencies.

Attention also will be paid to the technical medical film, especially with regard to its use in medical schools. From its beginning, the American Film Center has cooperated with medical and scientific agencies, such as the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology in Philadelphia and various hospitals in New York and New England, in the study and production of films.

The Center, supported by the Rockefeller Foundation, was established in 1938.

J. Vercota in a proclamation to the public for a "Go to the Movies" Week. The occasion was publicized in full page newspaper promotion and a parade through the streets of the city with ushers from the Rivoli, Hollywood, Fifth Avenue and Wisconsin theatres and the Boy Scout drum and bugle corps participating.

Durkee Plans Tour

Frank Durkee, circuit operator of Baltimore, Md., plans a Mexican tour. He has also been reappointed president of the Baltimore Park Board.

Sharp Re-elected

William Sharp of the Capitol theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has been reelected second vice-president of the International Alliance of Billposters.

Several Resume Double Bills

After experimenting with single feature programs for some weeks a number of theatres throughout the country have returned to the double feature to attract patrons.

In Columbus, Ohio, the RKO Palace has resumed its regular policy of double features in the afternoon, continuing with a single feature at night, at the normal scale of 33 and 47 cents for matinee and evening performances, respectively. Stage shows will be booked into the theatre sporadically.

Following several weeks of first-run single features at admission prices comparable to other Loop houses in Chicago, the Woods theatre, operated by the Essaness Circuit, has reverted to its previous policy of subsequent run double features at 20 and 30 cents admission.

Fox, in several of its situations around Wisconsin, including the Sherman in Milwaukee and the Valley in Menasha, is making a play for both single and double feature fans by advertising that "you can always see a complete double feature show as late as 7:30 p.m. and you can always see a complete single feature show with variety entertainment at 9 p.m."

The East Columbus theatre, a Columbus, Ohio, neighborhood house, has reopened with double features, and will be in operation on Sundays, Mondays, Fridays and Saturdays. The house was redecorated while closed for the Summer.

Balaban and Katz is trying a double feature program again in the Roosevelt theatre in Chicago. The first program features "Bad Men of Missouri" and "Tanks a Million."

In many situations in Texas the double feature policy is rapidly growing extinct since the Interstate Circuit has started booking short subjects to be played with the single feature. Excellent box office results are reported with this policy.

Attacks Legality Of Censor Law

In Albany, N. Y., Article 43 of the New York State Education law is attacked as unconstitutional in a petition filed last week by Morris Ernst, counsel for Arthur Mayer and Joseph Burstyn, distributors of "The Forgotten Village," with the Board of Regents appealing for a review of the censor's refusal to license the picture for exhibition in New York State.

The petition further contends that the article, under which the censor issued his order for elimination in the picture, has been unconstitutionally applied in any event.

SHOWDOWN IS DUE ON ALLIED'S UNITY PLAN

National Executives To Meet Oct. 22nd; Connecticut Only Unit To Cast Dissenting Vote

With National Allied's generals completing plans to meet in Pittsburgh in conjunction with Western Pennsylvania Allied's convention on October 22nd, and to weigh the results of the plebescite taken by mail among the various units throughout the country on its proposed industry "unity" plan, Michigan Allied at its closing session last week voted full support of the measure. This week Allied of Texas voted unanimously to support the plan.

Other local units of National Allied have pledged to support the plan with only Connecticut Allied rejecting the idea. The local Allied branches which pledged their support appeared in the October 11th issue of Motion Picture Herald, page 30.

Meanwhile, Allied's Information Department was planning a survey of the country of the major companies' selling policies at the present time. The survey, it was reported, would include the signers of the consent decree and those companies which do not operate under the decree.

Michigan Votes Approval

At the closing sessions of the Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan convention Wednesday, October 8th, the group added its approval to National Allied's plan for a "liaison committee" to cooperate with the other branches of the motion picture industry to obtain unity and defend the industry against outside attacks. Every speaker on Michigan Allied's closing program in Detroit, stressed the unity idea with varied emphasis.

Abram F. Myers, general counsel and chairman of the board of National Allied, decried the publicity given to Hollywood salaries, and the disunity of representation through several exhibitor organizations rather than through agreement on a common program when facing national issues, such as the consent decree. Mr. Myers modified his long-standing definition of independent exhibitor to "any of whose interest in the theatre is greater than in any other branch of the industry," thus including many houses formerly classed as affiliated.

Mr. Myers maintained there was pre-arrangement for any producer group to meet with the proposed all-industry committee, but supported such a conference as the preferable way to adjust grievances rather than to meet and pass resolutions to be made public.

Earl J. Hudson, president of United Detroit Theatres, read plans for a strong campaign, which may become national in scope, for institutional publicity for pictures, using testimonials of respected American citizens from President Roosevelt down giving many different viewpoints of picture values. Trailers would be used, Mr. Hudson pointed out, and changed weekly and special space in newspapers would be utilized. The plan is detailed on page 30.

Other speakers on the program who stressed unity in the motion picture industry included A. Montague, Columbia sales manager; Rube Jackter, Mr. Montague's assistant; Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists vice-president; and Claude Lee, Paramount director of public relations.

The convention members reelected Ray Branch of Hastings, Mich., president; W. James Olson of Clare, vice-president; Edgar E. Kirchner of Detroit, secretary-treasurer, and Pear M. Sprott of Detroit, manager.

New directors are Class R. Beechler of Charlotte; H. G. Carley of Holland; William A. Cassidy of Midland; Glenn A. Cross of Battle Creek; Allen Johnson of Grand Rapids; Fred Pennell of Decatur; P. C. Schram of Kalamazoo; William Schulte of Detroit; William Schuttenhelm of Detroit; J. E. Stocker of Detroit; W. G. Thick of Marshall; and Fred Witters of Saginaw.

Allied To Study Decree Sales

The Allied Information Department also met in Detroit last week with only Pete J. Wood absent due to illness. Action was taken to start monthly national surveys of selling policies under the blocks-of-five selling plan and also of the selling policies of non-consenting companies, starting late in October.

The surveys will show how and where pictures are sold, whether any territories are being discriminated against, whether there are any decree violations, such as forcing short subjects upon exhibitors, and to furnish complete present sales policy information to exhibitors.

The objective of the survey will be to learn whether distributors are living up to the spirit as well as the letter and terms of the consent decree, according to Sidney R. Samuelson of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied who describes this as a statistical survey to be followed by definite recommendations based on disclosures.

The plans are to be presented to the Allied board in a few days to extend AID service to exhibitors nationally.

Present at the meeting besides Mr. Samuelson were Arthur K. Howard of Boston and Don E. Rossiter of Indianapolis.

New York Allied Forms State Organization

After operating for more than nine months on a temporary basis, the newly chartered New York state unit of National Allied brought its permanent organization into being at a five hour meeting in the Hotel Ten Eyck in Albany, Monday.

Going into session immediately after the Variety Club luncheon Monday afternoon, the unit thanked its temporary committee which had been conducting the organizational work for its conduct of affairs.

Elected to the board of directors were: Abe Stone, Albany; H. P. Wallace, Auburn; Charles Wilson, Troy; Clarence Dopp, Johnstown; Mitchell Conery, Ravena; Robert Goldblatt, Tarrytown and Leonard L. Rosenthal, Troy.

H. P. Wallace was named chairman of the Board of Directors with Rosenthal, an attorney, as executive secretary and Stone as treasurer. Organization headquarters will be berthed in the Cannon Building, Troy, where the temporary organization had its office.

From 35 to 40 exhibitors, representing approximately 75 theatres, stayed throughout the long meeting. The unit's statement of policy pledged the work of the organization for the benefit of independent theatres in New York state.

Other than the election of officers, no word of action taken during the closed meeting was forthcoming.

For the annual convention of Western Pennsylvania Allied to be held October 21st and 22nd at the Hotel Roosevelt in Pittsburgh, M. A. Rosenberg, chairman of the annual convention, has named the following convention committees:

Entertainment—M. N. Shapiro, chairman; Ed T. Beedle, Sam Fleishman, F. E. Hasley, Norman Huhn, Robert Lieber, Carl Poke and Harry Walker. Publicity—Frank Panoplos, chairman; Robert Klingensmith, Harry Rachiele, Jake Soltz, Rudolph Navarri, F. H. Shearer and Archie Fineman.

Mr. Rosenberg attended the Michigan Allied convention in Detroit last week. Fred Beedle is president of the Western Pennsylvania Allied.

"Harvest" Film Gets Extended Time

"Harvest for Tomorrow," a 26-minute United States Department of Agriculture documentary film, has been retained for an additional month of distribution by Warner Brothers and Loew's, Inc., the Department has announced.

The original release arrangement, as requested by the Government, called for offering the film to theatres for three months ending October 15th. With bookings running well over 1,000 in a limited release area, and exhibitor demand holding up strong, executives of the two distributing corporations volunteered to continue theatrical handling through November 15th.

The film, however, went into limited non-theatrical showings on Thursday, October 16th. The fact that the picture will be simultaneously shown in theatrical and non-theatrical situations during the period from October 16th to November 15th is a break from previous customs, but both the Department and the distributors agreed there was little chance of conflict. The film has already played theatres in practically all of the rural communities where the non-theatrical shows will be held.

Seattle Group Plans Film Drive

A newly-organized group of cultural, religious, educational and civic leaders has incorporated the Greater Seattle Motion Picture Council in Seattle, Wash. With a slogan, "Patronize the best—eliminate the rest," the council lists its objectives as: (1) encouragement of motion picture study; (2) promoting use of motion pictures in educational institutions; (3) distribution to the public of information about theatre programs, through community clubs and other gathering centers.

Heading the group is Mrs. Charles G. Miller, prominent civic leader and clubwoman. Assisting are Mrs. Theodore Farrell, Mrs. Louis Marks, Mrs. Wilbur Zundel, Miss Leona Tolbert, Mrs. D. M. Deutch, Miss Evangeline Starr, Mrs. Irene Durham, Mrs. B. A. Ross and Mrs. F. R. Gilkers.

William Tunberg, formerly assistant in the Twentieth Century-Fox story department in Hollywood, has been appointed assistant to William Dozier, head of Paramount's story and writing departments.

A Good Nickel Cigar

Once upon a time a certain salty gentleman from Indiana, Thomas Riley Marshall, vice president, looking upon the hectic American scene summed up his findings: "What this country needs is a good five cent cigar.

The crack made him famous.

Without carping or controversy, Mr. Marshall threw a dash of cooling sanity into the thought of a day burdened with fevered strivings and perplexities. Everybody knew what he meant—that the business of living was being complexed by both tangibles and intangibles, things and thoughts and vanities which cost more, sold for more, than they were worth.

Six years ago Republic Pictures Corporation was born of the opinion that the motion picture theatre, serving the people, could do with a dependable line of production—entertainment worth what it cost, worth what it sold for, delivered on schedule. Opportunity seemed to beckon.

The six years since have been a period of continuously developing success. Republic has risen and grown because it has contributed to the success of the theatre with box office profits and the satisfaction of the customers. Republic's 1941-42 program is a bigger broader product of that experience, that basic policy.

MORE RAISE ADMISSIONS BECAUSE OF NEW TAXES

New England, Midwest Houses Pass On Tax to Patrons; Attendance Is Little Affected

Adding to the reports already published of price increases following application of the new Federal income tax on October 1st came word this week of similar action by other exhibitors in New Haven, Des Moines, Syracuse, Toledo, Minneapolis and elsewhere.

Although the majority of theatres in New Haven, Conn., especially the first run houses, have simply passed on the new one and two cent taxes to the public, many exhibitors have taken this opportunity to raise prices several cents to round out the admission price. The Loew-Poli circuit has raised no prices for the present. M & P had previously raised children's admissions late Saturdays and all day Sunday from ten cents to 15 cents and is now adding the tax to make it 17 cents. Warner's have made some changes in a few situations.

The two-a-week bargain nights at the Rialto, South Norwalk, and the Capitol in Danbury have gone up from 20 to 22 cents plus three cents tax. The Strand theatre in Waterbury, the Palace in Torrington, and the Circle in Manchester, raised prices from 15 cents to 25 cents plus three cents tax, to 18 cents plus two cents tax, and 27 cents plus three cents tax. The Capitol theatre in Ansonia, and the Broadway and Palace theatres in Norwich have advanced prices from 39 cents to 40 cents including tax. All Stamford first run theatres, including the Avon, Stamford, Plaza and Palace, lifted the top price from 44 cents to 50 cents.

Neighborhoods Unchanged

Neighborhood theatres in various towns in Connecticut attempted to get together on a uniform admission rise, but were successful in only a few instances. Subsequent run theatres have been complaining of rising film rentals, but hesitate in many cases to raise prices because of the fact that first runs have not changed existing scales in New Haven, Bridgeport and Hartford.

In Des Moines, the first weeks' business under the new defense tax showed little effect in the lower price admissions which were not enough to cause a concern.

Suburban theatres reported practically no drop in attendance, most of the houses having jumped their early matinee prices from 16 to 20 cents. The first run houses in the downtown district likewise were unaffected using a higher admission price.

Second-run theatres in the downtown area did report a drop in early matinee crowds with a jump from 16 to 20 cents before 2 P.M., but for later hours business varied little.

Syracuse first-run downtown theatres have raised admission prices from 25 cents plus tax to 30 cents including the tax, with children's admissions going to 17 cents tax included. Forty cent admission, with four cents tax, remain unchanged.

Most former 20-cent houses in Syracuse have added the new Federal two-cent tax with the Elmwood, Riviera and Cameo going to 25 cents including tax. Most of the 15-cent houses have gone to 20 cents, including tax, with children's prices remaining at a dime plus the tax.

With only the Esquire, a downtown theatre, and the Savoy, a neighborhood house, continuing with unchanged admissions, Toledo exhibitors generally have stepped up ticket prices as a result of the tax.

The Paramount's prices are 29 cents to 1 P.M., 35 cents to 6 P.M., and 47 cents after 6 P.M. The Rivoli and Loew's Valentine theatres, other first-run houses, are 29 cents to 6 P.M., and 47 cents thereafter. The new Colony in suburban West Toledo will charge 35 cents. The Palace downtown second-run house, is charging 20 cents before 6 P.M., and 30 cents after 6 P.M. The Granada, Loop, Royal, and Pantheon, downtown second-run houses, are charging 15 and 20 cents. The Princess, another downtown second-run house is charging 18 to 29 cents.

The Eastwood and Westwood, neighborhood houses, are charging 29 cents and the Avalon, Lyric, and Bijou, other theatres, are charging 27 cents. The World and Liberty are charging 25 cents, and the State, deluxe house, is charging 30 cents.

Children's admissions at 10 cents continue unchanged.

Advances in Minneapolis

Minneapolis ten-, 15- and 20-cent theatres throughout the territory have passed the new admission tax along to patrons. Ten-cent admissions are now advanced to 11 cents, 15-cent admission to 17 cents, and 20-cent prices to 22 cents.

No adverse affect at the box office has been noticed so far it is reported, and patrons seem satisfied to accept the increased prices.

The Miller theatre in Woodstock, Ill., has raised the Tuesday bargain night price from 15 cents plus two cents tax to 20 cents including the tax.

As a result of the new taxes on admissions, exhibitors in Allentown, Pa., have effected a general increase in admissions for all neighborhood houses from a former 20-cent price to 22 cents plus three cents tax, making a total admission of 25 cents. Exhibitors felt the increase was justified due to increased costs for wages and operation.

Theatres in Montgomery, Ala., and adjoining counties have fixed their juvenile base price at 9.8 cents, which, plus the 2 per cent State luxury tax makes a total of 10 cents for children under 12 years of age. Since the base price is less than 10 cents it does not come under the new Federal tax.

On tickets above ten cents, the Federal tax is being passed on to the patrons. No decline in attendance is noted because of the extra tax.

In Birmingham, Ala., theatres have largely jumped prices to even figures in meeting the new defense tax on adult admissions.

The Strand, a second-run house with a former admission of 25 cents, is now charging 28½ cents, including three cents Federal tax and five mills state tax.

First-run theatres in the downtown area of Indianapolis have added the new Federal tax on admissions and retain the same price schedule as before. However, there is little complaint so far from patrons or exhibitors about the Federal tax on admissions.

Directors of Illinois Allied meeting in Chicago last week discussed new Federal taxes and admission scales among other things.

No action was taken on the matter of tilting admissions, and Allied members are adding the new taxes to prevailing admissions.

Collections of the three per cent retail sales tax in Ohio totaled $44,039,779 for the first three months of this year, compared with $34,789,768 for the corresponding period of 1940, an increase of $9,250,011.

FROM READERS

THE CASE AGAINST THE COLUMNISTS

To The Editor of the Herald:

After reading your editorials on Fidler's stand against our industry at recent propaganda investigation, I just couldn't help but get the following matter off my chest.

Naturally, he was biting the hands that were feeding him, and a mighty nice feed at that. In a way I'm glad he had the opportunity to expose his wrong and uncalled for attitude, and now the studios once and for all know on what side of the fence he stands, and in the future will be more careful not to get too intimate with other columnists. (I mean outsiders)

I have had lots of experience, Terry, in all branches of show business; exploitation, publicity, stage production, exhibition, etc.; and looking at it from a broad side, I never could understand why it is necessary for our paper, radio and fan magazine correspondents, building them into high salaried positions, placing them in a spot where they can turn right around and double cross us.

It's been proven time and again, if a picture is good, the first nighters, through a favorable "whispering campaign," aided by exhibitors' selling efforts, will stimulate box-office grosses; resulting in capacity houses and extended playing time, from the first run theatre down to the last run. And on the other hand, you know even better than I that if a picture is bad, all the columnists of America combined, using honey phrases and sugary methods, raving about that picture will not bring revenue at the box-office, nor will they sway the average Mr. Public to shout "Gee, that picture was good losses to all of us, producers and exhibitors.

If a picture is good we surely don't need columnists to repeat what we ourselves already know. Just like any other industry, we can purchase our own advertising and use any copy we want to sell the picture to the public.

If the picture is bad, we can make an effort through the same method to get the most we can out of it. If it doesn't click, we drop it and concentrate on the next picture.

Our industry is one of the largest in America, comparable to the steel, automobile, and other industries, and with millions at stake, do you think it's wise to obligate ourselves to outsiders with valuable inside information at their disposal; and if misused, it results in heavy losses to all of us, producers and exhibitors,

If all the money spent, yearly to entertain the gossip writers, just to obtain a few thousand dollars of free space, were appropriated to merchandise our pictures throughout the country, through direct purchase of advertising in newspapers or radio, we would have 100 per cent control of our own publicity releases, which would be stressing favorable comments only; thereby upholding the dignity of our industry.

The procedure of publicity releases would be given to our own inside trade papers, who we know are jointly interested in the success of the industry. They pass it on to the exhibitors, who in turn give it to newspapers or radio locally through the medium of paid advertising for the purpose of attracting people to theatres.

The gossip writers didn't start this business. It was the pioneering efforts of many executives still active today, through their creative and merchandising ability who built our industry to the present position. Let's use that same pioneering spirit by uniting the friendy cooperation of producer, distributor, and exhibitor, for the sole purpose of furnishing entertainment to a free people; and by all means, for our own security, let's do it ourselves.

NATIONAL RELEASE OCT. 17

Erpi Passes as a Corporate Entity, Merged in W.E.

C. G. Stoll, president of Western Electric, announced Tuesday in New York, that its wholly owned subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc., is to be merged into the parent company November 1st, and ERPI's domestic activities thereafter carried on as the Electrical Research Products Division of the Western Electric Company.

T. Kennedy Stevenson, former president of ERPI becomes vice president of Western Electric, continuing in charge of ERPI activity. In addition he will have direction of the general accounting, treasurer's and secretary's departments of the parent company. Mr. Stevenson was also elected a director of Western Electric.

Established in 1926

ERPI was originally set up in 1926 to handle Western Electric activities outside of the telephone industry, principally the commercial development of sound motion pictures.

"The change in corporate set-up does not involve any change in the character or method of conducting this business; but for some time it has been felt that these activities could be carried on more satisfactorily through the establishment of the closest possible relationship with the parent company," said a Western Electric statement.

In addition to Mr. Stevenson present officers of ERPI will continue in the new division of Western Electric with the following titles: D. C. Collins, eastern manager; Clifford W. Smith, western manager; T. E. Shea, chief engineer; F. B. Foster, Jr., comptroller; P. L. Palmerton, sales manager. Mr. Shea is temporarily on leave of absence in Government service.

In connection with the absorption of ERPI by Western Electric, Mr. Stevenson announced also that as of October 31, the foreign holdings of ERPI will be consolidated into a new company to be known as Western Electric Export Corporation.

Operating head of the new Export Company will be E. S. Gregg, whose title will be vice president and general foreign manager. Mr. Gregg has been identified with the foreign activities of ERPI since ERPI's formation in 1927. He is at present in Johannesburg, South Africa, opening a new office and warehouse, returning to New York in November.

Since 1938 ERPI's foreign department has been engaged in the distribution of general theatre equipment as well as the sale and service of Western Electric motion picture sound systems. "Thus, as the problems involved in the company's foreign business have come to differ more and more widely from the problems of domestic operation, the need for a separate export corporation has become increasingly apparent," said a Western Electric statement, which added:

"ERPI's foreign operations, far from being curtailed as a result of the war, have grown materially despite the dislocation of foreign trade and import restrictions in a number of countries. In the last two years foreign theatre operators, cut off from European sources of supply, have turned to American manufacturers for equipment. Thus, there has been a substantial increase in the number of foreign theatres equipped and serviced by ERPI abroad."

The Western Electric Export Corporation, continuing the policy of ERPI's foreign department, will offer a complete line of mechanical and electrical theatre equipment, from box-office to stage, to operators in the foreign field.

Scully Reports Circuit Deals

"Unquestioned uptrends in general business conditions all over the country coupled with industry's recognition of the steady flow of box-office attractions from the studios have resulted in the greatest business impetus Universal has felt in many years," said William A. Scully, Universal vice-president and general sales manager, upon his return to New York last week from an extended tour of the territory.

With William J. Heineman, assistant sales manager, Mr. Scully visited Milwaukee, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco before finally reaching the studios, where they both spent several days looking at new forthcoming product.

Mr. Scully said that wherever he stopped en route, it was perfectly evident that theatres showing good entertainment were doing far better than average business.

Among the circuit deals negotiated by Universal recently are a three-year deal with all of the Fox West Coast Theatres, set under the new decentralized buying plan used by that circuit; a three-year deal with the Warner Brothers' Circuit; a long term deal with the RKO circuit and contracts with the Public "partnership theatres." Included in the last named contract are deals with the Great States Circuit, B. and K. Circuit, Minnesota Amusement Company, Intermountain Theatre Circuit, Wilby and Kincey circuits, Texas Consolidated and Interstate Circuit, the M. and P. Circuit, Butterfield Circuit, and others.

In Canada, F. J. A. McCarthy, Universal southern and Canadian sales manager, reported that the Universal contracts with the Canadian Famous Players Corporation and the Odeon Circuit have also already been concluded.

Mr. Scully and Mr. Heineman reported on the product which they looked at in the studios, including the Abbott and Costello picture, "Keep 'Em Flying," the Boyer-Sullavan picture, "Appointment for Love," soon to be shown at the Music Hall, Jules Levey's "Hellzapoppin,'" "Paris Calling," starring Randolph Scott and Elizabeth Bergner and "South of Tahiti," a south sea story.

PARAMOUNT CONVERTS STOCK IN 'STREAMLINING'

New Issue in Exchange for Outstanding Debentures and Bank Loans Totalling $20,000,000

For purposes of further simplification of its financial structure, Paramount Pictures, Inc., last Friday, in New York, announced an exchange of new debentures for outstanding debentures and bank loans.

The holders of Paramount 3¼ per cent convertible debentures, of which $12,681,000 principal amount is outstanding in public hands, and of $7,355,782 aggregate principal amount of bank loans, were apprised by the company of an offer to exchange a maximum of $20,000,000 of new 4 per cent debentures, due 1956, for the foregoing securities on an even basis.

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, said in a letter to debenture holders that the 3¼ per cent debentures exchanged under this offer would not be reissued, but either would be canceled or tendered from time to time to the trustee of the indenture under which they were issued for retirement through the sinking fund.

The 3¼ per cent debentures which are unsecured, are convertible at any time on or before March 1, 1942, into three shares of common stock for each $100 principal amount of debntures at the basic conversion price per common share of $33.33, and thereafter and up to Feb. 23, 1947, into two and a half shares of common stock at a basic conversion price of $40 a share.

Not Registered with SEC

The exchange plan was offered as soon as an application for issuance of the new debentures on Form T-3 of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 became effective. The new securities will not be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, but information on the proposed listing of the new debentures on the New York Stock Exchange was submitted to the SEC.

Under the indenture, the 4 per cent debentures, which will not be convertible and which will be unsecured, will be limited to $25,000,000 in aggregate principal amount. The company has no present intention of issuing any of the additional $5,000,000 of new debentures, Mr. Balaban said.

Sinking fund provisions of the new debentures are that on each May 15, beginning in 1943, the company will pay $500,000 in cash to the trustee, if duing the entire preceding fiscal year of the company any of the 3¼ per cent debentures were outstanding; on such May 15 immediately following the fiscal year in which the 3¼s have ceased to be outstanding the greater part of $500,000 or an amount equivalent to a fraction of (a) 15 per cent of consolidated net earnings for the preceding fiscal year, which are not in excess of $10,000,000, plus (b) 20 per cent of such consolidated net earnings which exceed $10,000,000. The denominator is to be twelve and the numerator thereof the number of calendar months during which none of the 3¼s were outstanding.

The company may redeem all or any part of the 4 per cent debentures at 103 per cent on or before Aug. 31, 1946; at 102 per cent thereafter until Aug. 31, 1951; at 101 thereafter until Aug. 31, 1953, and at par thereafter to maturity.

Certain exceptions will apply in case of specified property transactions involving more than $500,000 in cash.

Acceptance of the exchange offer must be made on or before Nov. 10, but the compnay has the right to extend it to a later date.

IATSE CONSIDERS NEW CONTRACT PROPOSALS

Producers Reported To Have Submitted 10% Proposal to Counter 15–20% Demands

Nine Hollywood studio IATSE locals were this week considering the producers' counter proposals to their wages and hours demands, submitted late last week, in negotiations now under way for new contracts, at the New York offices of Pat Casey, producers' labor representative.

The negotiations have been on since the renewal of the studio labor basic agreement last month, at Newark, whereby seven internationals agreed to extend altered terms of the agreement, another five years; and in which they obtained a general 10 per cent wage increase.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees did not reenter that pact, its locals preferring to negotiate individual pacts, with merely the aid of IATSE international officers, who have since attended some meetings between Mr. Casey and the locals' business agents.

10% Raise Proposed

While not much specific information was divulged by the conferees, it was understood Monday the producers' counter submissions include a 10 per cent wage boost similar to that granted the other internationals.

The IATSE locals were said asking 15 and 20 per cent increases.

They are also reported to have introduced jurisdictional claims, in the meetings; and the producers were said referring these claims back to them, because, they maintain, such demands are for union authorities alone to decide.

The agents returned to Hollywood this week to report producers' proposals to members.

In the same city, the CIO's "invasion" of the film industry, an American Federation of Labor domain, continue. Members of the Screen Publicists Guild will receive ballots Saturday and Monday on affiliation with the CIO, after having listened to proponents of that organization and the AFL at two membership meetings in the past several weeks.

Would Join Local 109

Should they vote affiliation, they will become part of the CIO's Local 109, of the United Professional and Office Workers of America, joined previously by employes guilds at the Columbia, MGM, and RKO home offices, and by the Screen Readers Guild.

Reported, also, was much dissent within the organization, over affiliation, with some members in the higher salary brackets threatening to leave the Guild if it goes CIO.

The UPOWA will present a charter to the local Friday night, at special ceremonies. Joseph Curran, a CIO vice-president, will be one of the speakers.

The SPG, at regular meeting last week, voted support and an undisclosed sum, to the Stop Censorship Committee of theatrical organizations, formed recently to combat legislative attacks upon films and the theatre.

The American Federation of Musicians last week engaged in another dispute with a network; this time, with the Columbia Broadcasting System, from whom it barred remote sustaining dance band programs, after a dispute between its Pittsburgh local and the Columbia outlet in that city, station WJAS. The Pittsburgh disagreement is over the number of men the local station should employ. The union asserts it employs none now; that it formerly employed 11.

In Hollywood, the Screen Writers Guild elections November 12th will see as contestants Charles Brackman and Sidney Buchman, for president; Ralph Block and Mary McCall, Jr., vice-president; Leonard Lee and Robert Rossen, secretary; Richard Maibaum and Harry Tugend, treasurer.

Candidates Nominated

For the executive board, for which 11 will be elected plus six alternates, the following have been nominated: Art Arthur, Claude Binyon, Ralph Block, Charles Brackett, Harold Buchman, Sidney Buchman, Hugo Butler, Alan Campbell, Jerome Chodorov, Marc Connelly, Myles Connolly, Olive Cooper, Philip Dunne, Francis Faragoh, Joseph Fields, Paul Frinklin, Paul Gangelin, Oliver H. P. Garrett, James Gow, Don Hartman, Boris Ingester, Charles Kaufman, Harry Kurnitz, Leonard Lee, Robert Lees, Richard Macauley, Richard Maibaum, Brian Marlow, Mary McCall, Jr., Jane Marfin, George Oppenheimer, E. E. Paramore, Jr., Frank Partos, Nat Perrin, Maurice Rapf, Betty Reinhardt, Allen Rivkin, Stanley Roberts, Robert Rossen, Stanley Rubin, Dwight Taylor and Harry Tugend.

In Alliance, Ohio, the projectionists' union has won a 10 per cent wage increase in the four houses of the Tri-Theatres, Inc. It is the first increase in several years.

Nine houses in Canton, same state, have signed new three-year contracts with the projectionists' local, retroactive to September 1st, as was the Alliance pact.

Janitors in Milwaukee theatres, belonging to the Building Service Employees Union, have received an increase of approximately two and one-half cents per hour, under their contract.

The Film Exchange Employes Union Chicago local is reported dissatisfied with its IATSE affiliation.

Annual elections of the Laboratory Technicians Local 702 will be held, in New York, Saturday.

Kopf Elected Vice-President

Harry C. Kopf, general manager of the National Broadcasting Company's central division with headquarters in Chicago, has been elected a vice-president of the network in charge of the division, by the board of directors. Mr. Kopf was central division sales manager until a year ago when he was promoted to the post of general manager, succeeding Sidney N. Strotz who was then named vice-president in charge of programs.

Bachman Resigns Warners

Harry Bachman, salesman at the Warner exchange in Philadelphia, covering the Scranton, Pa., territory, resigned to return to Washington, where he will manage the independent Circle Theatre. He is succeeded by Ben Bache, one-time film salesman and more recently house manager for the Henry Fried theatres in suburban Philadelphia.

Film Council Elects

Mrs. Frank R. Anderson has been elected president of the newly formed Motion Picture Council of Cleveland, Ohio. Dr. David Wiems was elected vice-president; Mrs. Edna McLachlan, treasurer, and Mrs. Lowell Ray, secretary.

Mexican Strike Settled; Union Gets 15% Raise

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

The Mexican film workers strike which was launched first against Loew's and Warners more than a month ago, was settled last Saturday on a basis acceptable to the eight major American distributors who had maintained a solid front against the union's initial demands throughout the controversy. Work resumed Monday under the agreement which runs to October 11, 1943.

The union workers were granted wage increases of 15 per cent by the distributors as contrasted with the 33 1/3 per cent increases originally demanded and, in addition, successfully resisted demands of the union for inclusion of theatre checkers and office cashier in the union's membership.

Firm on Membership

The latter demand was the principal obstacle to an agreement throughout the strike, since the distributors contended that to agree to the unionization of those workers would be tantamount to surrendering control of their own business affairs.

In refusing the demand, the distributors were prepared to cease business in Mexico indefinitely and had stopped film deliveries to Mexican theatres on Oct. 5 after the required 30-day contractual notice to their accounts. American home office foreign departments stopped film shipments to their Mexican branches early in the strike. Both services were resumed immediately, from New York and to the theatres. Houses in Mexico City have been forced to depend on foreign and independent product for the past week, and, with grosses falling off sharply, had petitioned the government for authority to cut down house personnel, which brought new pressure to bear on the union.

The second good will delegation to come from Hollywood this year, accompanied the Rt. Rev. John J. Cantwell, Archbishop of Los Angeles and other high Catholic personages here for festivities connected with the Coronation of Our Lady of Guadalupe, Mexico's patron saint on October 12th, celebrated in Spanish America as "The Day of the Race."

The Hollywood contingent included Fred Beetson, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Producers Association and personal representative of Will H. Hays, and Mrs. Beetson; George J. Schaefer, RKO President, and Mrs. Schaefer; Joseph I. Breen, RKO vice president, and Mrs. Breen; Ben Piazza, RKO studios director, and Mrs. Piazza, and Jack Haley, the actor. This group traveled on the Archbishop's special train. Arriving at the same time by plane were William Hawks, UP President, and Manuel Reachi, representative in Hollywood of the Mexican government and brother of Santiago Reachi, President of Posa Films, S. A., one of the newest and most active local producers.

With Archbishop Cantwell, the Hollywood-Los Angeles visitors attended a pontifical mass for peace throughout the Americas and a special concert on the pipe organ at the Shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe here on October 12 as the special guests of the Rt. Rev. Luis Maria Martinez, Archbishop of Mexico.

The Shrine mass and concert were broadcast throughout Latin America.

CANADIAN THEATRES REPORT GAINS DESPITE WAR TAXES, RESTRICTIONS

Profits at Least Equal to 1940 Predicted for Famous Players; New Construction Halted by Priority Rules on Materials

Canadian theatres are reaping the benefits of war wages and new industries. From Montreal this week came reports theatres in all sections of the Dominion have noted increased attendance; and that it is especially marked in areas in which war industries are booming.

The Famous Players Canadian circuit of more than 300 theatres is said to have profits this year much ahead of those last year. It is indicated the company will certainly do at least as well as last year, the best for the company since 1930.

The operating earnings in 1940 were $2,663,043, the net profit coming to $2.32 per share.

The 20 per cent Federal admission tax, effective June 1st, has held profits down to some extent, it is admitted. This tax is said to have somewhat hampered spending for amusements, despite vastly increased earning power.

War Hampering Construction

by W. M. GLADISH
in Toronto

Construction in Canada is at a standstill because no more sanctions are being issued by the Dominion Government's Priorities Board for the completion of theatres or for extensive remodelling for that indefinite period known as the "duration." The time is slowly approaching when there will be no new theatres to open —the word "slowly" is used intentionally because owners and contractors of the few unfinished theatres are making painful progress, despite frantic efforts to obtain experienced building trades workmen and heavy materials.

The partly built theatres can now be counted upon the fingers. They were already under way April 30 last or they would not have been approved by the Priorities Chairman. One new theatre, the Melrose at North Bay, was to have been opened last July but the latest word is that the work will not be finished "for another month." Famous Players Canadian Corp. has been trying to finish a new theatre at Fort William, Ont., while Odeon Theatres of Canada Limited has obviously been "stuck" with a large theatre project at Sarnia, Ont., for some weeks, the Sarnia Odeon having been scheduled to open Labor Day. A small theatre is still in construction at Cornwall while an independent house is yet to be finished at Kitchener, Ont. That is the present theatre building program "because of the war."

If it had not been for the ban on construction of large civilian commercial buildings as a war measure, there would probably now have been a race between rival chain interests in the erection of new theatres across Canada, coincident with the withdrawal of N. L. Nathanson from Famous Players Canadian Corp. and the creation of Odeon Theatres of Canada Limited. It is a known fact that a number of newly-acquired theatre sites are now lying untouched in different parts of the Dominion because of the prohibition. Undoubtedly, there would have a rush to erect opposition theatres in more than a few situations, with both sides indulging in a freely-swinging building program. In some quarters the belief is held that the sudden ban last spring was a severe blow to the expansion plans of Nathanson in the development of Odeon Theatres of Canada but, if it has been, "N. L." has not had one word of complaint.

In this light, the thought has been expressed by more than one film trade official that the government ban is really a barrier against the erection of theatres in mushroom industrial centers of the war period which might become an economic problem when the war rush is a thing of the past.

Peculiarly Toronto still has theatres that appear unwanted orphans despite the building restruction, apparently because the cost of reconditioning would be heavy. These include the Victoria Theatre in downtown Toronto; the Rosedale, which has been closed for years; the Teck and Family, two neighborhood houses; and then there is Loew's Winter Garden which has been idle so long that everybody has forgotten its existence. Probably Toronto has sufficient theatres after all. But the opening of a new theatre anywhere in Canada will soon be an event of extreme rarity.

Toronto Blackout Hurts Attendance

The 30 minute practice blackout in Toronto two weeks ago hurt business at most theatres, tabulations show; however, the attendance decrease was not as much as during the first blackout in June. A sidelight to the blackout was the delay of a film delivery truck caught in the consequent traffic jam.

Meanwhile, the FPC circuit has now completed organization of a blackout plan to be used during real air raids. Performances, it is reported, are to continue during such raids; but FPC personnel, trained for the event, will take "action stations." All Ontario theatres are said to be equipped with emergency lighting systems.

The circuit has bought the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, for $77,500, after protracted negotiations.

In Nova Scotia, the only new theatre permitted by the Government in that province this year, has been completed. It is the 1,000 seat Royal, in Truro, the third theatre there. The Spencer circuit will operate it.

Exhibitors in the Eastern provinces have started Sunday midnight shows. In Maine, across the boundary, patrons can only attend shows from three to eleven o'clock at night, Sundays; and even operation to that extent has been legal only two years.

Edmond Turcotte has been reappointed director on the National Film Board for three years. He is deputy director of the Reconstruction Board, Quebec.

Canadian theatres are aiding the Government's Red Cross Aluminum Drive by holding Aluminum shows Saturday mornings. The Department of National War Services has organized the Aluminum Victory Compaign for Canada, with admission to any theatre a piece of aluminum.

So far the theatre drive has had tremendous results, in Western Canada. In the two main downtown theatres in Port Arthur, and Fort William, 1,600 pounds of pots and pans were brought in one Saturday morning alone. One house netted 900 pounds and the other 700 pounds. The Orpheum theatre in Fort William, Ont., and the Colonial theatre in Port Arthur, Ont., held these Aluminum shows.

In Winnipeg, boy scouts man the theatres on Aluminum mornings. Every theatre is participating. The film exchanges are donating their film, the projectionists their time, and the theatres their show. Transportation of the aluminum is made by trucks from more than 150 Winnipeg firms, with volunteer drivers.

Saturday morning Aluminum Shows in Winnipeg are showing excellent results. The Park theatre in the suburbs has headed the list in the salvage drives for the third consecutive time, with 208 pounds of aluminum brought in the last special show.

"Sons of Liberty" an Associated Screen Studios musical short subject, was included in the programs of 400 theatres during Reconstruction Week, September 10th to 16th. It was produced for the National Film Board, and is an impressionistc presentation of the country's war efforts.

Some rural theatres are reported not sharing in the war prosperity, it was said in Toronto.

The farmers are the last class to obtain financial benefit from the demand for war supplies and from advancing prices; the young people have drifted to the urban centres where they can obtain jobs in war plants; many young men in the prime of life have joined the colors, which means they have left home, and the higher cost of practically all commodities leaves the people with less money to spend for amusements, recreation and semi-luxuries. All of these factors have hit the small-town theatre operator.

The Federal 20 per cent admissions tax is termed a heavy burden for the small operator.

Toronto film circles predict the rural problem will appear in Parliamentary sessions, which begin in November.

SHOW FREE FRENCH PICTURE IN CANADA

"Free France," depicting activities of Charles De Gaulle and his Free French forces in England, Africa and Asia, was shown in Canada for the first time last week, at the Rideau Theatre, Ottawa, under the auspices of the city's section of the Free French National Committee. Representatives of the General attended the showing.

Smith Again Heads Canada Film Group

Dr. Sidney Smith, president of the University of Manitoba, has been reelected president of the Canadian National Film Society. Charles G. Cowan of Ottawa and Victor Dore, Superintendent of Education in Quebec, were returned as vice-presidents.

O. C. Wilson, secretary, reported films distributed by the Society through its library units were shown to an aggregate audience of 405,000 persons in 1940, as compared with 117,000 in 1939.

Following the dissolution of the operating arrangement with Famous Players Canadian in Montreal, and the consummation of a new agreement with Odeon Theatres, officers and directors of Hamilton United Thetres, Ltd., of Hamilton, have been named as follows: W. D. Ross, president; G. C. Williams, Joseph Honson, F. A. Sherman and H. Borden, directors, with T. J. Bragg as secretary.

HANDS ACROSS THE ROCKIES: Bill Elliott—Best Bill Elliott picture in a long time. Could be better if "Cannonball" Taylor wouldn't sing. Running time, 58 minutes. Played September 25-27.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF DANIEL BOONE, THE: Bill Elliott—See review on "Doctors Don't Tell," Republic.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

RICHEST MAN IN TOWN, THE: Frank Craven, Roger Pryor, Eileen O'Hearn—No good. Eileen O'Hearn is good; we should hear more from her. Played it on a double bill. Skip it or double bill it. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 3-5.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

TWO FISTED RANGERS: Charles Starrett, Sons of the Pioneers—Average Starrett story as usual. Running time, 62 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

UNDER AGE: Nan Grey, Mary Anderson, Tom Neal—Did not see this, personally, but from box office report it must have been a little better than the average "program" picture. Played October 1-2.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER AGE: Nan Grey, Tom Neal—Don't pass this up. It's a natural. Business outstanding.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BAD MAN, THE: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—Picture bad. Star brought them in. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 10-12.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Brothers, Tony Martin—Well, during the week previous to this showing we had more people tell us they thought the Marx Brothers were the bunk and they would not go across the street to see them; then we did the best Friday-Saturday business in week. Even some of those who kicked about them came. And the picture was their best in a long time, principally because they gave us more music than ever before. Played September 26-27.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy, Ian Hunter—Title of picture brought them in. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 21-22.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Lionel Barrymore, Lew Ayres, Laraine Day, Red Skelton—Good picture and fair business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 30.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GETAWAY, THE: Charles Winninger, Robert Sterling—Just a nice program picture with plenty of action for the fans who like it that way. Played September 24-25.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GET-AWAY, THE: Robert Sterling, Charles Winninger—Fast-moving gangster picture that appealed mostly to the men. Did average business on prize night. Played September 19-20.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

LAND OF LIBERTY: Historical—Not a propaganda picture as most people think. In reality, it is the building of a vast, rich empire, the United States of America. Our many grandfathers and fathers fought and died to build this country and under no present conditions should we ever allow their dreams to be destroyed and lose our greatest treasure, Freedom. Wake up, America, and preserve all these things your forefathers have rightfully given you. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 24-25.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—Very good. Best gross of season. Running time, 106 minutes. Played September 14-16.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE VS. DR. KILDARE, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Lew Ayres, Laraine Day—Congratulations to the entire staff at MGM who is responsible for these pictures. There is no cast, nor sequel run of pictures that can compare with "Dr. Kildare." Here is the perfect picture that is enjoyed by the entire family. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 21-23.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

THEY MET IN BOMBAY: Clark Gable, Rosalind Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 21-23.—regular stuff and Rosalind just as fine as ever in the kind of role she does best. Some very thrilling action. Played September 21-22.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MELODRAMA: Frank Morgan, Ann Rutherford, Kent Taylor—A better than average Frank Morgan picture. Story and music were excellent. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 17-18.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE, A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas—Nothing extra, but just leave it to Metro to ruin your possibilities with their trailer. They just tell you of pictures of the past and give you no plug on the picture you are advertising. Just mention "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" in this town and patrons flock for other theatres and leave us starve. Metro shows very little showmanship in their trailers. Running time, 105 minutes. Played September 28-30.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL, THE: Lana Turner, James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr—Went over pretty good, but no business at this late date.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

Monogram

PRIDE OF THE BOWERY: East Side Kids— Mediocre picture that drew fairly well considering the weather. Stand up only on a double bill. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 25-27.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Heisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BUCK BENNY RIDES AGAIN: Jack Benny, Ellen Drew, "Rochester" Eddie Anderson, Andy Devine—Did better than expected second run. Play was written by Arthur Stringer of Chatham, which we played up.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—A real treat for audience and box office. Give us more of them.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Venorica Lake—Good picture with Brian Donlevy, as usual, taking most of the honors. Something about this feature just didn't click and it is hard to say what it was. It drew well Sunday night, but fell off badly the next two nights. Still did considerably better than average business, and also cost more than an average picture. Played September 28-30.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Charles Ruggles, Ellen Drew, Phil Terry—Here's a dandy program picture for the week-end. A modified western of a different type, that both men and women liked. Ruggles got a lot of well-deserved praise for his performance. No chance to go wrong on this one. Played September 26-27.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

POWER DIVE: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Helen Mack—Not a bad picture. Paramount has improved this year and making some very interesting pictures. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 3-4.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

ROAD TO ZANZIBAR, THE: Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—The kind of comedy our crowd likes. Running time, 90 minutes.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

ROUND-UP, THE: Richard Dix, Patricia Morison, Harry Sherman who, incidentally, is rated one of the Preston Foster, Don Wilson—Another fine picture from finest producers in the field of westerns. This is not an ordinary so-called horse opera but a splendid production of the early West filmed in sepia. No reason why it can't play in the deluxe houses to complete satisfaction. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

SECOND CHORUS: Fred Astaire, Paulette Goddard, Artie Shaw and his Band—Played this second run at the Park theatre to very mediocre business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—See review on "Meet John Doe," Warners.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour, John Barrymore, Akim Tamiroff—A good feature worth playing, which failed to draw.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

BAD MAN OF DEADWOOD: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Carol Adams—Good picture and good business. Pleased the week-end fans. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 3-4.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

CITADEL OF CRIME: Robert Armstrong, Frank Albertson, Linda Hayes—Another good one from Republic. Running time, 58 minutes.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

DOCTORS DON'T TELL: John Beal, Florence Rice, Edward Norris—A dandy little picture that should please anywhere. Doubled with "The Return of Daniel Boone" to the best gross since my last Gene Autry.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

DOCTORS DON'T TELL: John Beal, Florence Rice, Edward Norris—Nice little picture. Republic is going along fine on their product Running time. 66 minutes.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

GAUCHO SERENADE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey—Wasn't worth playing. These Autry's are a dying race. If Autry keeps using these cheap stories, he won't get anywhere. Running time, 66 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

MELODY RANCH: Gene Autry, Jimmy Durante, Ann Miller—A good Autry picture. The "My Gal Sal" number was as good as anything on the screen. Just one complaint, Republic, do not make the mistake of leaving Smiley ("Frog") Burnette out of Autry films. Smiley is to Autry as ham is to eggs. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 19-20.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

RAGS TO RICHES: Alan Baxter, Mary Carlisle—Nice picture. Everybody liked it. Running time, 65 minutes.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

SAILORS ON LEAVE: William Lundigan, Shirley Ross—Good little musical show which pleased average business. Has plenty of comedy, but not enough star power. Played October 5-6.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CONSPIRACY: Allan Lane, Linda Hayes—A fair program picture. Will get by on a dual bill.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

FLYING DEUCES, THE: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Jean Parker—An excellent Laurel-Hardy. Will be excellent for a filler. Running time, 67 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

LI'L ABNER: Granville Owen, Martha O'Driscoll, Buster Keaton—A small town natural. Just what the doctor ordered. Makes you a new person.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

RELUCTANT DRAGON, THE: Robert Benchley—To most of my crowd this was an interesting trip through the Disney Studios, as it was intended to be. Some, however, were disappointed as they expected all cartoon. Give Disney credit for again doing something different. We had excellent receipts with both "Snow White" and "Pinocchio." In fact, they were both record breakers here. Business was quite good on this one, but there was a real drop in attendance. I hope "Dumbo" gets them back in the groove. Many a parent comes with a kid to a show like this as a "Reluctant Drag-in," but thoroughly enjoy themselves when it gets started. Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 2-3.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY: Ginger Rogers, George Murphy, Burgess Meredith—Here is a good picture that is quite different and has plenty of comedy. Those that came thought it was very good; however, business was very bad for this time of the year. Most of my crowd had seen it in New York just before they left for college. In fact, as far as I can see, every Tom, Dick and Harry in town had seen it elsewhere. Running time, 86 minutes. Played October 1.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ADVENTURES OF SHERLOCK HOLMES, THE: Basil Rathbone, Nigel Bruce, Ida Lupino—More of these Holmes, Fox. Good story which keeps everybody's attention.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

BLOOD AND SAND: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Nazimova, Rita Hayworth—Beautiful picture! Played by a very capable cast down to the last bit player and pleased our patrons 100 per cent. Played September 28-29.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BLOOD AND SAND: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Nazimova, Rita Hayworth—Fair picture, but customers didn't go for it very much. Running time, 125 minutes. Played August 31-September 2.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN BROADCAST, THE: Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, John Payne, Cesar Romero—Keeping in mind the big hit that "Tin Pan Alley" (Alice Faye, Jack Oakie and John Payne) made as the concluding feature of our 1940-41 season last April 26, we quite naturally sought a picture equally as entertaining with which to open our 1941-42 season on October 4. And what did we find? "The Great American Broadcast," of course. It pleased our entire audience and proved to be a real gloom-chaser. Miss Faye gave her usual superlative performance (she's a prime favorite here), rendering several "nifty" tunes in her own inimitable manner. Jack Oakie, as usual, turns in another excellent job of acting and he certainly brought down the house with his opera singing. John Payne and Cesar Romero are at their best and are a decided asset to the picture. The Four Ink Spots' zestful singing, snappy tapping by the Nicholas Brothers, and the comedy supplied by the Wiere Brothers all added materially to the entertainment that the picture provided. It is a very entertaining vehicle and most certainly should please everyone.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK: Alice Faye, Fred MacMurray, Richard Greene, Brenda Joyce—A good feature. This feature's plot concerned Robert Fulton's steamboat, which made it fairly comical in the feature. Running time, 100 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

THAT UNCERTAIN FEELING: Merle Oberon, Melvyn Douglas, Burgess Meredith—Sophisticated comedy that didn't do the business it should have.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC: Jascha Heifetz, Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds—That's all they had, but music. An excellent plot, but was drowned out by too much operetta music. Enjoyed by few and we do mean few. Running time, 103 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

BACHELOR DADDY: Baby Sandy, Edward Everett Horton—Easiest way to go out of business is to play more pictures like this one. Running time, 66 minutes.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

HELLO SUCKER: Hugh Herbert, Tom Brown, Peggy Moran—Easiest way to go out of business is to play more pictures like this one. Running time, 60 minutes.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

LAW OF THE RANGE: Johnny Mack Brown, Fuzzy Knight—Best Johnny Mack Brown picture in a long time. Fuzzy Knight better than ever. Running time, 59 minutes. Played September 3-5.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

Warners-First National

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray—Good picture and fair business in spite of rain and the new Federal tax. Men liked it, women didn't care for it. Personally, I thought it was too long. Running time, 133 minutes. Played October 1-2.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

HIGHWAY WEST: Arthur Kennedy, Brenda Marshall, Olympe Bradna—Very good. Lots of action. Good week-end picture.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HIGHWAY WEST: Arthur Kennedy, Brenda Marshall, Olympe Bradna—A Fair action week-end program picture we played with a second run to average business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—Good picture that is interesting all the way through. The closing scene was slightly weak with Barbara Stanwyck over-acting. Did quite well on a three-day run, but not so good as "Shepherd of the Hills" the previous week. Played September 21-23.—S. L. George, Mountain Home Theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho. Small town patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert—A great picture starring the screen's most sensational guy, Humphrey Bogart. He alone is worth the price of admission. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 1-2.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert—Good picture to very poor business.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

CUTE RECRUIT, THE: Phantasies Cartoons—Not a very good cartoon.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

FRENCH FRIED PATOOTIE: Alan Mowbray—This is a silly bedroom farce with Alan Mowbray. It tries hard but the laughs were not too frequent here. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE: Roscoe Karns—This is concerned mostly with Roscoe Karns annoying people in a movie theatre. Typical slapstick stuff that my crowd got some laughs out of. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

WISE OWL: Color Rhapsody—A fair cartoon.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

YUMPIN' YIMINY: El Brendel—El Brendel as you like him. Two few of these comedies nowadays. A good laugh today is good for us all.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

COFFINS ON WHEELS: Crime Does Not Pay—All of these add to any program.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

MEMORY TRICKS: Pete Smith Specialties—Pete Smith shows humorously how to remember a list of ten items and the audience is surprised at how well it works. I heard some of the college students trying it the next day and were really getting results. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: Don't give us so much war. Wonder why a newsreel could not have something very unusual once every six months at least. Give us the daily news of the day.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

OF PUPS AND PUZZLES: Passing Parade—This Passing Parade subject is one of the best. It shows how dogs have similar emotional reactions to situations as humans do. That sounds quite heavy but there is really a lot of fun in it. Don't miss it if you are near a college. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

OF PUPS AND PUZZLES: Passing Parade—Entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PROSPECTING BEAR, THE: Color Cartoons—This is a good color cartoon of the fast and furious type. Had them laughing plenty. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

THIS IS THE BOWERY: Passing Parade—Well done Passing Parade entrant that traces the experiences of a down-and-outer in the Bowery Mission. Good for a church benefit particularly. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

WILLIE AND THE MOUSE: Passing Parade—The experiments with mice (although I think these are white rats) showing how they react similarly to human beings can be very interesting, especially to a college audience. Mine enjoyed it very much and it should prove of interest to anyone. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

YE OLDE MINSTRELS: Our Gang Comedy—One of the best. More real musical entertainment in this than in a lot of features.—Raymon Paul, Sea Breeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

FLIES AIN'T HUMAN: Popeye the Sailor—Average Popeye cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE, THE: Fascinating Journeys—Very good travel talk in color. The fight between the large snake and the mongoose is very thrilling.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SUPERMAN, NO. 1: Color Cartoon—Very good cartoon in color which drew the kids. Buy it and play it. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

HOW GOES CHILE?: Special—Good enough single on Chile and its politics. No propaganda for Chilesauce. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y., Small college town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 1: "Thumbs Up, Texas" This one is called "Thumbs Up, Texas" and actually contains some humor and a different announcer some of the time. As usual, it is good and stays away from the war for good share of its running time. It was well received here, although Texas is where it should really bring them in. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 12: "New England's 8 Million Yankees"—This issue shows the New England States and how the people live. Good, but made my bunch laugh in the wrong place once or twice. Perfect for New England, of course. When is New York State coming? Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

PUBLICITY SPORTS: Sportscope—Nice plug for Florida showing the things they cook up to attract attention. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

RIVETER, THE: Walt Disney Cartoons—A good color cartoon that pleased the children. Running time, 8 minutes.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

STEEDS AND STEERS: Sportscope—The usual assortment of rodeo scenes keeps the action at top speed for a good short. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

RODEO GOES TO TOWN, THE: Sports Reviews—We seem to be running to rodeos lately in our shorts. This is as good as any. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

UNCLE JOEY COMES TO TOWN: Terrytoons—Average black and white cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Universal

MUSIC IN THE MORGAN MANNER: Musicals—Exceptionally good. Play it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SCRUB ME, MAMMA, WITH A BOOGIE BEAT: Color Cartoon—Pretty good. Seemed to be enjoyed by everyone. Running time, 9 minutes.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

FREDDIE MARTIN AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A good filler.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GOOFY GROCERIES: Merrie Melodies—Very good. Lots of laughs and good music with impersonations of famous stars. Running time, 9 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

HECKLING HARE, THE: Merrie Melody Cartoon—Bugs Bunny still has plenty of drawing power here. I have customers that come for him alone. This color cartoon is one of the best for this style humor. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HERE COMES THE CAVALRY: Technicolor Specials—I always say the same thing about these color featurettes. I don't know how to get so much story in a short time. The spectacular horse scenes at the climax are better than many features with similar situations. This is really a crackerjack for good entertainment. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

MEET THE FLEET: Robert Armstrong, Mary Cheffey, William Orr—Here is a very pleasing short. Into a scant 20 minutes, Vitagraph has packed a nice little story plus a very interesting view of naval training. It was good to see Robert Armstrong again and we think he has been absent from screenland too long. A short that should interest everyone now that the U. S. Navy is so prominent in the news. Excellent photography in color makes this a perfect short subject. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds.

Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MINSTREL DAYS: Broadway Brevity—This two-reel minstrel show is better than many little features. It is tops in the short subject field. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PORKY'S HIRED HAND: Looney Tunes—Good for plenty of laughs. Running time, 8 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

SNIFFLES BELLS THE CAT: Merrie Melodies—Not bad. Running time, 8 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WACKY WORM, THE: Merrie Melody Cartoon—They laugh when the words "Merrie Melody" come on the screen. This one with a Jerry Colonna worm and a crow is good, but not quite up to the extra high mark of some of the others (at least, not in laughs received). Running time, 8 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Miscellaneous

PROOF OF THE PUDDING: United States Health Service—This free reel in color is well worth running. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Serials

Columbia

IRON CLAW, THE; CHAPTER 2: Charles Quigley, Walter Sande, Joyce Bryant—Better than first chapter. Room for lots of improveemnt. Running time, 19 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

IRON CLAW, THE; CHAPTER 3: Charles Quigley, Walter Sande, Joyce Bryant—James Horne might be the best serial director in Hollywood, but I'll give him five to one that I can beat this. If this doesn't improve soon, would advise to leave alone. Running time, 19 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

IRON CLAW, THE, CHAPTER 4: Charles Quigley, Walter Sande, Joyce Bryant—About same as last chapter. Getting no place fast. Running time, 18 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

IRON CLAW, THE, CHAPTER 5: Charles Quigley,, Walter Sande, Joyce Bryant—It still is just fight, hit and run. Nobody seems to know just what it is all about. No interesting dialogue, nor is the cast doing a good job. Very poorly produced and directed. Running time, 17 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

SPIDER'S WEB, THE: Warren Hull, Iris Meredith—Old, but good. Print good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones, Raymond Hatton—Buck Jones once made a feature of the same name, and they haven't forgotten it, so you will run into trouble. Good enough as a serial, but Columbia economized to the point where even the patrons noticed it.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

Republic

LONE RANGER RIDES AGAIN: Robert Livingston, Chief Thunder Cloud—An exciting serial which everyone enjoyed. If you haven't shown this serial, show it.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

JUNIOR G-MEN: Dead End Kids, Little Tough Guys—A fair serial, but did not seem to catch on. Thought it would lure the kids, but they were cold to it.—Eddie Mansfield, Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Family and transient patronage.

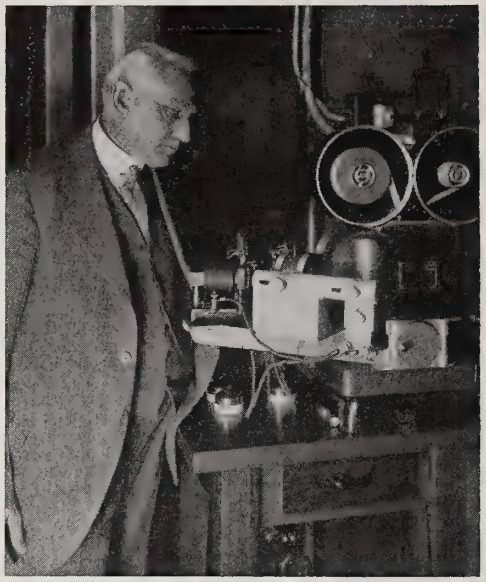
CHARLES A. HOXIE DIES, A SOUND FILM PIONEER

GE Engineer Developed Sound Film System Which Was the Basis of RCA Patents

Charles A. Hoxie, known for his early work on talking pictures and an inventor in the fields of talking pictures and radio communications, died Monday at his home near Schenectady, N. Y. He was 74 years old. Since he had received a pension in 1932 from General Electric, he had been living in retirement in Alplaus, a suburb of Schenectady.

Mr. Hoxie was born in 1867 at Constable, N. Y. and was educated in Boston. He later studied mechanical and electrical engineering. He became interested in telephony and developed an internal telephone system which he sold and installed in several Massachusetts cities near Boston, principally in shoe factory areas. As early as 1898 he was active in radio when he made a transmitter and receiver that operated between Boston and Brocton.



Had Telephone Post

At the turn of the century he became identified with the public telephone business and rose to the post of wire chief of the New England Telephone Company. He came to Schenectady in 1900 as wire chief for the now defunct Hudson River Telephone Company and remained with that firm until he joined General Electric in 1912. Prior to that, however, in 1902, in collaboration with Dr. Steinmetz, he made a radio transmitter for Union College.

Soon after he joined General Electric, Mr. Hoxie became interested in building a machine which would automatically record the dot and dash of radio at speed greater than any person could copy. He perfected a machine which he took to Washington and demonstrated to Government officials, with the result that in 1916 he spent the summer and winter conducting experiments for the Government at Otter Cliff, near Bar Harbor, Me. On returning to General Electric's laboratory, he made a few experiments using a stylus, and in 1919, he hit upon the idea of a tiny light beam focused on a small vibrating mirror, recording on film the zig-zag movements produced by sound as well as code. He called his device the Pallophotophone. This was before the days of network broadcasting and the machine was transported about the country, recording the voices of famous people which were later broadcast over WGY in Schenectady.

By 1920, Mr. Hoxie had developed a visual and photographic receiver for transatlantic wireless communication which received messages 30 times faster than the most skillful operator. This machine received up to 600 words per minute.

According to General Electric, Mr. Hoxie was the first inventor to devise the process of turning sound into light and recording it on a transparent film. When the first theatre demonstration of the talking movie, with both picture and sound recorded and synchronized on the same piece of film was made in Schenectady, in February, 1927, during a preview to newspapermen and representatives of the film industry, it excited so little enthusiasm that nothing more was done until seven months later when General Electric decided on a public showing to motion picture audiences in Schenectady. This, a one-reel film, depicting a singer, a violinist, an orchestra and a master of ceremonies, was shown at all performances in the State theatre in Schenectady for one week. It was known as the Kineagraphone, a name concocted by Mr. Hoxie and the engineers engaged in its development.

CHARLES A. HOXIE with his talking motion picture recording device.

Mr. Hoxie's experiments eventually led to the Hoxie machine for recording sound on the same motion picture film that carries the picture. The success of the first feature talking picture, "The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson, in August, 1927, marked finis to the silent motion picture. The production, however, used a synchronization of disks with the film. Gradually, this was replaced by the Hoxie method which is now licensed by RCA, to whom General Electric turned over the patent.

Mr. Hoxie leaves a widow, Jenny Bennalack Hoxie; a daughter, Mrs. John Blackwood, and two sons, Earl A. and Merrill C. Hoxie.

Helen Morgan, 41, Dies in Chicago

Helen Morgan, 41, screen and stage actress, died Wednesday, October 8th, at the Henrotin Hospital, Chicago, of a liver ailment. She became ill while appearing at the State-Lake theatre, Chicago, in mid-September and entered the hospital where she had several blood transfusions and an operation and had been in a coma for eight days before her death.

Miss Morgan first became a hit on Broadway in "Americana" and was best known for her performance in Ziegfeld's "Showboat." In addition she appeared in George White's "Scandals" and with Maurice Chevalier at the Ziegfeld Roof in New York. She also played in the film version of "Showboat."

Last Picture in 1936

Following her success on the stage Miss Morgan entered motion pictures. Her first appearance on the screen was in "Applause," in the role of a burlesque queen. The following season she starred in the Arthur Hamerstein-Jerome Kern operetta, "Sweet Adeline." In 1929 she returned to the screen in "Glorifying the American Girl" and "Roadhouse Nights," both Paramount productions. Other pictures in which she appeared included "The Lemon Drop Kid," "Marie Galante," "Sweet Music," "Go Into Your Dance," "Show Boat" and finally "Frankie and Johnnie" in 1936.

Despite her theatrical success Miss Morgan, whose top salary as a performer was $2,500 and who was believed to have earned $1,000,000 in her long career, was reported penniless when she died.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

TAKING INVENTORY

It was a visiting member come for lunch who ran through last week's book as we finished some chores. While waiting, the Round Tabler checked the various exploitations in the issue of October 11, discovering some 12 outstanding ideas he felt were good enough to be duplicated or adapted in his situation on coming attractions and holidays.

For the general interest of our readers, the following are the items, including newspaper ads, checked by the member as worthy of further exploitation:

Sailor hammock stunt for comedy service picture; street palanquin stunt for tropic picture; lobby postcard shower for recognized stars; lobby electric target device for patron participation on war pictures; numerous Hallowe'en ideas, old and new; men's beauty contest; baby parade; baby buggy garage; four-week bathing beauty contest; mayoral proclamation for army week on service picture; adoption of orphans on baby picture; teaser newspaper campaign, mats borrowed from regular newspaper service.

Anxious to get his reaction to this week's issue, we passed over the page-proofs. A quick study by the visitor brought this listing:

Children's world premiere; trip to Havana for selected local sales girl; essay contest for prize of long distance call from stage of theatre to star in Hollywood; job at theatre as prize for best letter of employment; foyer Chamber-of-Horrors stunt on horror picture; novelty heralds; radio quiz programs for children; back-to-school matinees; institutional blotter advertising.

According to the visitor, the two issues so observed are fairly representative of the high standard that the members themselves have established for these pages. That, of course, would bear out the universal acceptance of Managers' Round Table as the industry's only clearing house of tested exploitations.

While the above is written, the mails bring a note from one of the brand-new members. After reading the pages for quite a stretch he writes: "To have the HERALD without the Managers' Round Table, is like having a packed house without a feature."

From Chicago writes Louie Charninsky to inform of his attendance, on behalf of the Interstate circuit, at the annual National Safety Congress and Exposition, where thousands of delegates from everywhere convened. Charninsky's background well fits him to take part. He has long been a factor in the Hoblitzelle-O'Donnell cooperations aimed for the education of the Dallas citizenry.

It hardly needs commenting now that civic-minded exhibitors are seriously concerned in such community activities. It is something more to find, and gratifying, that so important an organization as Interstate points directly at protection of the public by sending a manager-representative to participate in the discussions and decisions of this highly significant conclave.

A WAY OF THINKING

The letter from one of our midwest scouts has to do with an argument between two managers on exploitation contests for individual pictures. One fellow held that when the prizes were worthwhile it was certainly in order to "tear up the town" and not worry about the costs. He opined that the bossman was impressed with a once-in-a-while splurge. "Give him the old eye-wash," was his battle-cry.

The other side could not see that at all. His idea was that each attraction should be taken in stride, given every advertising attention it rated, contest or no, even though his bossman encouraged him to go after every prize offered. In short, he could take his contest or leave it. He said that needless spending just to dress up a campaign was money thrown away. He felt that loyalty to the bossman had a lot to do with that.

Well, any argument of that nature jells by itself. It simply means a way of thinking. In many years of observing and conducting managers' exploitation contests, we have found the "prize-hunters" distinctly in the minority among the winners. Theatremen who go all-out on an attraction only because the picture rates it, more often are rewarded with the prizes striven for by the laddie who sees nothing else.

Initial winner and lobby on his "Football This Week" series is here reported by Clyde Smith in keeping with the elaborate campaign put on by the Malcoman at the Paramount, in Hot Springs.

Air Tieins Head 'Yank in R.A.F.'

The Los Angeles world premiere of "A Yank in the R. A. F.," at Grauman's Chinese, and the openings next day at Loew's State and the Fox West Coast Four-Star, were distinguished by a number of effective airplane promotions in the campaign directed by Harry Brand, Twentieth Century-Fox studio publicity head. The air stuff started with squadrons of planes flying over the city, with other planes towing a giant banner over the local Coliseum during the playing of the opening college football game. Same banner was also flown over the County Fair the following day.

Interest of the thousands in the city's numerous airplane plants was obtained with a give-away of guest tickets through employe identification buttons, this publicized with a hookup in Aircraft Times, widely distributed in the various plants. Plugs were had over the public address system at the first all-industry aircrafters' ball and a special "Lockheed-Vega" night at the three theatres was announced at the company's plants. Bulletins were posted in locker rooms and tickets sold through cooperation of employes organizations. Arrangements to have Tyrone Power pose with the most beautiful Lockheed girl employe further stimulated attendance.

C.R.A.F. at Toronto Opening

Befitting the promotional hands-across-the-border promotional importance of the picture, the Canadian premiere at the Famous Players Canadian Shea's, Toronto, was marked with the cooperation of local units of the Canadian Royal Air Force, parading with military band to the theatre. "Welcome to Canada. A Yank in the R. A. F." posters blanketed the main streets, decorated for the occasion. Eaton's, leading department store, contributed an elaborate window display of war flying souvenirs bordered with cards describing activities of Americans and Canadians in the R. A. F.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Rogers Holds Baby Contest For "Blossoms in the Dust"

Search for Cleveland's most beautiful baby was instituted by Carl Rogers of Loew's Granada in connection with the opening of "Blossoms in the Dust." Through programs, trailers and newspaper stories well ahead, folks were invited to enter their babes from one to four years of age. Promoted gifts from merchants were awarded to winners, cooperating stores featuring the contest in their ads and storewise. Not overlooking the mothers, Rogers further came through with promoted cake and soft drinks which were served during the get-together.

SOME LATE HIGHLIGHTS

What is believed to be the first world premiere ever staged exclusively for children was held last Saturday afternoon at Wometco's Center, Miami, Fla., by Manager Gordon Spradley on behalf of Columbia's "The Royal Mounted Patrol". In every possible manner, the event was put on with the care usually given to the circuit's top premieres, with tickets sold in advance for the widely publicized event.

The exploitations included a "mike" out front to announce the names of the arriving juveniles and, for atmosphere, children riding their own ponies to the theatre were admitted free of charge. Announcements of the premiere were mailed to the many kid club members and other interested youngsters, added strong support coming from the papers publicizing this unusual promotion.

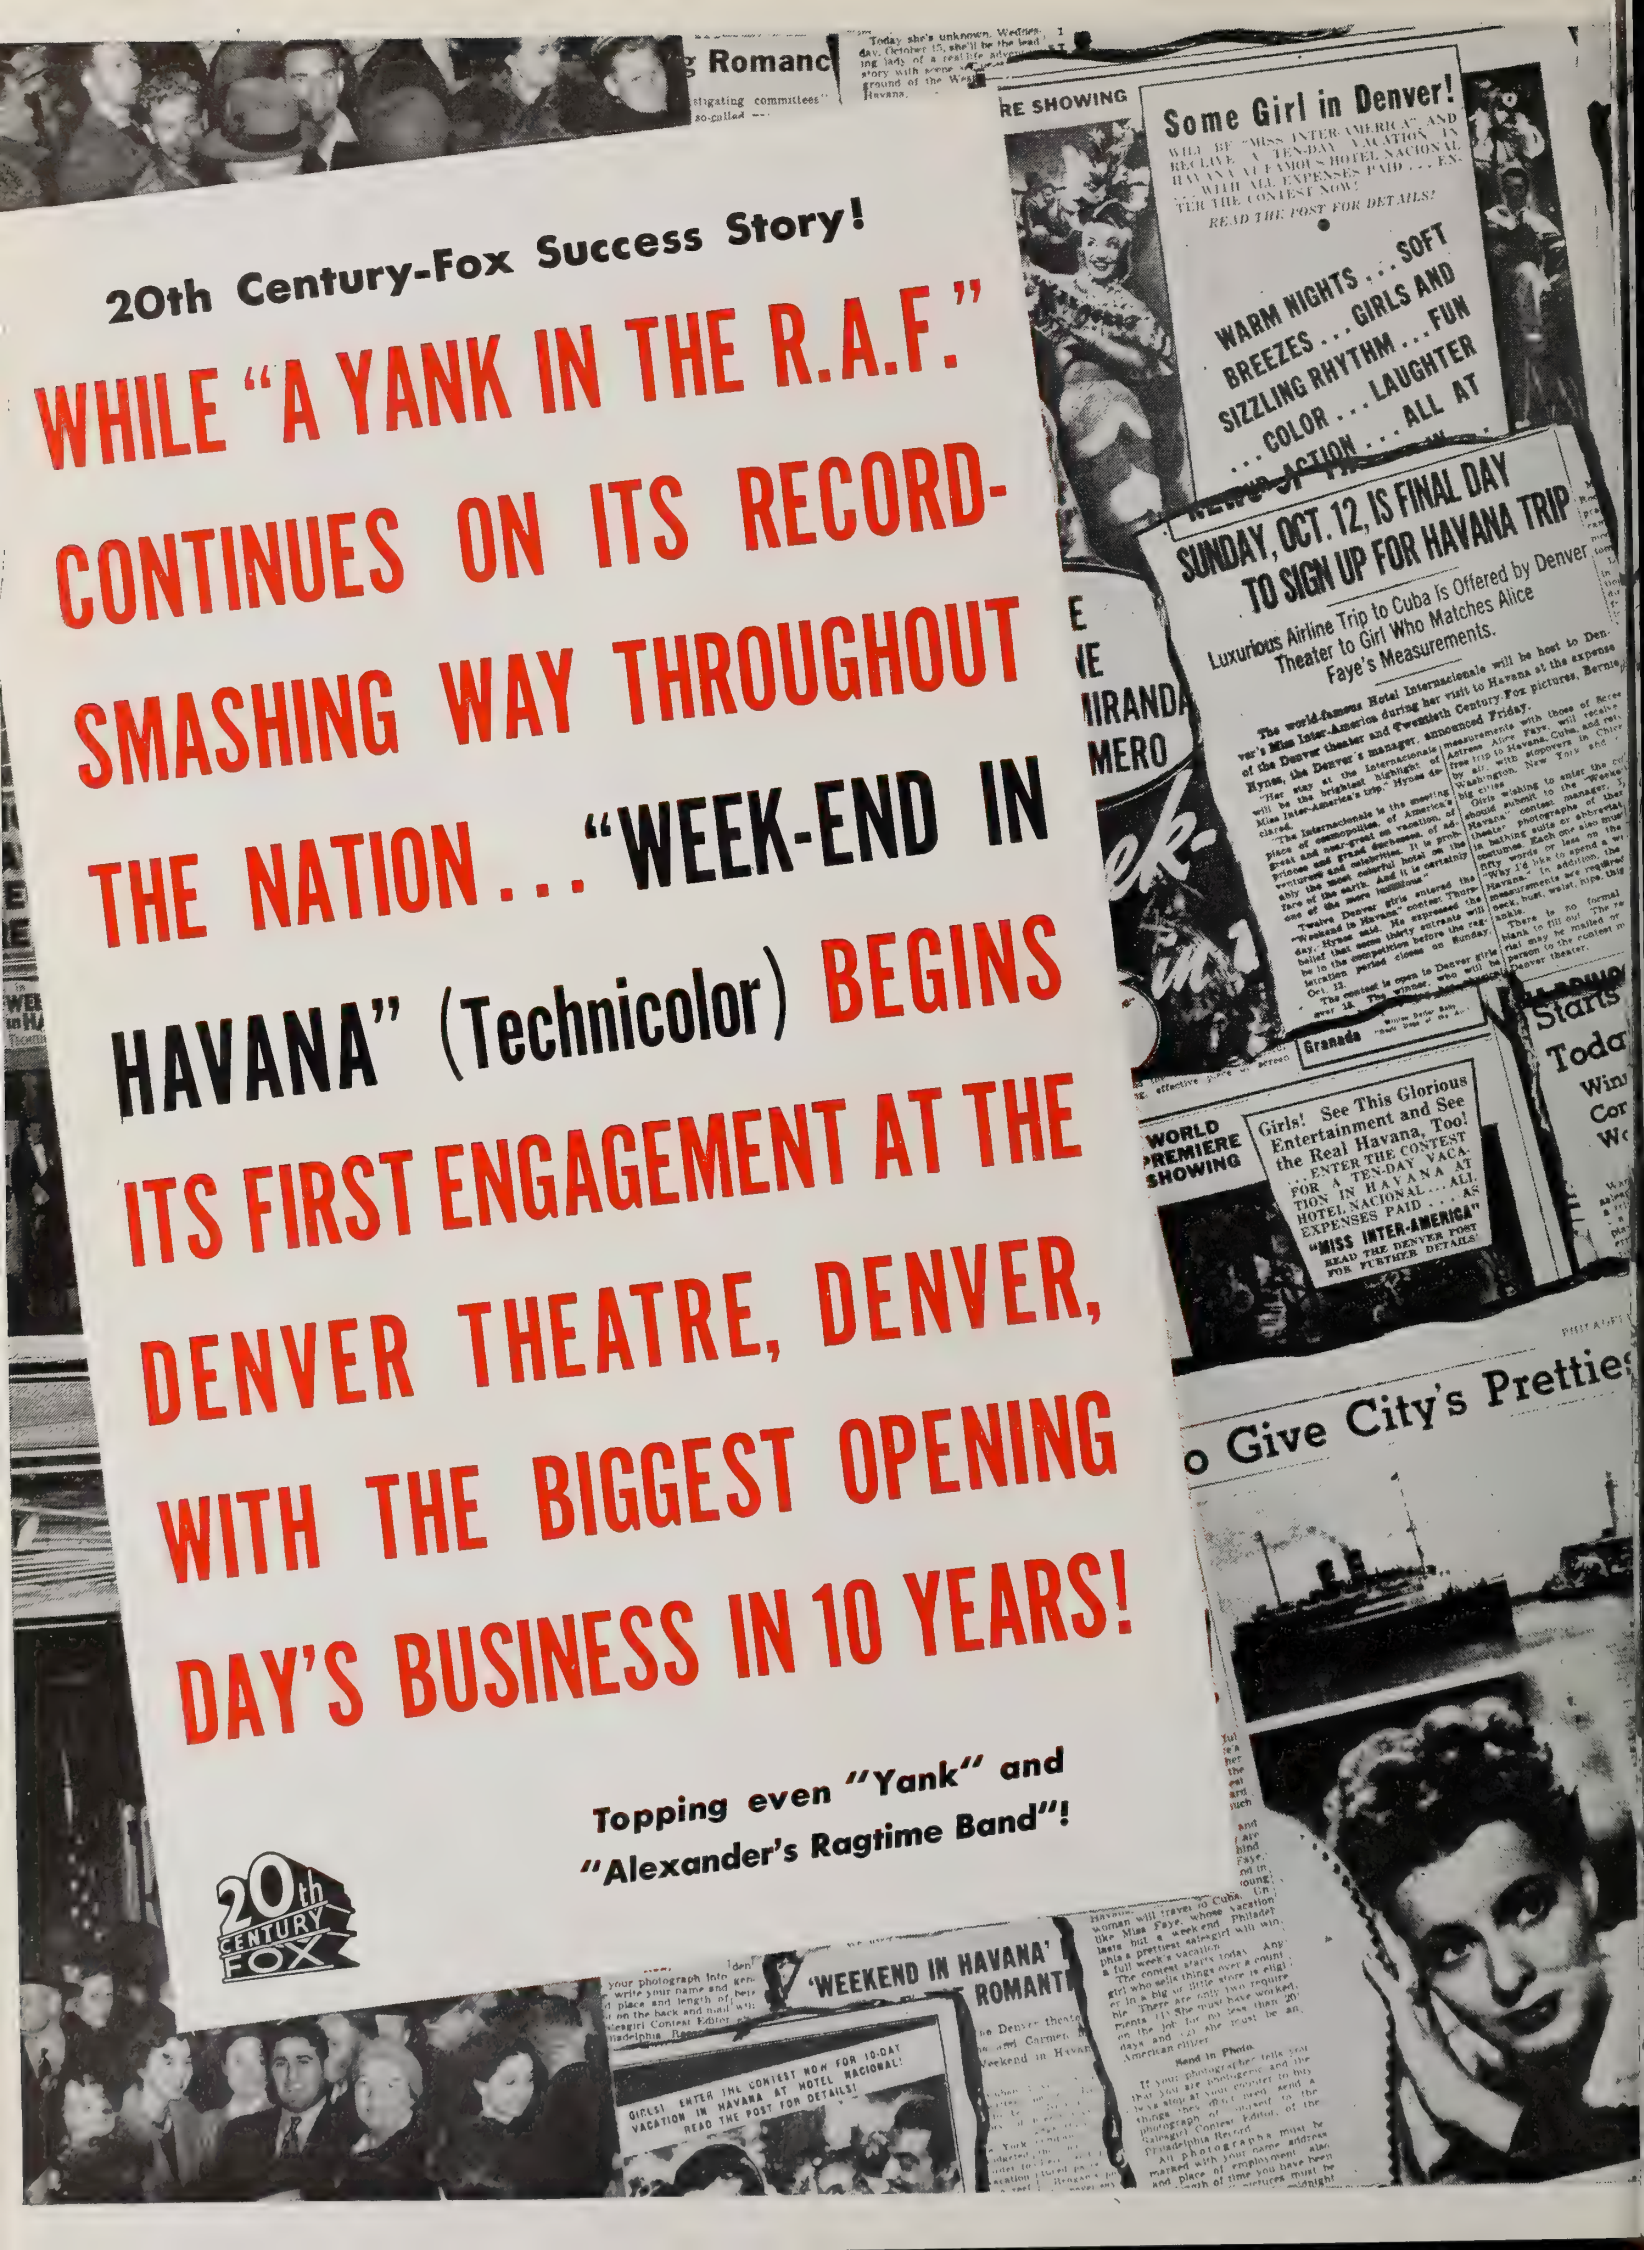
Well in advance, Spradley announced the event via trailer, followed with a lobby setpiece where were posted bulletins, publicity items, etc. For immediate newspaper attention, scroll was made up inviting the star of the picture to attend the children's premiere. Signed by 800 kids, the stunt broke in the local press, as did shot of youngster purchasing the first ticket at the box office. Sent to the Columbia Studios, the scroll brought further publicity, with photo of star and cast of the picture viewing the invitation. All wire services covered the unusual premiere and locally the Daily News used a page layout in the Sunday rotogravure section. Outside publicity was local fife and drum corps which paraded to the theatre and, to top the proceedings, a star impersonation contest on the stage also helped to turn in what the Wometcoman reports as one of the biggest events of the year.

"WEEKEND IN HAVANA" CONTEST FOR WEEK IN HAVANA

For next week's opening of "A Weekend in Havana", at Warners' Fox, Philadelphia, Ev Callow reports tiein with the Record to find most beautiful local salesgirl, the winner to be awarded all-expense one-week trip to Havana. All working salesgirls are eligible, the only requirement for the competition being photo of entrant to be mailed to the paper. Contest runs from Oct. 6 to midnight of Oct. 12, with 10 finalists to attend special luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton a few days later where Board of Judges will determine the winner, to be announced the following day. The selected girl will attend the premiere of the picture on Oct. 17, as guest of honor and, accompanied by Elsie Finn, the daily's motion picture critic, will depart from New York the next day.

The paper is getting behind the tiein with elaborate publicity and, as a follow-up, Callow had a colorful illustrated herald made up, with all details and regulations, for wide distribution around the city and particularly in stores with important salesgirl personnel. Travel hookups and other similar means of spreading the word were also engaged.

RANDFORCE CONTEST OFFERS $15,000 FREE ADMISSIONS



"To get people thinking and talking movies," writes Louis Frisch, is the purpose of the contest sponsored by the Randforce circuit of Brooklyn, New York, wherein patrons are invited to participate in a poll for awards of $15,000 in free admissions. Folder distributed in the circuit's 40 theatres and throughout the city features a ballot listing 100 top pictures of last year. Entrants are asked to select the 20 they think were the outstanding, numbering them from 1 to 20, according to merit. Lists coming closest to that selected by the judges will determine winners. Space is provided for name and address, plus any one of the circuit's theatres the entrant chooses to name. Ballot boxes are provided in all theatres.

Prizes are divided into 40 season passes, 80 three-month and 80 one-month passes, plus 20,000 single guest tickets, good at any of the theatres. Entries are confined to those above 16, and duplicate ballots will not be accepted. Contest ends Nov. 14, with prizes awarded from stages of the theatres on Nov. 20. It is not required that entrants be Randforce patrons or attend to participate, since the purpose is, to quote Mr. Frisch, "to revive the interest of the public in movies, so that we as well as other theatres in the community will benefit."

Butler Matches Lips Of Martin and Patrons

Ballyhoo man with his face covered with lip stick imprints, distributed two-color teaser novelty ahead of "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" for Warren Butler at the Princess Theatre, in Sioux City, Ia. Back banner read: "Hurry! Mary Martin is at the Princess to Kiss the Boys Goodbye. Get Your Share." Card, carried imprint in red of Mary Martin's lips with space below for patron's imprint. Guest tickets went to those whose lip outlines came closest to the star's.

In addition, gag copy such as "Are you getting the most out of your kisses? How's your technique? Find out how it should be done in," etc., was included on the card, together with cut of Miss Martin and the cast, plus playdates.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS

Bolnick Ties "Kane" To Want Ad Contest

Teddy Bolnick of the Hollywood Theatre, Wisc., tied in with the LaCrosse Tribune for a classified ad contest for his "Citizen Kane" run entitled "'Citizen (and Mrs.) Kane' Want Completely Furnished Home." Readers were asked to look through the classified ads, select a home for sale or rent, chose a list of items advertised to furnish and equip "Citizen Kane's Home," and to include in the list where to get them. Ten prizes were offered including tickets to the theatre. The contest ran three days with art on Welles and the two leading ladies, streamer on page three directed readers' attention to the classified page.

A hook-up with a radio station resulted in a search for local families named Kane, of which there were four, and they were interviewed. Department store used a window display of fashion art. The window was divided in two parts, one devoted to the tastes of the first Mrs. Kane and the other to the second Mrs. Kane.

Keyhole Lobby Setpiece Helps Lipnick Sell "Caroline"

Ingenious lobby display created ahead of "My Life With Caroline" by Irving Lipnick at Warner's Shore, in Chicago, was giant compoboard cutout of a keyhole. Around this was placed a number of photos from the picture, on the inside of the box directly in back of the keyhole were additional stills with copy "for a better view come and see," etc. Copy on the outside invited folks to peek behind the scenes.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Cohen Snaps Patrons With "Charley's Aunt"

Stunt that attracted considerable attention was that used by Lou Cohen ahead of "Charley's Aunt" at Loew's Poli, in Hartford, whereby 24-sheet cutout of Jack Benny dressed in female attire as he appears in the picture was planted in lobby, folks invited to step up and have their photos taken with the star. In addition five other of these giant cutouts were planted strategically around the lobby.

Much was made in the newspapers over a costume party with prizes going to those coming in best "Charley's Aunt" outfits. Other newspaper break included special two-column story on Cohen's Hollywood vacation, telling of his attending the premiere of the picture on the coast. Street bally featured usher dressed as "Charley's Aunt," who travelled all over the state with the Times movie editor, visiting summer theatres, beaches, ball parks, etc.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Williams Names Race For "Honky Tonk"

Highlight of Rex Williams campaign for "Honky Tonk" at the Loew Theatre, in St. Louis, was naming of the feature race at nearby track in honor of the picture. A blanket of roses was presented to the winning horse by the theatreman. Pasteboard coasters for night clubs calling attention to the opening were distributed; chain drug store menus were imprinted with title and co-op ads promoted from local merchants. Effective heralds were distributed with Liberty magazines and through tieup with railroads, special rates for persons living within a 150-mile radius were arranged.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Burnett Lands Feature On "When Ladies Meet"

A five-column "When Ladies Meet" feature on page one of the second section of the Pittsburgh Press was the result of an idea Martin Burnett of Loew's presented to the paper. He sold them the idea of sending out five girls to haunt beauty shoppes, women's shoppes and other places not frequented by men, to discover just what ladies talk about "When Ladies Meet." The survey showed clothes to be the number one topic, with men a poor second.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Gross Promotes Sun Glasses

As a giveaway, Mickey Gross of the Orpheum, in Denver, Colo., promoted several hundred sun-glasses for patrons to wear to "offset the brilliance of Ginger Rogers' performance in 'Tom, Dick and Harry.'" All glasses were tagged with that wording.

Front Pages Mark "Hardy" Contests

The opportunity of a theatre job, a long-distance call to Mickey Rooney in Hollywood were the prizes offered in the unique newspaper contests engineered for dates on "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," by T. J. Cary and Bud Kornblite, at the Capitol, Waverly, N. Y., and by R. L. Nellis, publicity head of Vonderschmitt Amusement Enterprises, for the engagement at the Indiana, Bloomington, Ind.

Since Mickey Rooney secures his first job in the new "Hardy," the Waverly theatremen were successful in tieing this to the hard-to-crack local daily by offering a job in the theatre to the young man writing the best letter of application for employment. In addition, other hopefuls received guest tickets. Unlooked for, but adding considerably to the publicity was the fact that the winner bore a striking resemblance to the star, the paper breaking a three-column cut day ahead of opening besides the generous daily contest coverage.

Classified ads calling attention to the offer were also run and since the promotion coincided with school opening, the theatremen were also able to take over the back page for co-op ads, the spread headed: "Life Begins for Andy Hardy and for Valley Boys and Girls Going Back to School." Credits were carried in the head and cuts of the players in each of the ads. Participating merchants gave over prominent window displays for further plugging. Noted by the Round Tablers, was the unusual total of space obtained on the contest for five days running, plus the co-op page, the first of its kind promoted by the theatre in many years.

Winner Chats with Rooney

In Bloomington, Nellis was able to break considerable space since his date broke with the opening of the local college year. Here, local girls were offered the personal call to the star at the studio for the best letter in 100 words or less advising Andy whether he should go to college, or take a job and disregard the higher education. The "kick" in the tiein was obtained by having the winning girl speak to Mickey from the theatre stage, the conversation piped through the loud speakers to the audience, and widely publicized as a part of the contest buildup.

The daily ran front-page on the promotion most every day, finishing up with shot of the lucky girl at the telephone plus a word-to-word detailing of the conversation between winner and Rooney. Extra punch was had with photos taken in Hollywood of Mrs. Robert Preston, a Bloomington girl, posing with Andy at the phone. This gave the stunt further authenticity.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Ostreicher's Full Page

"Love Is The Power That Makes Pictures Move" was the caption over a full-page display of romantic scenes from forthcoming M-G-M films landed in the Columbus Sunday Star by Fred Ostreicher, Loew's. The productions comprising the layout were "Honky Tonk," "Smilin' Through," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "The Chocolate Soldier."

Tri-Staters Stage "Fashion's Debut"

Results of a city-wide survey on what the public sought in entertainment put on locally by the Kempkes-Redmond duo at the Tri-States Bonham, in Fairbury, Neb., discloses that stage entertainment in some form was desired in addition to the screen show. With this in mind, the Tri-Staters set to work immediately aiming their efforts at a timely "Fall and Winter Fashion Debut," presented in cooperation with the largest local women's store.

Over 30 girls were secured to model and double that many style supplied by the merchant, the actual staging put on in 11 scenes such as school, skiing, football, street, office, lounging, evening, etc. From four to six girls were used in each scene with five scenes in full stage and the rest in "one."

Proceedings Covered by Press

Great care was taken to make the production as authentic as possible, an ice skating scene, for instance, given added atmosphere with the use of real snow in itself resulting in sufficient comment to pack the theatre for the following performances. Conceded as the most beautiful presentation of its kind held locally, the show was covered by the press with newspaper photographers on hand to shoot the various scenes, many of which appeared in following issues. Support from cooperating merchants was also out of the ordinary, store joining up with extra advertising, window displays, etc., in addition to all the styles exhibited.

Most gratifying to the theatremen, reports Redmond, was the small cost of production a matter of less than twenty dollars all spent on the stage settings, labor mostly contributed by the personnel and much of the material made over from old sets. Since the models were given a substantial discount at the store on purchases of fall styles, there was little difficulty in securing a sufficient number of high school and college girls to contribute their services without charge.

Army and Navy Aid O'Connell on Dates

Ray O'Connell, manager of Warners's Capitol Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., tied up with the Army recruiting office to sell "I Wanted Wings." He bannered every army truck in the city and mailed out heralds in army envelopes. Officers in charge plugged the picture over the radio. Numerous airplane parts decorated the lobby. A local Piper Cub airplane dealer flew over the nearby towns and dropped heralds and tie-ups were made with all aircraft model clubs in the territory. For "In the Navy," O'Connell had two ushers in navy regalia carrying mops and pails stopping to mop sidewalks while carrying signs calling attention to the picture's title and the comic stars. O'Connell concentrated on music tie-ups for "The Great American Broadcast," campaign highlighted by Will Bradley's orchestra, in town for a dance, plugging the screen songs at the affair.

Soriero Gags "Jeykll & Hyde" With Horror Chamber Display

For "Dr. Jeykll & Mr. Hyde" at the Los Angeles United Artists theatre, Tom Soriero gave the customers an extra kick with a chamber of horrors display in the lobby and a large bowl of greenish fluid labelled "Hyde Solution," which patrons were invited to imbibe if they desired to "tamper with the supernatural." Partaking of the drink, distilled water plus vegetable coloring, patrons were then directed by usherette to the "horrors"—the checkroom darkened and draped in blue velour—and placed in front of a distortion-mirror. Usherette would then close the back drop of the chamber and switch on a large blue light. According to Soriero, the excitement came about when the folks got a peak at the figure in the mirror, many having difficulty at first in recognizing their own images.

Posters in front of the chamber carried copy in keeping, such as: "Will you enter this chamber and turn from human to devil?" Another read that the management took no responsibility for heart attacks induced by shock and further: "The management does not guarantee you will revert back to your natural self after drinking the fluid."

The stunt proved popular, says Tom, with patrons lined up to take a look. The cost was about seven dollars, for rent of the distortion-mirror and the Round Tabler recommends the gag for horror attractions or pictures relating to the supernatural. Care must be taken, Soriero cautions, to keep the chamber entirely dark for the proper effect. He thinks that most any theatre checkroom or similar enclosed lobby space can be made to suit.

"Sport of Kings" Event Honors Warner Star

Titled "Sport of Kings Night" is the annual event staged by Manager Ivan Ackery at the FPC Orpheum, Vancouver, B. C., the theatreman this year holding the event in conjunction with his opening of "Dive Bomber." Since Alexis Smith, who appears in the picture is a local girl, Ackery was thus enabled to secure additional publicity importantly at the race track where the big event was built up with an "Orpheum Day" honoring the theatre, the feature race dedicated to Miss Smith. Winner of the race was decorated by another local girl also in pictures, and who presented to the winning jockey an autographed photo of the Warner star.

The "Sports Night" was announced over the radio over a week in advance, the newspapers cooperating with stories and photos on sports pages. Popular racing sheets also noted the event. On the big night at the theatre, program included leading orchestra with well-known racing radio commentator as master of ceremonies. Entertainment was supplied by jockey, stable boys, trainers and officials at the racing track all contributing to an unusual and highly profitable evening.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Female Parachutist Aids Salmon on "Battalion"

Securing the services of Marie McMillin, world's feminine champion parachutist, Monty Salmon for "Parachute Battalion" at the New York City Beacon, had the woman on hand in lobby in full jumping gear to explain workings of expanded chute on display. Publicity stories covering Miss McMillin's chutist career were also featured in display as were scene stills, etc.

Through tieup with high school aviation class, Salmon arranged for the aviatrix to address the students. Display of stills and other accessories were planted at the school, students attending special show in body.

Haley Features Gasless Sundays

To tie in with the government restrictions, Ivan Haley, manager of the Dundas and Mayfair Theatres, at Dartmouth, N. S., has inaugurated what he calls "Gasless Sunday nights" with outdoor entertainment.

Recently appointed chairman of the war services committee for his district, Haley holds his weekly series at a local park, doing his advertising in the two theatres with slides and trailers on the screen and framed announcements and paper signs in the lobbies and on sidewalks. Each program includes vocal and instrumental music and group singing, while talks on the need of conserving gas and oil are interspersed.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Thomas Stencils Town On "Black Cat" Date

To make his customers cat-conscious, Harold Thomas at the Malco Fulton, in Fulton, Ky., ahead of "The Black Cat," stenciled streets in front of theatre with black cat outlines, windows about town were similarly posted. Six-foot cat cutout was used in lobby week ahead with left eye cut out and green bulb working on flasher inserted. In addition, mirrors in rest rooms and lobby floor were also stenciled.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Kalberer's "Sun" Heralds

To attract local factory workers, A. J. Kalberer ahead of "Reaching for the Sun" at Switow's Indiana distributed tinted lucky number heralds, which were good for free admissions to those whose numbers corresponded with list on lobby board. In connection with "The Bride Came C. O. D.," "Kal" offered guest tickets to brides who had been married since the first of the year. Stories were run in the dailies and the theatreman reports giving but eight tickets.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Two excellent contests, both adaptable for other pictures, were those recently used by Lou Cohen, Loew-Poli, Hartford. One was a "Want a Dog Like This?" contest, offering a double of Ann Sothern's dog in "Lady, Be Good," for the best letter from youngsters under 15 on "Why I Should Like to Own 'Buttons.'" The other was titled "Substitute for Silk Stockings," and was illustrated with stills of Lana Turner, Eleanor Powell and other stars wearing net stockings, and asked readers to tell what they would substitute for silk should it become necessary.

"Relax and Attend a Movie Today," said a large banner stretched across the main street of LaCrosse, Wis., arranged for by William Freise, in that city.

A strikingly attired man entered an old-fashioned carriage and emerged from the opposite side a moment later garbed in a hideous face mask as part of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" campaign put over by Ted Emerson, Omaha, Omaha, Neb.

Female patrons received tiny mirrors during the "When Ladies Meet" campaign put over by Angie Ratto, Palace, Washington, D. C.

Local music dealers imprinted their record envelopes with the words "Lady, Be Good" during the campaign for the film executed by Jim Harris, Loew's, Cleveland.

A spencer Tracy Handicap at the Stark County Fair races was arranged by Walter Kessler as part of his "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" campaign for its Loew's, Canton, O., showing.

Contrasting the outfit worn by Ann Sothern in one of the "Maisie" pictures with one of her "Lady, Be Good" models proved a highly effective woman's page layout idea as planted in the local News by Alice Gorham of United Detroit Theatres. The "Lady, Be Good" still, of course, dominated the display.

Timely, inexpensive and highly effective is the stunt used for "Lady Be Good" by Bob Russell, Loew's Poli, New Haven. He made up a football herald plugging the film and listing four big games, offering ducats for the nearest correct score.

Cooperation of a local garden club proved a highlight of the "Blossoms in the Dust" campaign executed by Jack Matlack, Criterion, Medford, Ore. He arranged with the club to erect a flower display in the lobby, and used a sign giving the name of the picture, followed by "Blossoms in Medford."

For his street ballyhoo ahead of "In the Navy" at the Paramount, in Hot Springs, Ark., W-Clyde Smith dressed two boys in sailor uniforms and sent them out on streets with back banners, one carrying mop and the other a bucket. Boys joined in the local parade of high school kids marching to opening of the first local football game.

Institutionals

Above are reproduced four novelty blotters distributed one a week in different parts of the city by Sam Freedman of the Centre Theatre, in Ontario, Canada. Copy is confined to theatre institutional values, while the cuts tied to the copy were obtained from local printer, and the Round Tabler notes faborable reaction to the idea in different quarters.

Tying in on the fashion sequence in a recent Fox Movietone News on Simplicity Patterns, Bill Burke at the Brant, in Brant, Ontario, promoted leading store for a first-time window display, which featured model figure spotlighted with camera focused on her.

Large packing case lettered with "fragile, use hooks only," "handle with care," etc., was used ahead of "The Bride Came C.O.D." by Lee Kline at Warner's Orpheum, in Philadelphia. Carelessly tossed atop box was bridal veil and bouquet.

Made from the back of a 40 by 60 frame was the setpiece created by A. C. Adon, at the Broad Theatre, in Newark to call attention to the free school supplies he had promoted for giveaway. Drawn in chalk on a blackboard were various caricatures together with the gifts.

To usher in his New Season product at the Empress, in So. Norwalk, Conn., Al Hamilton secured a two-column break in local daily, which in addition to mentioning the forthcoming hits, included institutional plugs in the nature of stressing the erection of new marquee, entire redecoration, etc.

Running scene stills three days ahead of opening of "Down in San Diego" at the Warner Kenosha, in Kenosha, Wis., Manager Francis B. Schlax offered guest tickets to those who could correctly identify different insignias of the U. S. Marines featured in each day's picture.

The old reliable "string" gag was brought to life by Arnold Gates at Loew's Park, in Cleveland ahead of "Life Begins for Andy Hardy." Bookmark size and printed in bright green, novelty carried cut of Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland attached to which was piece of string with copy: "Tie this string around your finger so you won't forget to see," etc.

Reported as a first-time for the stilt walker stunt in his situation, George Irwin for "Parson of Panamint" at the Paramount Grand Forks, N. D., rigged boy out on stilts and had him cover downtown area ahead of that opening. For newspaper attention, George ran an ad offering guest tickets to those bringing to the theatre a copy of the Saturday Evening Post of February 20, 1915, in which the Peter B. Kyne story originally appeared.

Six-day coloring contest on "Frank Buck's Jungle Cavalcade" was planted in the local daily ahead of Harry Rose's opening on the date at the Loew Poli-Globe, in Bridgeport. Heads of different animals were run each day and cash and guest prizes were awarded to winners.

An interview with a local police psychiatrist was good for a big story in the Los Angeles Herald during the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" campaign put over by Seymour Peyser, Fox West Coast Theatres. Peyser also had photos taken with an infra-red camera of patrons in the theatre during tense moments of the pictures, and these too broke in the Herald.

Using radio spot announcements as a basis, Louis Guidetti, State, Charleroi, Pa., awarded guest tickets to the first five listeners phoning in and repeating the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" plug.

A display in the local library of books by Robert Louis Stevenson featured the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" campaign put over by E. T. Claffey, Academy, Meadville, Pa.

Stoltz Novelties Prove Attractors

As a follow-up on the recent novelty advertising series by Arnold Stoltz, some of the latest ideas used by the Utica Warnerman at the Avon and reported here are explained, most currently being a paper parachute novelty for the date on "Parachute Battalion." To paper parachutes, measuring about 20 inches, opened, Stoltz tied cardboards imprinted with picture and theatre copy and on day ahead of opening had them released from the roofs of the city's highest buildings. The cards, measuring four inches wide by 11 long, were heavy enough to force chutes to open and keep them floating until they reached the ground.

Cellophane Card Plugs "Ghost"

For "Smiling Ghost," Stoltz used a three-by-five-inch card covered with red cellophane to conceal part of the message. Top line read: "Have you ever seen a Smiling Ghost? Lift the spirit veil and see." When the cellophane was lifted further copy and ghost caricatures, previously invisible by reason of the covering, were revealed. On "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," the Warnerman promoted lipstick tissues distributed in imprinted envelopes carrying theatre copy and lipstick imprint. As is the case in most of the Stoltz novelties, cost was taken care of by cooperating merchant. This was also true on the novelty advertising for "Ringside Maisie," taking the form of a fight ticket reproduction which on quick reading appeared to be a pass for a numbered seat. Entire sentence read: "Don't let the week 'pass' without seeing this great 'A-1' show." Perforated stub at end of card emphasized "Ringside A-1" in large lettering, the entire sentence on closer study reading: "Ringside Maisie is an A-1 hit show."

Novelty for "Lady Be Good" was card, measuring seven by 10, stressing a cartoon woman's head with outline of lips die cut; on the other side was stapled sample lipstick pad with red lip imprint of the sample fitted into the die-cut space. Tiein copy read: "Ladies, you'll not only be good but you'll look your best if you select your favorite shade of lipstick from the attached container," etc. Bottom half of the card was devoted to picture copy.

Fish Novelty Sells "Barnacle"

The date on "Barnacle Bill" was distinguished with a fishing novelty with small cutout cardboard fish figures attached to a character shot of Wallace Beery with fishing line. The tiein copy here read: "Here's the best catch of the movie season" and co-op copy from local sports goods store took care of costs.

In the field of novelty exploitation, the Round Tabler attracted a bit of street traffic with a simulated "shock-proof shelter" on "Bad Men of Missouri." About three-sheet size, the shelter was moved around by boy to different parts of the town with pointing hand at top next to copy reading: "This way to the shock-proof shelter," etc. On "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Night" Stoltz distributed two-fold heralds, front of which carried cut of Laraine Day in bridal attire. Copy invited holders to "catch the aroma of the bridal bouquet." Inside spread featured one inch square of blotter saturated with promoted perfume.

PROMOTIONS ON RADIO TOP JUVENILE ACTIVITIES

Kid Quizzes Featured in Station Tieups; Back-to-School Matinee Sponsored by Stores

Adapting the radio quiz program idea to intrigue the youngsters at his Saturday matinees, Ed Kidwell at Schine's Kent, in Kent, Ohio, relates the procedure of the juvenile feature put on before the start of the regular show. Kidwell, who usually acts as master of ceremonies, takes over the stage with the assistant manager and an usher to work the auditorium. The latter two are supplied with slips of paper on which numbers corresponding to a master slip held by Kidwell are entered; they are also supplied with a quantity of dimes and quarters to be used as prize money.

Following the introduction and explanation of the activity, the two men on the floor start selecting the participants. As selected, the youngster is permitted to draw one of the slips of paper, the number is announced to the stage along with the name of the boy or girl. Kidwell then repeats the number and name and asks the question appearing opposite the number drawn by the particular youngster. A definite time limit, usually 30 seconds, is allowed for the correct answer. If it is answered correctly, the youngster is awarded thirty-five cents. For an incorrect answer, a consolation prize of ten cents is paid.

Simplicity in Quiz Aimed For Completing the routine questions, a drawing is then held from ticket stubs for some child to take the master question. For the answer to this, a minimum of fifty cents is given to which is added the amounts not paid out on other questions. The total, the Schiner says, usually runs anywhere from a dollar and a quarter to two and a quarter. Every attempt is made to have this main question so simple that it will be easily answered since the Round Tabler does not like to carry over any amounts on kid activities.

With the basic idea outlined above, Ed is able to use a vast number of variations on questions, spelling of words, completing nursery rhymes, twisted sentences, etc. Kidwell finds it advisable not to have the youngsters come up on the stage, since he has discovered that by so doing the rest seem to feel out of things, thus he follows the procedure as outlined above.

Tompkins Promotes Radio Time

Another quiz program built around a "Back to School" jamboree at the Elco, in Elkhart, Ind., is reported by Chick Tompkins, who interested the largest department store to sponsor the event undertaking all costs in addition to extra newspaper advertising and radio time. Tompkins' idea was to shoot for the high school and college students, while retaining the regular attendance of the youngsters. To do both, he advertised free gifts for the latter and aimed at the former with a lot of mystery advertising which stressed "something new, something different, something exciting on the stage."

The stage stunt was a quiz along the lines of the usual radio programs. After the preliminiaries, the finalists were brought to the stage where the winner and runner up received twenty-five and fifteen dollar merchandise prizes. Store also bought one hundred dollars worth of tickets which they used as giveaways with purchases three days before the special matinee.

Chick acted as master of ceremonies to hold everything in line and the success of the venture is noted in plans to put on similar quizzes as a regular weekly feature. Smart selling trailer was the opening gun of the Mantaman's campaign, followed with spectacular setpieces, prominent notice in sponsor's advertising and heralds.

Helson Builds Show Well In Advance

For the attention of local youngsters, R. S. Helson at the Voge, in East Chicago, Ind., recently held a "Back-To-School" matinee party which was widely advertised in advance through theatre programs, heralds, newspapers, etc. The heralds which were distributed, cost of which was defrayed by cooperating merchant, carried plug for the "Death Valley" serial and announcement of prizes for each kid attending, which were on display in lobby of theatre.

Beginning with the first Saturday after school opening, Clay Cornell at Schine's State, in Tupper Lake, N. Y., arranged for the six weeks' giveaway of school supplies to be awarded to the first 50 kids in line at each matinee.

Following this activity, the theatreman has arranged for a Defense Stamp Savings Club with drawing each week for stamps. In this connection Clay has received the cooperation of the Superintendent of Schools who has supplied him with names of each child up to 12 years of age. This list, reports Cornell, gives him a file of hundreds of youngsters whom he can contact on birthdays, etc.

Ties Kid Show to Radio

In Toledo, Ohio, Jack Lykes has recently initiated a regular Saturday morning nine-o'clock kid show at Loew's Valentine, tied in with Station WTOL to featured kiddie radio serial. Each week appearances will be made by different members of the radio program. Sponsor is being lined up to pay half the regular 10-cent admission in return for box tops of his product. Lykes is also arranging for other merchants to distribute free kid tickets on purchases above a certain amount. In addition to the feature picture, shows are set to include shorts such as Our Gang comedies, cartoons and Pete Smith specialties. Jack is building further interest by distribution of promoted gifts to all attending.

Dog show and mutt parade, co-sponsored by the Fox West Coast theatreman and local dog food manufacturer in Fresno, Cal., was put on by Manager John Fredericks in recognition of National Dog Week. Following the parade, dogs and their kid owners lined up on the stage for judging for prizes given by the participating merchant. Papers covered event with art and stories.

Albany Variety Tent Reorganized

The franchise of Tent Nine, Variety Club was returned to Albany, N. Y., Monday, October 12th, at a reorganization luncheon attended by more than 100 at the Ten Eyck Hotel there. The previous Variety Club had operated in Albany for a short time but was dissolved in 1935.

Speakers at Monday's reorganization were James G. Balmer, national treasurer of Variety Clubs of America, Si Fabian of the Fabian circuit, New York, and J. Meyer Schine of the Schine Circuit, Gloversville. Moe A. Silver, zone manager of Warner Brothers Circuit, Albany, presided as chairman of the temporary organization committee.

Mr. Balmer, one of the original 11 charter members of the club which originated in Pittsburgh with the adoption of a foundling baby girl, gave a summation of Variety Club's growth and activities. The Variety Clubs existed, he said, "for the good they have done for others," asserting that this and the friendship among members were its "sole, but vastly rich resources."

Silver Nominated

Mr. Schine, in pledging his personal cooperation to that of the Schine organization, started a boom for Moe Silver as the first chief barker of the tent, praising his whole-hearted efforts in the reorganization. Impetus for reorganization came, he said, from a suggestion made by Herman Ripps, temporary secretary and branch manager of MGM, on a call on the Schine organization at Gloversville.

Si Fabian, who was chairman for the USO drive in Albany territorial motion picture circles, paid tribute to the exhibitors and distributor personnel in that area, saying that the figure of $24,000 was more than $4,000 above its quota.

One of the unique features of the luncheon was the decision of the New York unit of National Allied to cancel their own banquet to attend the Variety Club meeting en masse. The Allied unit, which was meeting in the same hotel, began its deliberations after the affair.

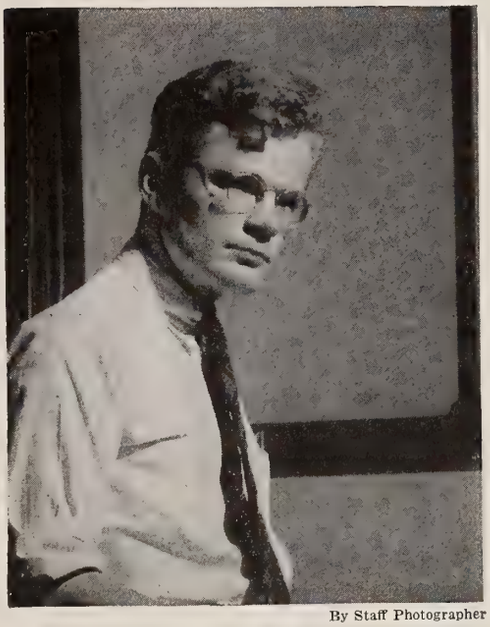
The Albany tent will have its headquarters in a Hotel Ten Eyck suite, with formal possession of the quarters to be taken November 12th with appropriate ceremonies. Meanwhile, a special meeting will be called for the election of officers, whose installation will take place at a banquet on November 20th.

Other Variety Activities

Frank L. McNamee, former RKO branch manager, was appointed general chairman of the annual Philadelphia Variety Club banquet to be held December 11th at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. He will appoint his own committees.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Philadelphia Variety Club installed officers for the coming year at a lunchroom last Wednesday, October 8th. The retiring president is Mrs. Charles Zagrans while the incoming president is Mrs. Elmer Wilschke. Guest speakers were James P. Clark, chairman of the Democratic City Committee, and Mrs. John Frederick Lewis, Jr., president of the Women's Home Defense Council. The auxiliary announced its purchase of a $1,000 "bus ambulance" to be used to carry crippled children to and from schools.

The Philadelphia Showmen's Club launched a campaign for $5,000 for its Welfare Fund Committee, created to provide financial and other assistance to members of the industry in dire need.



The Boston Variety Club, Tent No. 23, will sponsor a theatre party on Friday evening, October 24th, at the Shubert theatre in that city. The occasion will be the second night of Olson and Johnson's new show, "Sons of Fun." Among those invited to attend the affair will be Mayor Tobin of Boston, M. J. Mullin and other prominent personalities in theatrical and professional circles in Boston. Phil Smith is barker of the Boston tent.

Saturday, October 11th, was "Variety Club of Texas Day" at the Texas State Fair. The honored guest for the event was the Mayor of Winnipeg, Canada, who at the invitation of Phil Isley, prominent Texas showman, included Dallas in his itinerary as good will ambassador for the Dominion of Canada.

Following the celebration at the State Fair the Variety Club held "Open House" at their local headquarters.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected by the Northwest Film Club in Seattle at its annual dinner and meeting this week as follows: president, Eddie Walton; vice-presidents, A. J. Sullivan and Junior Mercy; trustees, Keith Beckwith, Jack T. Sheffield and Foster Blake; secretary-treasurer, Eddie Lamb, re-elected by acclamation.

HERALD PEOPLE

By Staff Photographer

JOHN McH. STUART, JR., is a reporter and a son of a reporter. He came to Motion Picture Herald along with the New Year of 1941, but not making so much noise. He was acquired from the Philadelphia Evening Ledger staff, where he had been employed by the Stanley Walker administration. There he covered so many Rotary luncheons that he has since foresworn forever creamed chicken croquettes and green peas. He had a spell of editing, too, on the night news desk, an assignment which turns the working day upside down and inverts the disposition. In Mr. Stuart's educational background are Port Washington high school, Santa Clara University, the University of California in Los Angeles, and Georgetown University in Washington where he was graduated. In college days he was a track athlete, devoted to running—presumably from school to school. He is absorbed in tennis, sail and cinema, but he goes out of town somewhere for weekends.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Hot Spot

(Twentieth Century-Fox, 1941-42)

Melodrama With a Vengeance

There are a few melodramas a season that demand to be seen. Here is one of them. For this film version of Steve Fisher's novel "I Wake Up Screaming" is a brilliantly handled and sharply played piece of mystery drama, which, for sustained suspense and dramatic intensity assures H. Bruce Humberstone, the director, a place with the elite in this field.

He has taken a group of players, with one notable exception, most frequently seen in musicals and romantic interludes and has required of them that they go dramatic in a big way—but plausibly. Let it be recorded that they do. Exhibitors will recall the names—Betty Grable, Victor Mature and Carole Landis. The one notable exception—remember "Hudson's Bay," "Blood and Sand" and "Charley's Aunt" to mention a few—is Laird Cregar. His dramatic ability had already been established. As "Big Ed Cornell," a detective with an unmatched record of convictions, he tops everything he heretofore has portrayed.

A detective who "believes in justice" at all costs, "Big Ed" deliberately allows the murderer of a glamorized waitress his freedom, while "Big Ed" tries to obtain sufficient evidence to pin the murder rap on the sports promoter responsible for the glamorizing. Cregar stalks his victim as any bird of prey—sinister and uncompromising. Mature is the sports promoter and the "Hot Spot" is the electric chair where he nearly sits. Carole Landis is the waitress who becomes the glamor girl through the manipulations of the promoter "because that is his business," and Betty Grable is the sister who loves and is loved by the promoter.

Employing the flashback method for a good deal of the picture, thus keeping Miss Landis in the picture past the murder stage, the elements of romance, mystery, suspense and an ending, as unpredictable as the number of people in the audience, have been woven into a dramatic pattern of fascinating melodrama.

Produced by Milton Sperling, "Hot Spot" is one of the best pictures of its kind of this or any other year.

Previewed in the Twentieth Century-Fox projection room in New York to the usual trade press coterie who were individually and collectively impressed to the extent of arguing over the eventual outcome. No one could boast of more than a 50 per cent score.—PAUL C. MOONEY, JR.

International Lady

(United Artists, 1941-42)

Spy Saga

Edward Small presents in "International Lady" a spy story of no small proportions, laid against a background of London, Lisbon, New York and Long Island, that is as contemporary as this very minute.

Although the picture opens with an air raid in London, and is concerned with the exertions of the F. B. I. and Scotland Yard to circumvent the attempts of saboteurs to impede the flow of American planes and flying fortresses to England, emphasis is placed on the development and denouement of the plot, rather than on international enmities.

George Brent is an American G-Man, posing as a lawyer connected with the United States Embassy and Basil Rathbone is a Scotland Yard detective, posing as a musical critic. Both are interested in Ilona Massey, a famous singer, whom they suspect of espionage. They all meet in London, then Lisbon, and eventually come to New York, where Miss Massey sings on the air under the auspices of Gene Lockhart, a wealthy candy manufacturer, who is in reality the head of a gang of saboteurs. Her songs are in code and give instructions to their operators about plane shipments to England. How the plotters are finally caught by both Brent and Rathbone is melodrama at its best.

Miss Massey loses her heart to George Brent, who follows suit and almost loses her life to save him. Although he must arrest her, they both aspire to a happier life when peace has again descended.

The cast is splendid, George Brent making a handsome and ingratiating G-Man, Ilona Massey, a lovely singer and saboteur, and Basil Rathbone, an impeccable representative of Scotland Yard, providing a dash of humor in his endeavour to understand American slang.

The original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and Jack DeWitt and screenplay by Howard Estabrook is contemporary, clever and filled with action and suspense and Tim Whelan, the director, has extracted the maximum of melodrama in its unfolding.

Previewed at the company projection room before a small audience, mostly professional and club women, who appeared interested.—IRENE SMOLEN.

The Chocolate Soldier

(MGM, 1941-42)

Musical Plus Drama

A good deal more story material was put into this picture than goes into most musicals. In fact MGM took much of the plot of Ferenc Molnar's "The Guardsman" in which Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne made their screen debut in 1931 and added it to the music of "The Chocolate Soldier."

Rise Stevens, opera star who makes her first screen appearance in this film, sings beautifully and also is attractive. Nelson Eddy has numerous occasions to entertain with his grand voice. And when "The Chocolate Soldier" follows the music of Oscar Straus with the English lyrics of Stanislaus Stange and the original lyrics of Rudolph Bernauer and Leopold Jacobson, it is excellent; when the principals have dramatic rather than singing tasks, the result is not as pleasing.

The plot follows that of "The Guardsman" with the chief characters musical comedy stars rather than stage actors. "Karl Lang," played by Nelson Eddy, is jealous of his wife and wishes to test her fidelity. He disguises himself as a Russian singer and makes love to her. The wife discovers his identity but pretends, until the end of the picture, that she does not in order to tantalize her husband. There are several stage numbers and Mr. Eddy and Miss Stevens sing separately and together many times.

Nigel Bruce gives a good performance as the music critic friend. The supporting cast also includes Florence Bates, Dorothy Gilmore and Nydia Westman.

Victor Saville, producer, gave the film all production values required and expected in this type of picture. Roy Del Ruth's direction is commendable considering the difficulties of blending singing and dramatics. Ernest Matray receives credit for the dance sequences which are effective.

(Twentieth Century-Fox, 1941-42)

No Time for Drama

The story of the psychiatrist who doctors unhappy marriages while unconscious of his own domestic deficiencies has been done before, but not often so gaily. And so long as the gaiety submerges the story, "Moon Over Her Shoulder" is entertaining and contagious.

In large measure this is the work of Lynn Bari whose portrayal of the wife in need of a little affectionate understanding is generally sympathetic and charming. John Sutton as the husband is obliged unfortunately to carry a good part of the drama, including a fist-fight which is somehow meant to resolve all misunderstandings. That his opponent should be a young man whose only error was to leave his boat for a woman adds to the confusion.

Producer Walter Morosco and Director Alfred Werker have done well with the plot material provided.

Swamp Water

(Twentieth Century-Fox, 1941-42)

Tale of the Swamp Country

In its transposition from the pages of the Saturday Evening Post to the motion picture screen, "Swamp Water" has lost none of the dramatic impact, colorful background and absorbing story that originally made this Vereen Bell tale a featured piece in the national magazine. Adapted to the screen by Dudley Nichols, it has entertainment values which showmen may sell to their audiences with confidence.

It is a story of the moribund Georgia swamp country and the people who inhabit it, of a young man, his ventures into the forbidding swamps in search of his dog and his discovery of a fugitive who escaped jail six years previously after being convicted of a murder of which he was innocent. It is upon this plot that the story unfolds, intermingling a sub-plot of romance as the joining link between the many elements.

Noticeable throughout is the direction of Jean Renoir, French director who arrived in this country following the occupation of France by the Nazis. Mr. Renoir has brought with him his directorial bag of Gallic film tricks which distinguished such pictures as "La Bete Humaine" and "Grand Illusion" when he directed them a few seasons ago.

Walter Brennan, as the swamp hermit and fugitive, provides a performance comparable to the many which have won him Academy Awards, while Dana Andrews, a comparative newcomer to the screen, renders a characterization which warrants billing him as a new star. Walter Huston, after a protracted exile from the screen, returns and again performs masterfully. Others in the cast, which includes Virginia Gilmore, Anne Baxter, as the daughter of the fugitive, John Carradine, Mary Howard, Eugene Pallette, Ward Bond and Guinn Williams, distinguish themselves in roles that require the utmost in histrionic talent.

WARNERS DISTRIBUTING "TARGET FOR TONIGHT"

Warner Brothers are distributing in this country "Target for Tonight," British government documentary feature made by the Crown Fim Unit. The film was tradeshown in New York on Tuesday, October 14th. No national release date has been set yet. The running time is 48 minutes.

"Target for Tonight" was reviewed in the August 16th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The review said in part, "This latest Ministry of Information production, telling the whole intimate absorbing story of Britain's Bomber Command, is probaby the best piece of reporting the war has produced in any medium and because it is so compete, so enlightening, and so irresistibly dramatic, it should sweep its way through the boxoffices of both Britain and the U. S."

At the close of the London screening the film was given "an ovation . . . probably warmer than that accorded any previous film of its kind," it was reported.

Also worthy of mention is the sepia-tinted photography by Lucian Ballard who has captured the beauty and enchantment of Okefenokee Swamp in Georgia. His camera does much to enhance the story. Production by Irving Pichel is of the best.

Unholy Partners

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1941-42)

Birth of the Tabloid

Two infallible sources of entertainment material are united in "Unholy Partners," a newspaper and crime. The picture describes the conception and subsequent growth of the tabloid.

Edward G. Robinson, in his desire to launch a new tabloid, is forced through circumstances to enter an unholy alliance with Edward Arnold, a notorious racketeer, who is to be a silent partner. Robinson runs the paper as he envisioned it, but when he begins to report on matters that jeopardize Arnold's illicit interests, complications develop. In a dispute over control of the paper, Robinson is forced to kill Arnold and later is killed himself in a trans-Atlantic flight sponsored by his paper.

Robinson and Arnold make an interesting team, and their continual conflict, with each one striving for the point of vantage, as in a duel, produces some tense moments. Laraine Day as Robinson's secretary and inamorata, fresh from plaudits in the "Dr. Kildare" series and MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S "Stars of Tomorrow" poll, does not have very much to do, but looks very pretty, especially with tears in her eyes. William T. Orr is featured rather importantly as one of Robinson's reporters. Marsha Hunt, in love with Mr. Orr, sings "After You've Gone," and rather nicely, too.

As a story, it is not always convincing and has a tendency to cover too much ground, but as directed by Mervyn LeRoy and produced by Samuel Marx, it is melodrama, it has action and it does have its moments, some pretty exciting ones.

Sundown

(UA-Wanger)

Adventure in Africa

Africa and the war supply background here for a story of adventure which emphasizes in its beginning the mysticism of the Dark Continent and, at its close, the spoken theme that "The Church and the Army are the bases of civilization; the Church holds it together and the Army defends it."

Contents of the picture range from gunfights, murders and plottings of rebellion among the natives to discourses on the strategy of conquest and to a finale in which an English Bishop foretells a British victory. The film is derived from Barre Lyndon's Saturday Evening Post serial which attracted wide attention, a fact to capitalize in billing the attraction.

Bruce Cabot, George Sanders, Reginald Gardiner and Harry Carey dominate most of the picture, with Gene Tierney portraying the single principal role on the feminine side, and Sir Cedric Hardwicke comes into the picture near the end to execute with brilliance the final sequence in which the keynote of the enterprise is sounded.

Producer Walter Wanger's capacity for extracting a maximum of value from outdoor settings, memorably manifested in "Stage Coach," is a power for realism in the narration of a tale that sometimes strains plausibility.

Director Henry Hathaway gets the picture off to a start that fascinates both eye and interest, but encounters script trouble later on which befogs the proceedings somewhat.

Action, adventure and conflict are accented through a film in which romance is treated as incidental.

Small Town Deb

(Twentieth Century-Fox, 1941-42)

Comedy

Jane Withers is growing up, and "Small Town Deb," produced by Twentieth Century-Fox, is a good vehicle for her adolescent growing pains. It has all the ingredients which make for good entertainment, the family-plot formula, fast-paced direction, comedy and a dash of romance.

Jane plays the part of the misunderstood family "brat" who suffers all the pangs of an "in-between," fifteen, not old enough to get some real attention and too old to be called cute. A series of troublesome circumstances, principally her father's financial problems and her sister's romantic pursuits are the stumbling blocks in her otherwise sheltered existence. Jane's own keen desire to get to the country club's annual dance in a new evening gown, not her elder sister's hand-me-down, and not escorted by her unsympathetic jive-jitterbug brother, adds to her troubles. But. of course, she finally triumph's over all odds, settles her father's difficulties through adroit handling of the influential big-wig, and helps her sister altar-ward. She also has opportunity to do an imitation of Carmen Miranda, and to show how ably she can beat the boogie on a set of drums.

Jane as Little Miss-Fix-It, uses all the tricks in her bag of histrionics. The cast, under the direction of Harold Schuster, adds to the general entertainment score. Jane Darwell, Cobina Wright, Jr., of cafe-society fame, Cecil Kellaway, Jackie Searl and Katharine Alexander do ably in supporting Miss Withers. "Small Town Deb" is a good family film for the family.—J. E. SAMUELSON.

Jesse James at Bay

(Republic, 1941-42)

Western

The saga of Jesse James is expanded to include another fight against the railroads, another set of ruthless swindlers, and another triumph for the western Robin Hood.

The plot gives Roy Rogers an opportunity to play two roles—the famous Jesse and a gambling double hired to blacken the legend of his good intent. The scheme is quite successful with all but his old friend, Sheriff "Gabby" Whittaker, and young Polly Morgan who can distinguish the two men intuitively. To bring justice to the farmers who are being cheated of their land by the railroads, Jesse himself takes advantage of the resemblance.

Joseph Kane produced and directed the film, an average western which gained little from the use of the name of Jesse James.

Stolen Paradise (Adolescence)

(Monogram, 1941-42)

This is a slight story carelessly produced with indifferent acting.

Robert Gordon, a youth of 18 reared in a Catholic mission, is called home when his father remarries. He falls in love with his stepsister, 10 years his senior and, after a series of entanglements with the girl, realizing no good can come from continuing the relationship, he runs away and joins the RAF. Wounded he goes back to the mission and decides to join the church.

The picture was produced by George A. Hirliman and directed by Louis Gasnier.

The Monogram Chicago exchange has taken the picture out of general release in that territory and is selling it as a roadshow sex picture.

Gunman from Bodie

(Monogram, 1941-42)

Western Melodrama

This second in the Rough Riders series of Westerns produced by Scott Dunlap was pronounced by preview witnesses who had seen both as the better of the two on points and in whole.

More riding than common appears in this exercise, against striking scenic background, and perhaps a bit less than the average amount of shooting, although a number of killings occur. There is a baby in the story, with close-ups of same for the emotional lift these always impart, and one David O'Brien sings a song more capably than is par for Western vocalists.

The names of Buck Jones, Tim McCoy and Raymond Hatton are again, of course, the billing material to be depended upon for draw.

Direction by Spencer Bennett is effective after the first fifteen or twenty minutes of running time, during which the planting of story points slows the picture down materially.

The film is synopsized on page 263 of your Product Digest.

Down Mexico Way

(Republic, 1940-41)

Special Musical Western

Exhibitors may expect that this motion picture will please every Gene Autry fan and also make new converts for the musical western, for it is an outstanding example of that type of film with all the production values anyone could desire. It is clear that much more time, money and effort were spent on this picture than on regular westerns.

The story opens at a party given by Gene Autry celebrating arrangements to make a motion picture in Sage City. But Autry and the other citizens soon discover that the supposed producers had swindled them. Autry, with his companions, Smiley Burnette and Harold Huber, start after the fake producers who have gone to a town in Mexico where their bosses are planning a greater swindle along the same lines. With the help of "Maria Elena," the daughter of the town's richest man and the star of the planned picture, Autry and his companions expose the plot and save a $500,000 shipment of gold which the fake producers attempt to capture. At the end there is a particularly good chase and gun battle.

A number of songs were worked into the picture by Joseph Santley, director, without disrupting the plot: "I'll Be True While You're Gone," "Down Mexico Way," "Maria Elena," "Cowboy and the Lady," "Beer Barrel Polka,' "Las Altanitas," "La Cachita," "Guadalajara." The fiesta numbers are very well staged and show effort expended by Harry Grey, associate producer.

All-American Co-ed

(UA-Roach, 1941-42)

Collegiate Comedy

Hal Roach's third streamlined feature surpasses his second in screen worthiness and crowds his first, "Tanks a Million," in point of fitness for today's requirements. It supplies more marquee material than either of the others, offering Frances Langford, Harry Langdon, Johnny Downs, Marjorie Woodworth and Noah Beery, Jr., for ad copy as well as entertainment.

The story utilizes without embarrassment the essentials of the "Charley's Aunt" pattern, modernizing the general idea profitably by placing the masquerading college boy in a girls' school as an enrollee pledged to avenge a publicity stunt committed by that institution at expense of his fraternity. The modernization is in the nature of an improvement and, although comparisons are for audiences to make, it was remarked by many present at the preview that the dependable old formula profited by the swift and agile handling of the Roach experts.

Four songs worked into the proceedings snap it up whenever a lull threatens.

Production and direction by LeRoy Prinz make every inch of film and dialogue click.

Walter G. Samuels and Charles Newman, who may never have seen or read "Charley's Aunt," supplied a writing or rewriting job up to scratch in every particular.

New F-Lamp Starter

A NEW STARTER device for fluorescent lamps, including a "stopper" element, is announced by General Electric. The purpose of the stopper is to shut off the starter when the lamp has reached the end of its normal life. It is included in the same standard type container of conventional starters, and the new device is interchangeable with present units. An effect of the development is to permit more efficient and economical group replacement of fluorescent lamps without incurring the flickering of inoperative lamps, as well as to protect starters from unnecessary wear. The device is available in limited quantities for 40-watt lamps.

Process for Coating Lenses

THE FIELD force of RCA Photophone's service department will handle arrangements for the coating of projection lenses, it is announced by Edward C. Cahill, Photophone Division manager. RCA recently established facilities for the coating of lenses of motion picture cameras and projectors, employing the company's own processing that has been under development for the past year, during which coated projection lenses have come into steadily greater use as a means of increasing light transmission to the screen. The RCA plan calls for shipping existing lenses to the company's Indianapolis plant, where facilities for coating have been installed in an air-conditioned laboratory.

Seating Firm Reorganized

FORMATION OF the Fensin Seating Company, with quarters on Chicago's Film Row has been announced by E. P., Morris and M. L. Fensin, who formerly operated the General Seating Company, also in Chicago. The announcement states that for the present, operations will be confined to the making of repairs to and supplying of parts for theatre seating, but that it is planned to manufacture auditorium chairs when dies and materials can be obtained.

Parts Company Expands

INCREASED FACTORY space has been taken by the Lavezzi Machine Works, Chicago, to meet demands for the projector and soundhead parts which they manufacture. Increased business is partly due to Government orders.

Metal for Frames Available

METAL FOR mouldings and poster frames is declared to be still available in ample quantities in a statement issued by the Ames Metal Moulding Company of New York. The statement was issued as a result of reports that exhibitors believe a shortage to exist.

Settlement in Letter Suit

LITIGATION OVER attraction advertising equipment patents between the Adler Silhouette Letter Company and subsidiaries, and Wagner Sign Service, Inc., both of Chicago, has been closed with a cash settlement which includes provisions allowing the continued use of Adler slotted letters and related supporting frames installed before they were adjudged in infringement of Wagner equipment of the same type. The agreement states that there will be no further action by Wagner against Adler, its subsidiaries, agents, jobbers, installers or users involving the Adler equipment specified in the injunction granted Wagner by the U. S. Court of Appeals last spring. The injunction referred only to slotted letters and associated frame construction, not the Adler lug type letter.

The settlement makes no provision for replacement of existing slotted letters. Manufacture of this type, however, was discontinued by Adler about a year ago, and the settlement provides that Wagner will institute no litigation against the type of changeable letter and frame manufactured since then by the Adler companies.

Carpet-Matching Mats

THE TYPE OF rubber mat referred to by John J. Sefing in his department in the September issue of BETTER THEATRES, as capable of being matched in pattern with figured carpet, is a development of the U. S. Rubber Company, with distribution by Lawrich Sales of New York. The matting is available in two kinds of surface—one relatively smooth ("suede"), the other broken up into tiny pyramids of corrugating effect.

Four thicknesses are manufactured—$\frac{3}{16}$-, $\frac{1}{4}$-, $\frac{5}{16}$-, and $\frac{3}{8}$-inch, while mats in widths up to 10 feet can be specified, with lengths according to space to be fitted.

While practically any design can be matched in pattern, matching that of a carpet is suggested, in pointing out this

*It's a good thing that seat's upholstered with CAVALON

A FELLA isn't accountable for his actions during tense moments in the movies... even to the tearing apart of the upholstery with his fingernails! That's one reason why it pays to make sure your seats are covered with CAVALON.

CAVALON is the result of years of Du Pont research. It resists general abrasive wear, edge wear, cracking and peeling. It has sufficient strength to prevent tearing and puncturing. The surface coating of CAVALON is treated with a patented "case-hardening" process that makes this rugged material unusually resistant to flexing and wear, yet does not harm its leather-like characteristics and pliability.

CAVALON is available in many good-looking colors that are highly resistant to crocking, bleeding and fading. The American Seating Company uses CAVALON on their American Bodiform Chairs. Whether you are buying new equipment or reupholstering old seats, make sure you specify CAVALON. For samples and complete information, write E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), "Fabrikoid" Division, Fairfield, Conn. Or get in touch with your nearest authorized CAVALON dealer, listed below.

characteristic, because of the possibility of making the floor of lobby and foyer areas continuous in appearance, with the lobby floor enjoying the safety and carpet-protecting virtues of rubber matting. It also is feasible to use such matting in traffic lanes, between sections of carpeting, with which it would be matched in pattern. Colors may vary somewhat from those of the carpet design, but patterns are essentially identical.

Luminous Paint for Blackouts

HOW LUMINOUS paint applied to objects, and even to the person, can provide some measure of safety during wartime blackouts, was demonstrated in exhibits by the Stroblite Company of New York, manufacturers of paints which have been widely used for stage effects, and in recent years for the creation of fluorescent decoration in theatre auditoriums, at the recent Civilian Defense Exposition in New York. Among the paints demonstrated is a new group developed by Alexander Stroble for use outdoors, where they can be made to glow under ultraviolet radiation.

Plastic for Marquee Letters

ENCOUNTERING an interpretation of the decision of Wagner Sign Service, Inc., Chicago, to manufacture attraction advertising letters in plastic materials as due to a shortage in aluminum, Ernest Wagner states that this decision is the result of study of plastics for such purposes, and that his company is not faced with a shortage in metal suited to the manufacture of changeable letters. The company is declared to have invested in dies for various sizes of plastic letters, and has already begun production of the 10-inch.

West Coast Office Opened

ISSUE OF OCTOBER 18, 1941. VOLUME 145, NUMBER 3

The Government's Latest Order on Construction

IN ISSUING an order October 9th generally published in the daily press as a comprehensive and conclusive prohibition of all construction not directly concerned with national defense, the Government may have caused more confusion than actual change in the building industry. The Government has first call on any materials it needs for the defense program; as its needs for certain materials became greater than those of civil construction, those materials are removed from the market, and private building is accordingly curtailed or stopped. And that is the situation in which civil construction has found itself for quite some time.

The actual effect of the new decree on building in the theatre field is further obscured, at this time, first by the fact that much of such work among theatres consists in remodeling not necessarily entailing the use of materials needed for defense work, and second by the significance of a well maintained, and even extended motion picture exhibition plant to the morale of the nation.

Undoubtedly the motion picture industry will be among the interests that will immediately appeal for some degree of exception from the new ruling. The meaning of the order to theatre work is yet to be definitely determined.

Pictures on the Wall

"Dynamic Screen—A Speculation" is the title that stopped us while scanning a sheaf of abstracts from papers to be read before the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which, opening on the 20th of this month for a four-day session at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, comes about a week after all that is said here has been submitted to the irrevocable ministrations of the printer.

The paper is by Robert W. Russell, who is identified as of the Training Film Production Laboratory, Monmouth, N. J. Mr. Russell explores the possibility of removing the area of the picture from its fixed frame. Until he has had time to present his whole plan, we can only quote the abstract as to what he has in mind: "Great new frontiers of cinematic effect are opened up by making the screen area the entire proscenium wall, by employing a projector lens that will throw the 35-mm. frame to cover this whole wall as a potential, using peculiarly appropriate or eccentric delimitations in an overall montage of boundaries." What that means we expect to be able to tell in the November issue.

Mr. Russell's quarrel with the fixed frame of the motion picture image is of course not new. The controversy over black and light-colored masking is, in simpler terms, an expression of the same criticism. There have been a number of experiments through the years with lighted areas around the screen, the most logical of which was Ben Schlanger's arrangement for fading out the image into a reflective area, with the illumination of this surrounding area varying in intensity and tone according to the intensity and tone of the picture. Elimination of the proscenium arch is probably a first essential of any "screen delimiting" method, at least of any really effective method. The whole idea is quite revolutionary. But so was sound.

Promotion for Revenue

Many readers will recall our article in the issue of October 1940, about the interesting rural circuit developed by the St. Cloud Amusement Corporation in New Jersey. Therein we told of the unique weekly newspaper distributed free throughout the drawing areas of these twelve theatres, carrying merchants' advertising as well as advertising and editorial matter on current and coming attractions. This newspaper aroused a great deal of interest among readers; Mr. Alvin Sloan, general manager of the circuit, received letters about it from many sections of the country. Well, it has been made more of a newspaper than ever, and still more of a source of revenue.

Two pages are here reproduced from the "Theatrical and Shopping Guide," originally not much more than a house organ of the St. Cloud Amusement Company's twelve theatres in rural northwestern New Jersey. At left is shown a front page typical of the new style, above a back page where the attraction advertising is now concentrated. The changes and the reasons therefore are discussed in adjoining columns.

We get copies of the publication, called Theatrical and Shopping Guide, more or less regularly, and noticing a decided change in contents, makeup and size (it was originally a tabloid, now is full size), we asked Mr. Sloan the reasons therefor. Here is his explanation:

"The reason for the change in the appearance is that it was not possible to get some of our large advertisers to give us copy for tabloid pages, which forced us to run some of their ads sideways.

"Because of the relation of the postage cost to the weight of our papers (a free-circulation paper cannot obtain a second-class permit, therefore mailing costs are relatively high), we cannot afford to keep the front page of the large-size paper clear of paid advertising as we formerly did. We usually keep the top half of the front page for reading matter, however, and when folded with the top half showing, the paper gives an immediate appearance of having a front page free of advertising.

"The additional reading matter, other than the theatrical material, has been introduced to give the paper more general reader interest in order to help the other advertisers (otherwise they would say that only the movie fans read the paper).

"The various county editions of this paper have become rather successful as a business on their own, and for this reason they have been modified to cater to readers and advertisers in general and no longer have the appearance of being strictly house organs of our theatres. They still do our theatre job well, however."

The back page of the paper now normally carries ads of all the theatres in the group. One of these back pages, and a typical front page as now composed in the larger size, are reproduced elsewhere in these columns.

Car-Checking Scheme

Photographs of the 20th Century available for the pictorial display and description of the design of this new Cincinnati theatre in the "Showplace" insert, do not show one of the service features that Manager Willis Vance has provided. The only lot obtainable for parking was a block away, so the 20th Century has "car-hops," fellows in uniform who take the patron's car when he drives up to the theatre and parks it for him. The patron is given a check, the car-hop retaining a duplicate; when the car has been parked, the duplicate is placed on a board reproducing the plan of the parking lot, in a space corresponding to that in which the patron's car has been parked. This board is located in the foyer just outside the manager's office. When the patron is leaving the theatre, he has only to find the duplicate of his check on the board to see where his car is located.

—G. S.

In 1929, Electrical Research Products, then newly formed as a subsidiary of Western Electric to equip theatres for the presentation of sound motion pictures, employed a tall, slim, quiet young man as a routine computer in the acoustical department. Ten years later he was acoustic consultant of the organization. A leading architects' publication had rated him among the first five men in acoustics in the United States. The Acoustical Society of America had elected him to a Fellowship, made him its treasurer. When Charles C. Potwin died on September 25, 1941, a victim of phlebitis, some of the nation's most notable buildings in which sound control was of critical importance, were functionally competent because of his collaboration in their creation. And his was a new science, too, much of it evolving in his own time, much of it out of his own genius and earnestness. Yet he was only 33.

More humble among the subjects of his efforts—though he certainly did not count them so—were the theatres whose acoustical problems he had helped to solve. Few specialists in acoustics knew the motion picture theatre as Charles Potwin did; few had the opportunity to study them that he had in the employ of Erpi. Readers of BETTER THEATRES have had the benefit of his extraordinary work in the theatre field through his regular column and special articles in these pages. And the theatre was the subject of some of the most ambitious plans that he was entertaining for the immediate future when, as he lay in a New York hospital awaiting complete recovery, he took a sudden turn for the worse.

Charlie was taken to Ivoryton, Conn., for burial. There he was born and grew up. But though he was so very young, monuments to his swift productiveness will endure in many places.—GEORGE SCHUTZ.

SPACE ECONOMY

■ The new 20th Century theatre in Cincinnati, owned and operated by the Oakley Corporation, under the direction of Willis E. Vance, represents the solution of a problem presented by a site in a fine developing neighborhood at the crest of a rise in the elevation of Madison Road approaching Oakley Square, advising an imposing height of structure to dominate surrounding commercial buildings. The design, by the F & Y Building Service of Columbus, Ohio, provides a good height of facade above which rises a tower bearing the theatre name, with both front and interior carried out on modern lines, in an original, colorful style. The site further presented a space problem due to its position at a 45° angle with the frontage. The plan adopted, having service and equipment rooms grouped around a curving entrance area, gives a rectangular auditorium seating about 1,200, including 300 seats in a shallow balcony entered from a mezzanine lounge (see floor plans). The building is of steel, concrete and brick construction, with facade in terra cotta and architectural brick—slate blue terra cotta for base, flesh-colored above this, then a band of maroon terra cotta, a cornice piece of buff brick from which extends a serpentine section of ivory terra cotta linked to maroon terra cotta tower, the latter appearing to continue down through corner of marquee to provide ticket booth housing at its base. The vestibule has lacquered sheet metal ceiling with downlights, the ceiling ending in a panel of opal Flexglass above all-glass Tuflex doors.

■ Looking from standee directly to vestibule through Tuflex glass entrance doors, showing how structural barriers have been eliminated to provide a sense of "flow" from street to auditorium. There is no true lobby, but the foyer is divided by a set of traffic rails, where ticket box is located. Just inside these rails is the staircase leading to balcony, curving into a mezzanine foyer fitted with modern blond wood settees and chairs. Carpeting extends from just within the entrance doors to all public areas of the theatre, further effecting continuity and bringing the interior "out to the street." The carpeting is a special pattern in a Mohawk Wilton having repeat figures consisting in the front of the theatre intertwined with a camera, a projector, and swirls of film. At one side, just inside entrance doors, is a built-in refreshment station named "Lobby Shop."

■ The 20th Century tower (see night view below) supports channel letters with four lines of neon—two white inside two green. The name is similarly repeated at the front of the oval marquee, the end fascias of which are Wagner attraction panels between chaser borders.

■ The foyer-standee section is approximately 14 feet deep, and the width of the auditorium. This area is segregated from the auditorium proper by a masonry wall with plate glass vision panels behind the side as well as the center banks of seats, with the plate glass set on an incline, leaning backward and away from the auditorium at about a 30° angle from the perpendicular. This has been done to prevent reflection of both sound and light into the seating area. The wainscot of the standee rail is finished in Indian red with applied plaques of ornamental plaster in off-white. The rail itself is capped with blue simulated leather, padded. The entire vision panel is trimmed with approximately a 10-inch wide fluted wood trim finished in white. The doors to the auditorium, two to each side, are birch given a wheat finish. The ceiling of this area is at two levels; the high level, adjacent to the standee rail, drops down into a lower area edged with a series of scallops about 3 feet in radius. This lower area is finished in turquoise blue and has a series of flat circular coffers interspersed with three Anemostats of similar design effect. At the rear of this area are men's lounge and toilet rooms. The wall at the rear of the standee is finished in mauve painted plaster. A feature of this wall is a niche with pedestal supporting two drinking fountains in front of a curved background of gold Flexglass in the main field, with six broad vertical stripes of green opal Flexglass, which run straight up and fade out into the general ceiling, which also forms the ceiling of the niche. This niche is provided with a neon trough which sets a soft glow of peach colored light over the Flexglass field. In the auditorium a spectacular effect is achieved by the bold use of concealed lighting in ornamental plaster coves, and in suspended metal coves, ten of which run from the top of the plaster dado to the ceiling line, with concealed lighting controlled by rheostats. These tremendous metal coves concealing controlled strip lighting have been placed in front of flutes on the side wall, approximately 8 feet in diameter, running vertically to the ceiling. This has been done by furring the entire side walls. Each of the metal coves is superimposed at the center line of the escalloped fluted surfaces. The proscenium arch is a series of light pockets. The entire ceiling is on a decided pitch, all points of the architecture, both walls and ceilings, converging at the proscenium. The color of the center panel of the ceiling is approximately the same as the painted plush curtain which, by the nature of the design, seems to flow forward and downward into the proscenium and curtain to make one continuous color mass. The ceiling colors following the breaks from the outside walls, traveling toward a broad band of rose color in the middle, consist in a Royal blue field next to the wall, then Naples yellow; this treatment then flows straight into a proscenium without valance or other top ornament.

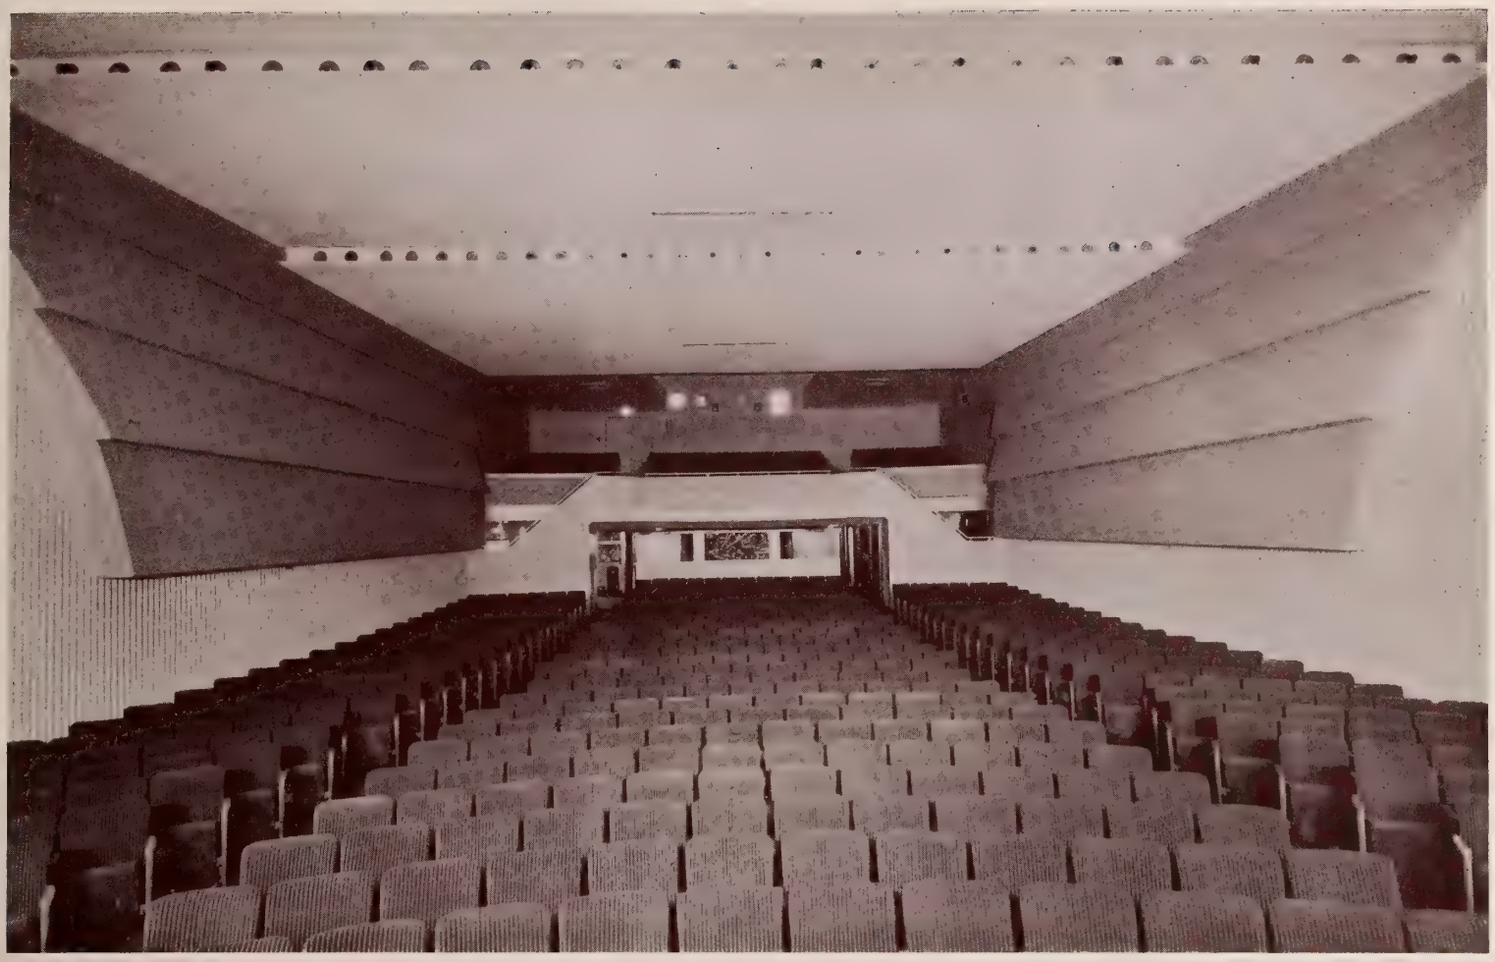
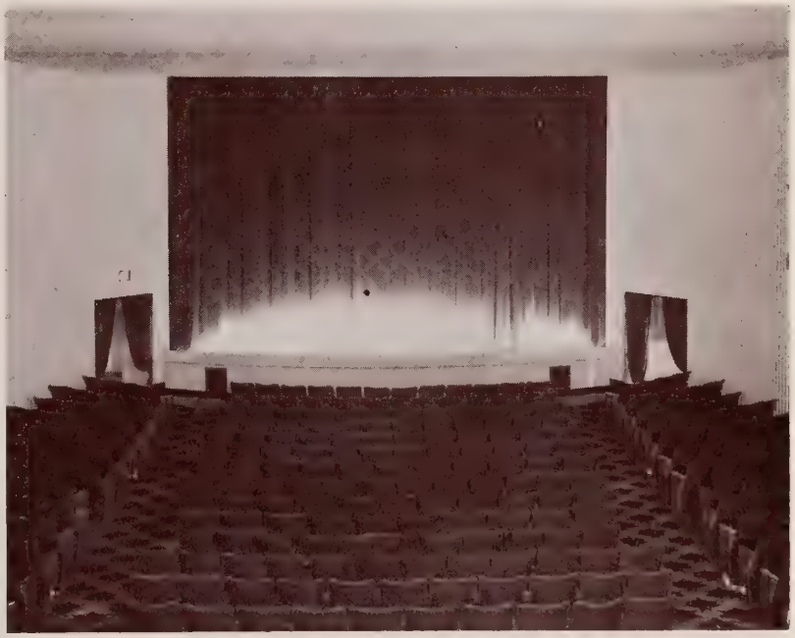
COMPACT FUNCTIONAL SCHEME FOR 750 SEATS

■ The new Kent theatre in Notre Dame de Grace subdivision of Montreal, is owned and operated by Superior Theatres, Ltd., operating the new Villeray and other neighborhood houses in and around Montreal. Population of Notre Dame de Grace is close to 65,000, with the Jesuit, Loyola College and High school in the district, which is almost exclusively residential. The Kent, designed by Ben Schlanger, New York theatre architect, and Eliosoph and Greenspoon, Montreal architects, seats 750, including 100 seats in a shallow balcony. The structure is of skeleton steel, aerocrete slabs and brick, with reinforced concrete floors. The lower front is blue Vitrolite. Entrance doors are grained wood, framed, with 1-foot glass panels etched with letter K. The marquee, faced with Adler attraction panels, and the name sign are lighted with 10-watt green and yellow lamps, with green neon terminals. Marquee soffit has built-in reflector lamps. A tower of glass blocks lighted from within, supports the sign.

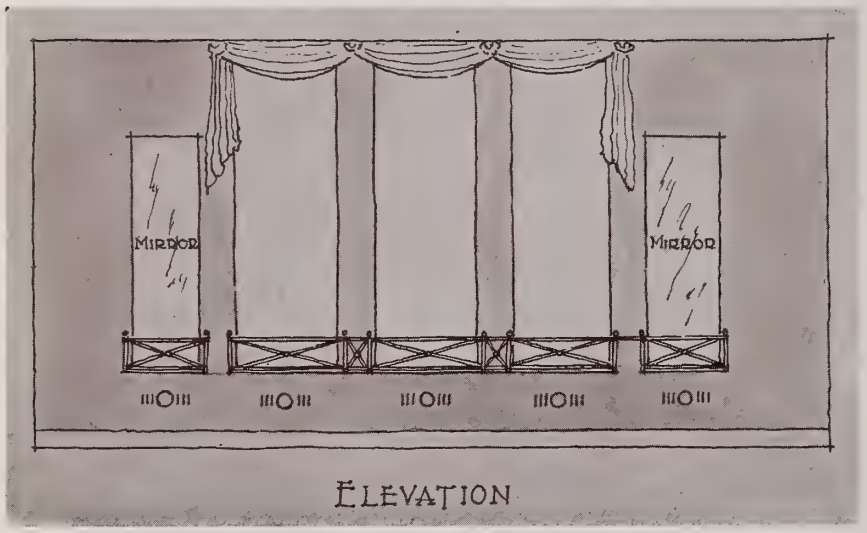


■ DETAILS: Above, doors to upper lounge, like foyer doors to lobby, are covered in cream simulated leather, nailed in stagger formation. Also note lively decorations. Below is one of two staircases from foyer to balcony.



■ The foyer of the Kent is reached through a shallow lobby with doors slab-type bleached wood, satin-finished. A unique feature of the Kent is a soda fountain and dance lounge on the second level (this is dealt with on page 26). The foyer, however, also is provided with lounge space, designed principally as a waiting place out of the line of traffic and as an approach to toilet rooms. This foyer-lounge area is carpeted in a maroon and beige floral design. Lighting is by downlights consisting simply in lamps placed in flush-recessed metal receptacles. Doors from foyer to lobby are padded on the foyer side, being covered in cream-colored simulated leather, studded. Foyer walls are covered in copper foil with hand-painted figure ornamentation. On lounge section wall is a recessed modern mural, illuminated by concealed filament lamps from trough above. Lounge furnishings consist of maroon and blue settees, bleached walnut table and table lamps. The lounge section is railed off by natural wood barrier. Stairs leading from the foyer to the upper lounge have steps of red terrazzo, natual wood balustade. Walls of the staircase and upper lounge entrance are deep salmon-tinted plaster with hand-painted, modernistically stylized ornamentation in a cocktail and game theme. Doors marking the entrance to lounge and soda bar are similar to the doors from the foyer to the lobby, finished in studded leather.

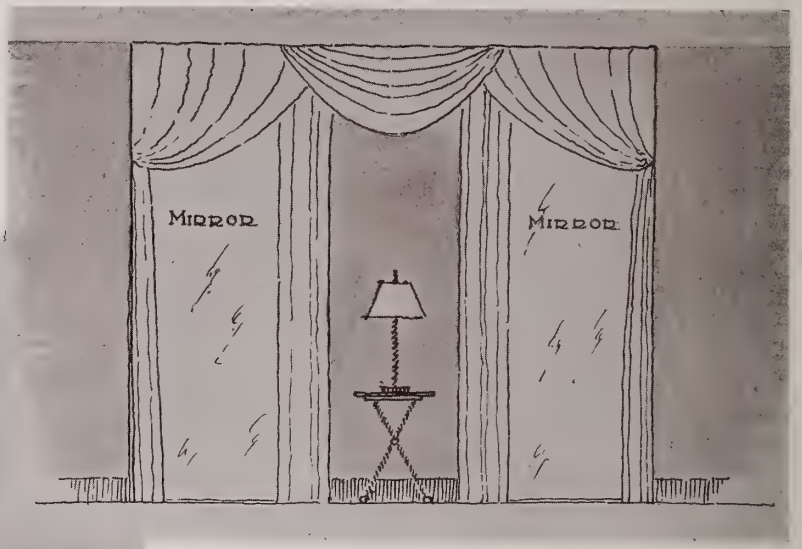
■ The inspiration for the treatment of the Kent theatre auditorium is found in the acoustical and lighting requirements for comfortable viewing and hearing of the performance. All soft and porous sound absorbing materials have been avoided; surfaces used are of a hard smooth nature. The ceiling and walls are so shaped as to avoid parallelism. This is achieved by a series of slight angular tilts to be found in the side walls, ceiling and on the rear projection room wall. A corrugated asbestos board finish on the ceiling and side walls serves for both acoustical and lighting requirements. The corrugations eliminate annoying re-reflections of screen light and are efficient in breaking up sound reflections. The interior shaping and the floor slope design have made it possible to reduce the cubic foot contents of the auditorium in order to control basic reverberation time. The specific use of corrugated surfaces made it possible to keep the walls in light and medium shades of gray tones. Efficient use is thereby made of screen light re-reflection for lighting the auditorium during the performance. All light reflected from the corrugated surfaces falls upon the cheeks and heads of the spectators and not into their eyes. The large smooth plaster side wall surfaces are finished with horizontally striped wall paper having warm tones. The carpeting, seating coverings and indirect ceiling lighting coves are depended upon for decorative value. The Kent interior is so designed as to make for a neutral setting when the picture is being shown, yet achieve a warm decorative effect when the house lighting is used during the intermission period. The functional character of the auditorium design is also expressed in the seating plan and associated floor slope. Based on the so-called "reverse slope" principle, the floor is variably rather than consistently pitched, rising slightly ahead of a flat section in the middle. The three-bank seating plan staggers the chairs in the middle bank behind the first six rows, with uneven aisle line.



Suggestions by Burton

INEXPENSIVE WAYS TO ADD SPARKLE TO LOUNGES AND FOYERS

CHARLES C. BURTON
Architect & Engineer, Paramount Theatres Service Corporation



SUGGESTION ONE shows the end of a lounge where limited budget calls for ingenuity. Plaster is out of the question, so a furred wall is erected, faced with painted wall board. The local house electrician wires from an existing wall plug, and fluorescent lights are installed. Mirrors flank the central lighting panel.

SUGGESTION TWO: Use plenty of mirrors—skillful hands can do many tricks with mirrors. Two qualities belong to mirrors—space and light. They give light where there is little, and the appearance of space where there is little space. If a foyer or lounge is small, a mirror on the wall will make it seem spacious. If a corner is dark, a mirror will brighten it. Don't be afraid to use plenty of mirrors in women's rooms; if the room is drab, mirrors will give it sparkle; if it is dingy, mirrors will give it gaiety—and if a ceiling is low, a ceiling mirror will seem to give the room twice the height. This trick is recommended in small women's rooms especially.

SUGGESTION ONE

SUGGESTION TWO

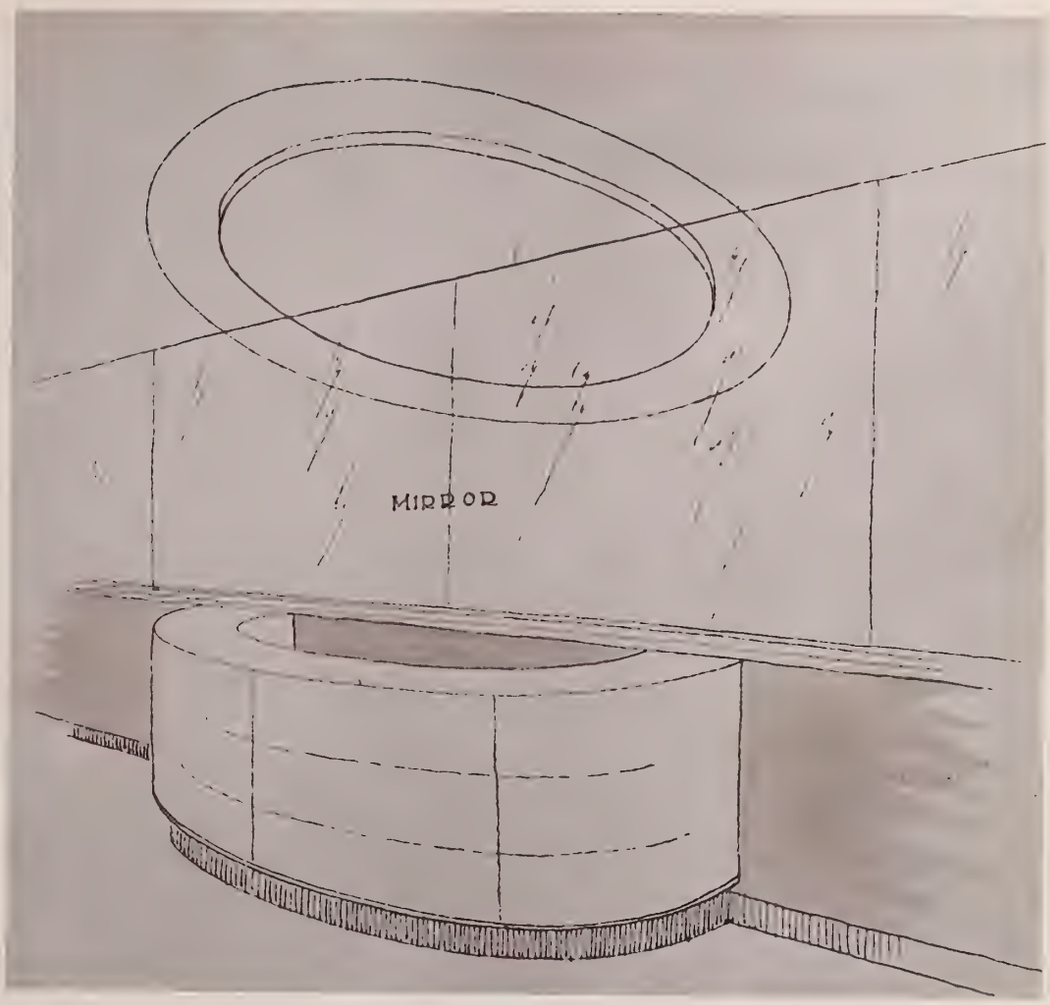
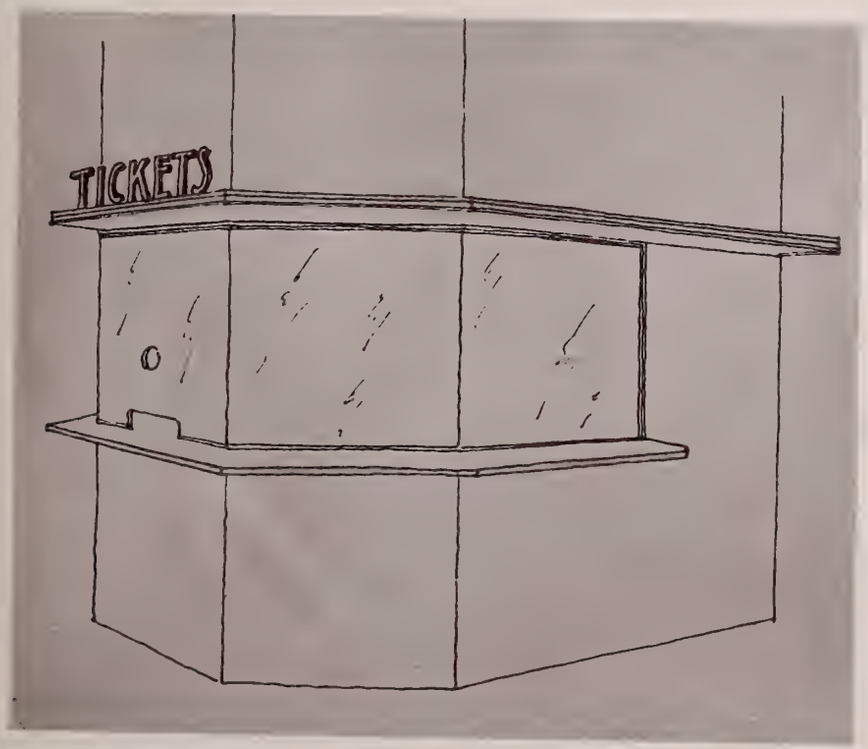
SUGGESTION THREE: Use Venetian blinds on plain walls where window effect is wanted in a classic scheme. Over tapes tack Greek-Key braid and unfurl above the blinds a colorful valance. Guaranteed to perk up any wilting setting. Inexpensive, too. The flower stand can be found in any first-class furniture store.

CREATE ATMOSPHERE—

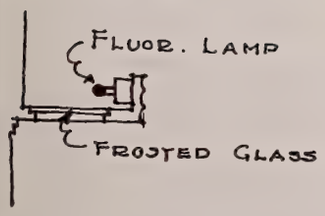


with wall paper—or Wall-Tex . . . with slip cover changes . . . and with mirrors.

USE COLOR—

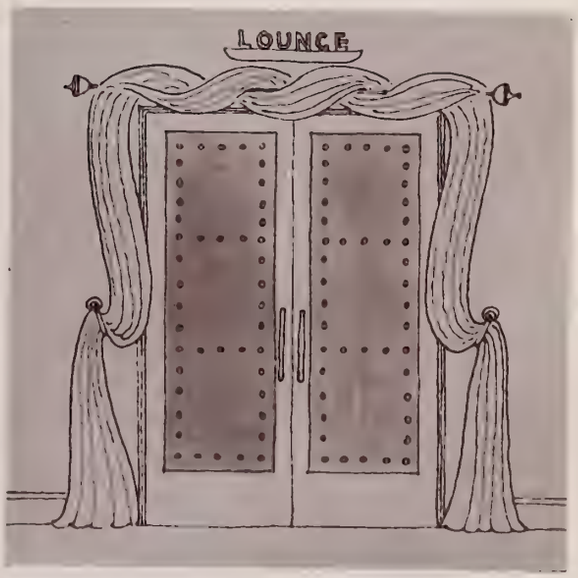


To accentuate furniture and carpet design. Mix the softly muted colors with the bold and bright . . . do a pastel around many shades of one color.



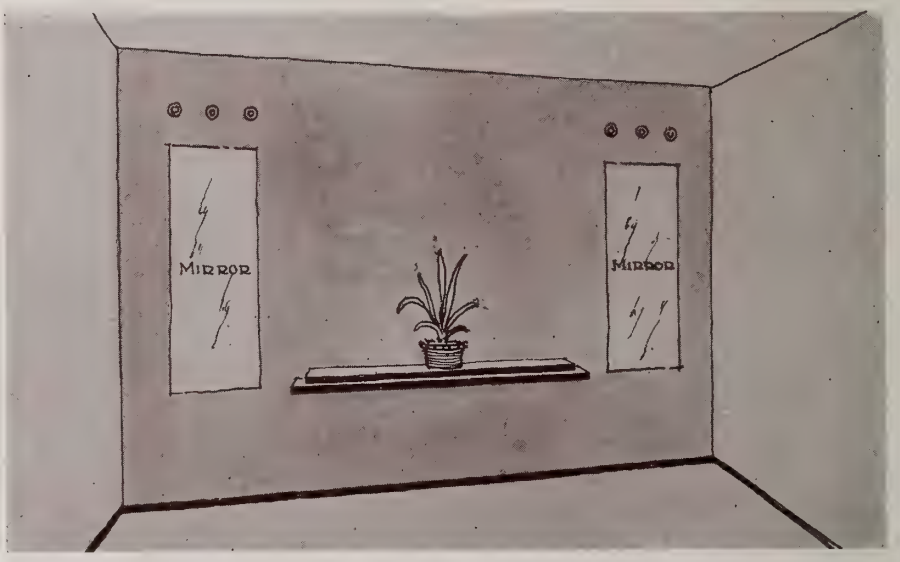
USE BACKGROUNDS—

To accentuate furnishings.

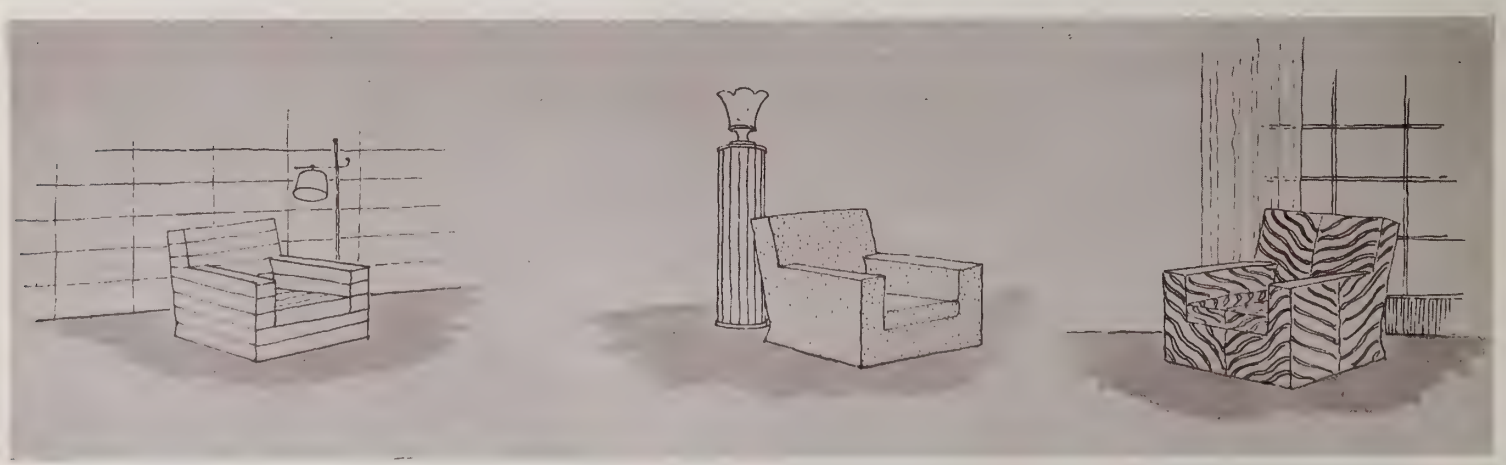


SUGGESTION FOUR (right): A circular candy stand backed with mirrors, and a half-circular light trough in ceiling, the reflection of which supplies the other half of the circle.

SUGGESTION FIVE: sketch of box office shows a lighted canopy at top and a bottom ledge at ticket shelf. You will find that your women patrons like this; it affords a place for purse, packages, etc., when purchasing tickets.



SUGGESTION SIX (below): An inexpensive method of enhancing entrance to lounge. In this instance the lounge was off standee area and doors were required. Make the drapes theatrical.



SUGGESTION SEVEN (left): Be modern, yet simple; afford a good theatrical colorful modern painting—or a decent reproduction of one—and plan your scheme around it. Go in for broad flat planes of color, strive for an effect of space. Do not be afraid to paint three walls of the room in vivid contrast to the fourth.

SUGGESTION EIGHT (right): A simple method of treatment for a wall in a women's lounge of a small theatre. A base and a shelf of black Formica are flanked by two mirrors.

SUGGESTION NINE (below): Change the appearance of your lounges with slip covers. First sketch—Select a plain chair and dress it in a light-colored fabric and you have a modern effect. Second sketch—The same chair in a dark blue, red or green with contrasting white medallion or lamp—and you have classic effect (Flexglass can be used effectively on suggested medallion). Third sketch—The same chair with a geometric patterned cover, immediately characterizes it as modern.

WAYS & MEANS

Checking Your Front Display Equipment

EVERY THEATRE operator recognizes by now the great value of an attractively designed and lighted marquee at the front of the theatre. There are many important items, however, that make up a good marquee besides the colored neon tubes, attraction board and letters. These are the items that are not seen by the public—perhaps not often by the theatre owner or manager; yet they need particular attention in order to have the marquee operate at its full efficiency.

Is your marquee or name sign operated on a flasher? Every good marquee or sign deserves equally good flasher. The theatre owner cannot afford to gamble with his front lighting into which he has put a large sum of money to obtain an attractive display by installing a poorly designed flasher that will give jerky, sloppy lighting effects, or stop working entirely.

FLASHERS AND THEIR JOBS

There are several types of flasher mechanism on the market, each having its own particular operation to perform. The high-speed flasher is a standard mechanism which is usually assembled in multiples of four brushes, depending on the number of circuits and the load to be carried. It operates running borders around the marquee sign, also to produce the illusion of flowing water, revolving wheels, and even waving flags, in which case the lamps have to be wired in multiples of one to four. It will operate neon tube signs as well as filament lamp signs. The standard capacities of this type of brush contact flashes news from 750 to 2500 watts per circuit, with the number of circuits four to twelve. However, for combination flashers and many of the more complicated special signs, this flasher can be had in almost any capacity and so designed to give flashing effects of the highest degree of attractiveness.

Then there is the so-called "on and off" and speller flasher, spelling a whole word or show "on" and "off" in spelling one letter at a time. It has two actions, one in which the letters are spelled one at a time until all are on, then all off with a short "out" period; and the other in which all the letters are spelled out, then all off, with this operation repeating itself. This flasher uses 1/2-inch and 1-inch brushes with one to five brushes. The 1/2-inch brush will carry 5 amperes per brush on neon tubes, and the 1-inch brush 10 amperes per brush.

The "script flasher" produces a smooth, steady flow of light for writing letters or words one lamp at a time, simulating flying rockets, shooting stars, etc. It has ten to fifteen brushes for standard operation, and a capacity of about 110 watts per switch.

The new high-speed Mercury contact flasher can be used effectively for running borders on the marquee. It is almost noiseless in operation and has the advantage over the brush type flasher in that there is practically no wear or tear, nor replacements of working parts. It comes in from 4- to 16-circuit operation with about 1,000 watts per circuit capacity.

Then there is a small, compact type flasher used in small signs that can be mounted in the sign itself. This flasher can be used on an ordinary two- or three-wire electric service system of 110 or 220 volts. It comes in from one to four circuits with capacities from 750 to 2,500 watts per circuit. The speed of this flasher in operation is 15 to 20 revolutions per minute.

GETTING THE RIGHT FLASHER

As in the case of other equipment in the theatre, care should be taken that the flasher is the right type for its particular job, and that it is installed properly for operation, maintenance and servicing. A flasher of the wrong type for the job it is to do can cause a lot of "headaches" during installation, and continuous trouble after it is installed.

If the sign is extremely large and has complicated circuits, a drawing should be made showing the number of circuits and the wattage of the lamps to be used on each circuit. A full description of the lighting effects wanted should be given, as well as the flashing sequences determined. On this drawing state what kind of electric service is available—if alternating or direct current, the voltage, also the frequency or cycles if alternating current, and whether you have two- or three-wire service. It is well to know that if only three-wire service is available, additional wire or wires will have to be installed in order to balance properly the load of the flasher.

In installing flashers for neon tube signs care should be taken that the primary side of the transformer is used and that each section of the sign that flashes separately is on a different transformer. When any one brush of the flasher controls several transformers, extreme care should be taken that the total number of amperes of all these transformers is not greater than the carrying capacity of that brush. This is one of the main faults of flasher breakdown, as it will burn out or greatly shorten the life of the contacts and brushes. A brush on a high-speed flasher must "make" and "break" sometimes over 63,000 times during a night of operation, and if it is overloaded a breakdown will surely result in a very short period. It can be seen that it would be cheaper to buy additional brushes when the load of the sign exceeds the total wattage of the flasher.

In all cases the total wattage capacity of the flasher should at least equal the total load of the sign. The flasher for high-speed effects is usually wired for four circuits, (1-2-3-4 and 1-2-3-4) to each brush, correspondingly numbered and with a common wire to the feeder brush. When slower effects are desired they may be had by increasing the number of brushes accordingly. In case a three-wire system is used additional feeder brushes must be added to the flasher in order to properly balance both sides of the feed line.

FLASHER MAINTENANCE

In maintaining motor-driven high-speed flashers with either silver contacts or copper brush contacts it is important that the brushes, contacts, sector wheels or cams be always kept clean and in good condition. Only a clean dry rag, with a little vaseline, should be used, never rough sand paper or emery cloth. When the contact or brush is rough and black, or the tension is not right, a new brush or contact should be bought rather than to try to fix it temporarily. Any and all adjustments should be done by an experienced man, as haphazard servicing or tinkering can easily ruin the smooth sequence of the flasher.

First, clean the entire flasher mechanism of all dirt and dust that may have accumulated over a period of months. Check all the cams and contact points, especially the brushes for burned pit marks or rough uneven surfaces. If these parts show bad wear or even slight misalignments, replace with new parts rather than have them cease functioning entirely later on. Brushes that have the spring tension out of adjustment should be replaced, as it is almost impossible to correct them by hand.

All gear housings should be checked for gear teeth wear and to see if new oil is required. The wire contacts to the brushes should be checked carefully, and if not in good condition, new wire should be installed; the insulation on the wires deteriorates with age and gets brittle.

The flasher motor and drive should be cleaned and checked for wear. The tension on the drive should be adjusted as it might move out of alignment under heavy use over a period of months. The main cutout switch and fuse blocks that control the motor should be checked, for in a lot of failures the switch blades have made improper contact.

The electric circuits that run to the marquee from the flasher should be checked, especially where they enter the marquee framing, a point where no appreciable vibration might be expected.

The enclosure for the flasher mechanism should be checked for leaks.

CHECKING MARQUEE ROOF

Another part of the marquee that is too often only casually checked is the roof. It can be a source of annoyance, expense and trouble if neglected, as it deteriorates with age. At least twice a year a check should be made to see if the drain is clear, the flashing is not corroded or loose, and the roof covering is in good condition. A little repair here and there at the right time will save a lot of repairs and money later on. A clogged drain pipe on the roof can back up the water, in a heavy storm, to a point where it can enter behind the flashing, junction boxes for the marquee electric wiring, and then into the ceiling. In a case like this, if a burn-out of the sign will not be the result, at least dirty streaks will be left all over the marquee soffit, the display frames and front of the building directly under the marquee, and these dirty streaks will be hard to clean, especially if the roof leaks every time it rains or snows and the dirty water keeps coming through the roof.

When a check of the marquee roof is made all corroded flashing should be removed and new metal installed, covered with a good grade of outdoor paint. If any of the metal flashing is loose it should be nailed down solid, and at the joints heavy asphalt should be applied. If the marquee roof is of the tar paper built-up type, any loose felt should be cemented tight with asphalt, and if torn or badly perforated, new sheets of tar paper should be applied. A proper screen should be installed over the opening of the roof drain pipe to keep out heavy refuse from entering and clogging the opening. This screen over the marquee drain pipe should be examined at least once a week, as it is rather surprising how quickly paper, sticks, stones and rubber balls will accumulate on the roof and always around the drain.

A good idea is to have the entire marquee painted at least once a year in order to prevent rust from catching hold in any exposed parts. Once the metal starts to rust or corrode badly the only cure is to install new metal and this can be expensive, especially when it must be of a special design or shape.

Correct Layout of Carpeting in the Balcony

IT SEEMS there is still some difficulty in determining the exact width of the aisles in the balcony, especially when the balcony is quite wide and the riser radius is rather short or sharp. This problem can be serious, particularly in a theatre under construction, as the aisle width must be according to local or state code regulations.

The aisle width is always measured by an inspector from the arm rest extending farthest into the aisle, to the other arm rest on the opposite side of the aisle. In other words, he determines the clear walking space without any possible obstructions. In the balcony side aisles, however, the aisle width for chairs is not necessarily the exact width of the aisle tread, since the end chair standards are, or should be, installed in a direct line to the radius point of the balcony risers. This means that the chairs are installed at an angle to the balcony side walls, while the aisle lines in most cases are laid out straight, or parallel, to the side walls. In this case, the tread in the aisle will be somewhat wider than the exact width measured for the chairs, for the edge of each tread is laid out, or should be laid out, also in a direct line to the radius point of the balcony risers, the same as for the chair standards. In other words, this tread in the aisle is close to the chair standard, since it follows the same radius line.

FIGURING CARPET LAYOUT

Special care must be taken in figuring the carpet installation in these aisles. If the carpet is figured to be laid according to the width of the aisle for the chairs, a bare spot of concrete will be left showing at the front edge of the riser, and another at the rear edge, as the chair aisle width is taken between two straight parallel lines to the side walls of the balcony, while the width of the aisles of the risers is laid out by two lines running to the radius pivot point. In order to avoid these unsightly bare spots of concrete on the aisle treads between the row of chairs, it should be remembered that the carpet must be always figured a little wider than the aisle width shown on the architect's plans, as he gives only the width of the aisles for the chairs. Thus where the edges of these treads between the row of chairs are laid out straight or parallel to the side walls of the balcony, and not to the radius point, empty "holes" will be left diagonally across the riser. These depressions at the corners of the risers can be a serious hazard inasmuch as a patron walking close to the chair aisle standards can very easily step into one and might fall as a result.

When installing wood nailing strips in the floor of the balcony aisles for fastening the carpet, these strips should be laid out on two straight parallel lines to the side walls, and in line with the exact width of the aisle riser, instead of the width of the aisle measured from arm to arm of the row of chairs on each side of this aisle. In one case where these balcony aisles were laid out improperly with the carpet strips installed at extreme angles to the aisle lines, the theatre owner had to install more carpeting than originally figured on, and where large depressions were left at the corners of the risers in the aisles, they had to be filled-up with cement to eliminate hazards.

Full Carpet Protection

THE FIRST thing one notices when entering some theatres is that the lobby or foyer carpet seems worn more in certain sections than others. This wear is usually more pronounced in the lobby or foyer. Here the carpet ordinarily takes the severest beating. However, this relatively fast deterioration cannot be entirely attributed to the scraping of feet; to a certain extent it is due to the mud, dirt and dampness deposited there over a period of months.

Even though present day carpet is made strong and durable with the latest scientific methods, dirt and especially dampness will cause in time a rotting effect of the tufts and pile. The problem is: How can this quick wear of otherwise good grade carpeting be best prevented or reduced to a minimum? One way is to install rubber matting of good friction characteristics in the outer vestibule or lobby to clean off the patrons' feet. At the same time, even if the rubber mats in the vestibule or lobby are of the best quality and are installed properly, it will be almost impossible to have patrons' feet perfectly clean and dry, especially in rainy or stormy weather, when they enter the carpeted area of the theatre. What, then, can be done to protect the carpet where mud, dirt and water are most likely to accumulate?

It has been found that by laying a good grade of fibre matting or runners over the carpet itself, especially in rainy or stormy weather, the deposit of dirt and water was reduced to an absolute, negligible minimum. One type of such fibre matting, for example, is of strong sisal hemp, so woven as to lend itself beautifully to the covering of carpet in traffic lanes, since it comes in many pattern effects.

The weave of the fibre clings to the carpet pile so that the mat lays perfectly flat and will not "creep" or slip under the pressure of walking feet. It is impervious to water and exposure and as a result can be easily cleaned with ordinary soap and water, or even dry-cleaned.

These mats are not thick, and since they do not tend to curl at the ends, no tripping hazard is normally set up.

MAKING A STAGGER SEATING PLAN WORK

THERE ARE TWO important considerations to be dealt with in the design of a staggered seating arrangement. The first is to make sure that a staggered arrangement of the chairs is not depended upon in portions of the seating plan where the stagger does not serve the purpose for which it is intended. The second consideration is the placing of chairs along the lines of the aisles so that the stagger would be as effective for the chairs close to the aisles as well as for the chairs farther in from the aisle.

The staggered seating arrangement should not be resorted to unless one has assured oneself that each seat size and position intended to be in a staggered position is checked individually to determine if satisfactory unobstructed vision of the picture is obtained for each chair. There are two reasons why the staggered arrangement would not otherwise work out satisfactorily: One, when the seat is sufficiently close to the screen to cause obstruction of the view of the screen by both heads in front of the viewer, even though both heads in front are located an equal distance to each side of the viewer in question (see figure); two, when areas are too far to one side of the picture in approximately the front half of the auditorium. In these instances the angle subtended to the screen makes it impossible to place chairs of normal width behind each other and yet obtain unobstructed vision.

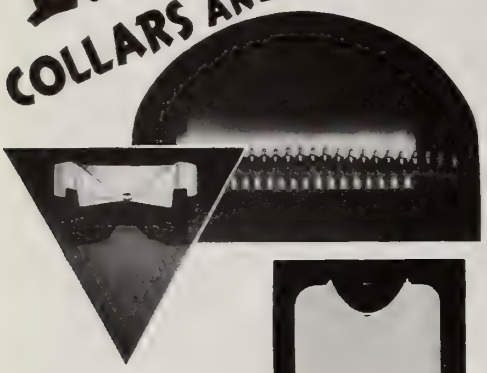
METHODS IN USE



When a seating plan is checked for proper stagger arrangement, all of these facts become evident, and it will also be noticed that with common methods of staggering chairs, the effect on end chairs near the aisle is not in accordance with the properly developed staggered positions dictated by the requirements for unobstructed vision.

The common arrangement for staggered seats at the aisle lines has been either to have a uniform indentation in each staggered row amounting to half the chair width at the aisle line, or to eliminate this indentation by using an extra width of chair in the staggered rows at the aisle line, the width of which would amount to 1½ times the normal chair width.

Still another method has been resorted to where the local building authorities require that there be no indentation at the aisle line for staggered seating. In this case chairs up to 22 inches in width are used throughout the staggered row to fill out what would otherwise be an indentation.

All of these three methods are arbitrary and only function well, as stated before, for those seats which are more than two seats away from the aisle line, leaving two and sometimes three seats on either side of the aisle, with reduced amount of unobstructed view of the picture. A stagger arrangement which would give the maximum unobstructed view of the picture would reveal that the amount of indentation at each staggered row would vary, and the chair widths would necessarily vary from 19 up to 23 inches. While the amount of unobstructed vision which is lost for the aisle chairs mentioned is not serious, it is still enough to cause the viewer to shift his head occasionally to gain an unobstructed view, a practice which is now rapidly being recognized as an unnecessary discomfort.

FLOOR SLOPE FACTOR

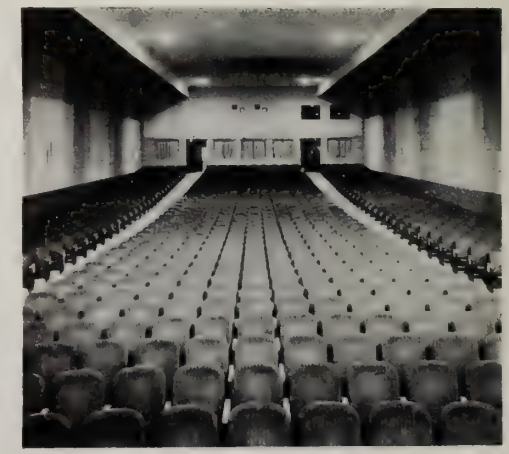
The main requirement of a floor slope in the motion picture theatre auditorium is that the slope employed should permit any viewer to see the entire picture, including the lower area of the picture down to the very bottom, over the head of any person two or more rows in front of the viewer. Any obstruction by persons' heads, as heretofore stated, is decidedly annoying.

It is also undesirable, and to a degree annoying to the viewer, if the person immediately in front obstructs the view of the picture. But such a condition is seemingly tolerable since the viewer may lean sharply to one side and obtain an unobstructed view of the picture from between the heads in front of him; however, when a seating arrangement and floor slope is designed to enable the viewer to obtain an unobstructed view of the picture without shifting or leaning in accordance with the movements with those in front of him, the viewer is put at ease and is likely to enjoy the performance more.

Too many theatres have been constructed with sightlines and seating arrangement designs which have not been thoroughly studied, and this has resulted in viewing conditions which may be considered tolerable in a more common expression.

COMBINED SLOPE AND STAGGER

It is a common belief that an extreme floor slope should produce desirable viewing conditions. This is not so; as a matter of fact, there are certain of the strong slopes which produce more obstruction of view than would be ordinarily expected. A strong slope places the screen at a point so low as to make the arrival points of clearance too much above the picture.



The amount of a floor slope in the most recently advanced sightline design is minimized by the partial adaptation of the stagger seating plan in limited areas where the stagger plan can function. In other seating areas sufficient clearance is obtained by depending on the floor slope itself. This combined use of staggered seating results in a floor design which is more complicated, having an irregular succession of curves and compound bowl shapes. However, all of these intricacies of shape are not apparent to a person entering the theatre or seated while viewing the picture. They simply result in giving unobstructed view of the picture, and in very moderate floor slopes which are not sensed by the patron to any appreciable degree.

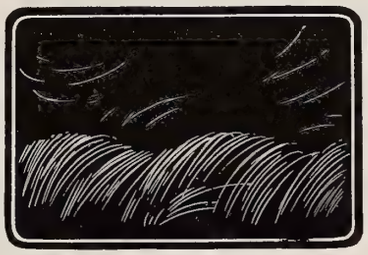
The passing away of Charlie Potwin can certainly be considered a profound loss to all those who are interested in the field of motion picture theatre design. I can safely say that he knew more about the architectural adaptation of acoustical requirements in auditorium design than any man in his field. This skill he had in addition to his thorough knowledge of the acoustical science itself, and with this skill he enabled many architects to create better architecture.

His suggestions became the very inspiration for the interior architecture of the auditorium and theatre buildings in whose designing he had a hand.



The loss of so valuable a man so early in his career is really difficult to comprehend. After absorbing the work of all of the leading authorities in the acoustical field, he could have been content to present himself as an authority; but Charlie Potwin was happy only when he was creating, and the work he leaves behind will show that he was to a large measure original besides being thorough. We will have to make a careful study of his work and his writings if we are to carry on from where he left off to practical solutions of architectural acoustic problems.—B. S.

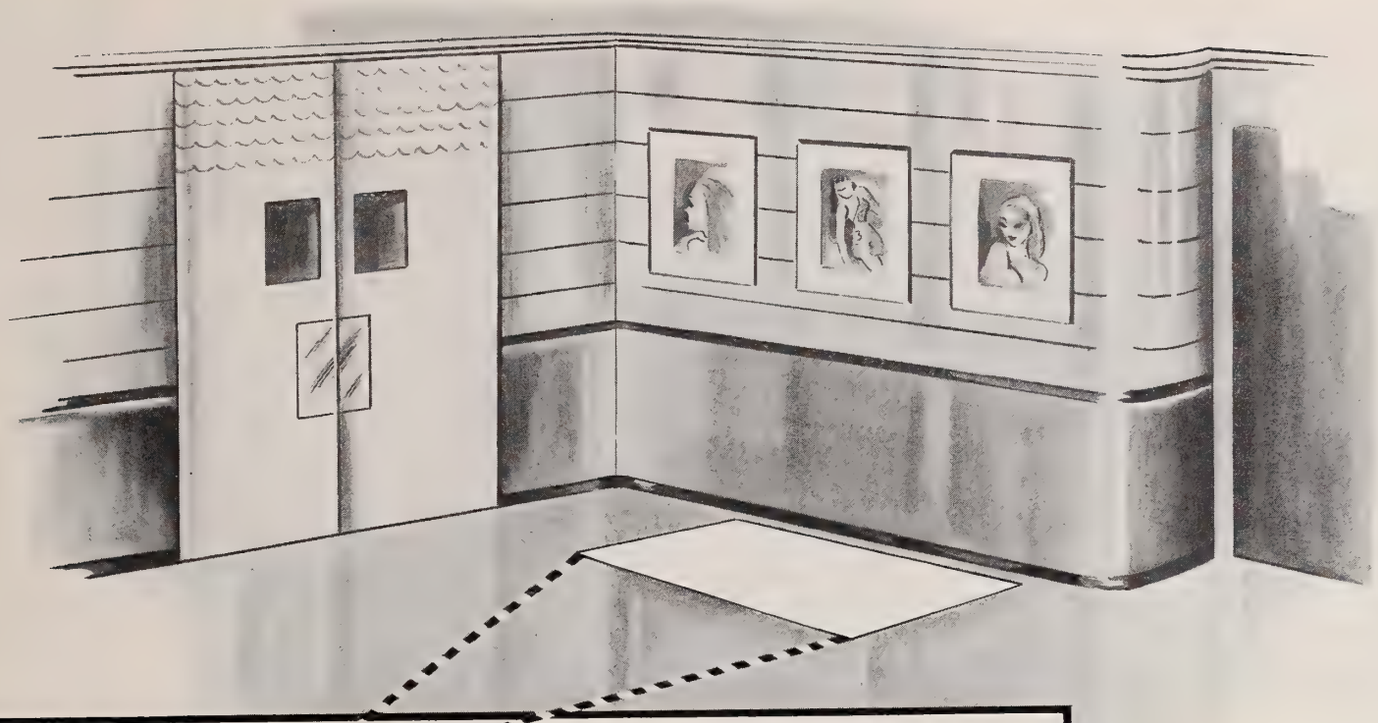
The Refreshment Bar Brings The Soda Fountain to Theatres

¶ New ideas and equipment are quickly following acceptance by theatre operators of vending as a proper theatre function



"LOBBY SHOP" . . . "Milk Bar" . . . "Refreshment Bar" . . . these and similar names already designate a type of service that represents a new and broadening phase of theatre operation. Offering beverages as well as a greater variety of solid confections, it is a natural extension of confectionery selling in the theatre which has so swiftly grown during the last few years from the candy and gum machines which stood in some corner, often treated with complete indifference by the exhibitor himself. Even though not adapted to all theatres (and to some it is prohibited by conditions of lease, location or theatre structure), the refreshment booth is certainly suited to many houses, in small towns as well as in the larger cities.

As part of lounge facilities, it lends itself to a variety of interesting treatments that not only stimulate sales, but add a gay, leisurely atmosphere to the theatre. How such service was elaborately provided in the Norshor theatre in Duluth has been noted in the preceding two issues of BETTER THEATRES; another example, even more extensive in function, is presented in this article.

Then there is the location less intimately associated with the interior of the theatre —the shop immediately off the lobby or foyer, preferably (for sake of greater potential revenue) with a street entrance as well as one from the theatre interior. One of the most recent installations of this type is that of the new Earl theatre in Knoxville, Ill., shown in an accompanying photograph.

In both of these types of location the soda fountain has come to the theatre. There probably are no figures as to just what percentage of the population of the United States may be found at soda fountains during each hour of the day, but the amount must be a sizeable one. The smaller and simpler lobby booth may advisedly confine itself in some situations, to bottle beverages, candies and packaged cookies. The full-fledged refreshment shop or bar, however, is built around the soda fountain.

Since such service is a subordinate function of the theatre, space for it is restricted. This calls for ingenuity in the designer of the refreshment bar; at the same time, especially in the case of a lounge location, it offers him a new opportunity to add environmental appeal, heightening the attraction of the theatre as a place of recreation, with the refreshment bar the center of the entire room treatment. Regular soda fountain equipment can be dressed up so that it need have no suggestion of the drug store or ordinary confectionery shop; also, equipment has been developed (for example, the compact, versatile "Konfecto" units of the Felgreen Company in St. Louis) especially for theatre locations.

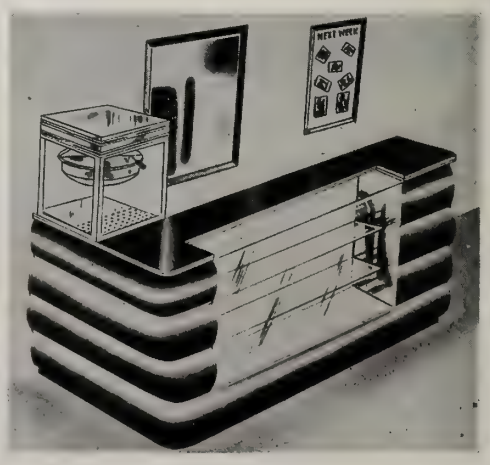
The accompanying picture of the Earl theatre shows one of these refreshment bars in a shop accessible from both the street and the lobby. Although Earl Williams has been an exhibitor in Knoxville, Ill., for eighteen years, his new Earl is the city's first theatre in a building constructed as a theatre. The room provided for complete refreshment service to patrons, and such pedestrian custom as may be available, measures 10x15 feet. The "Konfecto" unit consists in a compact hollow square arrangement of soda and ice cream dispensing equipment, candy case, popcorn popper, cola drink dispenser, and related refrigeration and storage facilities, together with a counter extending throughout the four sides; yet the entire unit measures only 6½x9 feet overall, so that with all merchandise and equipment within easy reach, service can normally be handled by a single attendant.

The fountain counter, which includes the candy display, is covered in rust simulated leather with eggshell-toned binder, while the counter top is Chinese red linoleum with metal trim.

The fountain has an ice cream capacity of 20 gallons. There are four fruit jars and four syrup pumps, faucets for both plain and carbonated water, and self-mixing cola drink tap. An automatic carbonator and a refrigeration plant are built into the unit with provisions for convenient accessibility for servicing.

SODA - DANCE LOUNGE

The Kent theatre in suburban Montreal offers its patrons a gay retreat with rather expensive facilities in an upper lounge which, despite its provisions for dancing, is also designed around a soda fountain. Of the more usual type, this fountain is finished in chrome and nickel, with facing in buff simulated leather having nail studding. The floor of the room, which is reached by stairs from the foyer, is covered with inlaid linoleum except for the central dance area, which is of polished hardwood. A coin-operated phonograph provides music for dancing. Walls are plaster tinted deep salmon and ornamented with sprightly figures of "cocktail" theme, and along the walls are built-in seats upholstered in simulated leather, tables and booths. In commenting on the success of these unusual theatre facilities, Bob Johnson, manager of the Kent, makes these interesting observations:



"Looking back on it now, it is difficult to understand why theatre men did not conceive the idea of a refreshment lounge long before this. The Kent theatre was the first house to introduce this feature to Montreal—to Canada, in fact—and patrons are taking to this added accommodation like a duck to water. Some visiting my house for the first time can't believe their eyes. Once the purpose of the lounge and its facilities have been explained, however, they marvel at what the present-day theatre is accomplishing for the recreation and convenience of its patrons.

SELLING THE SERVICE

"I have practically memorized a little speech, which I find most convenient to recite to strangers visiting my lounge for the first time. It typically goes something like this:

" 'If you should happen to drop into the theatre a few minutes before your favorite star appears on the screen, you needn't stand or sit around idly, and whisper, or worry about dropping your cigarette ashes on our carpets. Instead, you proceed to the upper lounge where refreshments at popular prices are served in an air-conditioned room and where you can do as you please. A phonograph provides music for dancing, and you don't have to whisper. Five minutes before the start of the feature film, a buzzer sounds, tipping you off to finish your "coke" and get downstairs.'

"In as simple language as possible I have explained this innovation to my patrons, and they are visiting the lounge more often as the Kent grows older. I keep the lounge in operation from 3.30 p.m. to 12.30 p.m. Its facilities, of course, are for ticket-holders only. I think it's a great idea, and so do my patrons, particularly the younger folks."

Ventilation as it Affects Theatre Heating Costs

• Is your ventilatnig system designed to handle too much air? Is it designed to handle air efficiently? Described here are conditions you might well look into, to save money in heating—and summer cooling, too

By CARL F. BOESTER

LAST MONTH we discussed the numerous ways of effecting savings through various means of operating your heating plant more efficiently. It therefore seems logical that we should follow such an article with a discussion of the greatest single factor affecting the consumption of fuel, and that is the amount of air required for ventilation.

A careful analysis of your ventilation requirements will, as we shall point out, prove of tremendous value to you, for in addition to effecting great economies in heating costs by proper attention to the problem, much the same precautions pertain to the operation of your summer cooling system, for in summer no small percentage of your total heat gain imposed on the cooling system comes in through the ventilation air; so whatever steps you take to correct your ventilation conditions will pay dividends the year around.

The Heating, Ventilating and Air Conditioning Guide, 1941 Edition, published by the American Society Of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, makes several pertinent statements concerning the qualities of air, two of which are:

(1.) "Contrary to old theories, the usual changes of oxygen and carbon dioxide are of no physiological concern because they are too small to produce appreciable effects even under the worst conditions of normal human occupancy.

CARL F. BOESTER

(2.) "When the only source of contamination is the human occupant, the minimum quantity of outdoor air needed appears to be that necessary to remove objectionable body odors, or tobacco smoke, etc." It therefore follows that the principal function of ventilation is for the purpose of keeping odor concentrations to a minimum, and not any physiological requirements for oxygen. Nevertheless in some places there are city or state codes that require excessive quantities of air per persons, way beyond that required according to the findings of scientists and engineers.

ECONOMY: AN EXAMPLE

First of all, to get a clear understanding of how ventilation affects the pocketbook, let's set up a theoretical example of the amount of heat required for, say a 600 seat theatre located in a typical American city—for the purpose of explanation, say Indianapolis. Such a theatre might be 100 feet long, 50 feet wide, and have an average ceiling height of 22 feet. The cubic volume of such an enclosure is 110,000 cubic feet.

Assuming the building is of typical construction, the heat loss through the walls, ceiling or roof is 220,500 heat units (Btu's) per hour. We shall also assume that the heating plant is designed to heat that building up to an inside air temperature of 70°, when the outside air temperature is zero. Design conditions vary according to the locality, but this happens to be standard for Indianapolis. The heating plant also must have capacity required to heat up the ventilation air, in addition to heating up the building.

Assuming that a fair grade of coal is used, having a heat content of 13,000 Btu's per pound, and that the heating plant has an efficiency of 60%, and that the degree days for this locality is 5,400, the amount of coal required to just offset the building heat loss is only 5½ tons per season.

Our next problem is to determine how much coal is required to heat the air that is introduced from the outside into the building for ventilation purposes, maintaining the desired 70° temperature condition inside. We will very shortly see what a tremendous part of heating costs go into ventilation requirements, and thereby see how important it is to control the amount of ventilation.

The people themselves, of course, generate and give off heat, so this helps to reduce the amount of heat required to bring the ventilation air up to temperature. We will assume that the fresh air intake to your heating system is set to operate by the installation contractor on the basis of a hundred percent occupancy of 600 people. If you have exhaust fans or other arrangements to provide an air change, the net result is the same; but we are assuming that you have a fairly recent heating installation, which calls for minimum quantities of fresh air for ventilation, as required either by your city or state laws, or that you are following the recommendations of scientists or engineers who have established, through elaborate research, certain minimum requirements.

MINIMUM OUTDOOR AIR REQUIREMENTS TO REMOVE OBJECTIONABLE BODY ODORS

Adults of average socio-economic status	200	16
Adults of average socio-economic status	300	12

As set forth in the Heating, Ventilating and Air Conditioning Guide, there are certain minimum outdoor air requirements to remove objectionable odors. An accompanying chart shows the amount of fresh air in cubic feet per minute of outdoor air required per 100 cubic feet of air space per person. Since our example theatre has a volume of 110,000 cubic feet, and a seating capacity of 600, this gives us approximately 180 cubic feet of air space per person. From the chart we then see that about 18 cubic feet per minute of outdoor air is needed for ventilation for each person in the theatre. We are therefore assuming that the air-conditioning engineer set the fresh air intake to provide 10,800 cubic feet of outdoor air per minute for ventilation requirements.

Over the heating season, if this fresh air intake were set for this volume of air and allowed to remain that way your fuel consumption would be 86 tons of coal. (It should be here mentioned that our example theatre is a neighborhood house which operates only five hours per night, with no Sunday matinee.) So if you are to provide the ventilation for your customers that they are entitled to, you can see how tremendously this will affect your fuel bill.

EFFECT OF CUBAGE

It should here be noted that the more volume per person, the smaller the outdoor air requirements. In some of the old-time high-ceiling theatres, the volume is quite large in ratio to the seating capacity, and the outdoor air requirements are much less. In some ways it is an advantage to have such high ceilings because they cut down the ventilation requirements and materially reduce heating costs. In some cases, however, the theatre wall and roof area is substantially increased and this tends to offset the advantage gained by the reduced ventilation requirement. However, if the theatre is well insulated in the walls, and particularly in the ceiling, the theatre of large volume for its seating capacity has the advantage of saving in ventilation requirements, thereby reducing the amount of heat required to bring the ventilation air up to the maintained temperature.

You may comment that you have a 600-seat theatre and never burned anything like 86 tons of coal per heating season. You didn't for several reasons—one, the chances are that you didn't provide the amount of ventilation essential to good patron comfort; and the more important one is that the above 86-ton calculation was predicated on the fact that you would have 600 people in your theatre every night during the heating season for the full five hours. This is on the assumption that your fresh air requirements were set for maximum conditions, which is only so in a few cases.

CONTROLLING AIR INTAKE

The object of this discussion is to point out what ventilation can do to your fuel bills if it isn't properly understood and controlled. Probably most theatres have the amount of outside air equal to that required for less than half of their occupancy on the premise that the occupancy has a usage or qualifying factor, of, say, 50%, and the ventilation air is provided on that basis. During the several hours when the theatre is completely filled you are, of course, not providing anywhere near adequate ventilation, and during the early or the late part of the day when there are very few people in the house, you are giving them several times as much fresh air for ventilation as is required.

Up to the present time there is no control device commercially available for adjusting the damper of the fresh air intake according to the number of people that you may have in your theatre, so the smart thing to do for the present would be to analyze your attendance figures and see what percentage of your seating capacity is filled over the various hours of your operating period, and once every hour have some one manually set the fresh air damper according to the ventilation requirements. This can easily be done by an usher.

It will be necessary for an air-conditioning engineer or your local heating contractor to determine for you the amount of air required under maximum conditions to do a good ventilating job, and then to have him mark on the damper adjustment the position of the damper for various quantities of air in ratio to various numbers of patrons in the theatre for a given period. In other words if only 300 people are in the theatre, you need only half as much air as when 600 people are in the theatre, and the damper should be choked off to a point of 50% of the maximum fresh air that can be brought in for ventilation.

There are numerous experiments going on by various research laboratories and firms engaged in the manufacturing of air-conditioning equipment, for the purpose of developing a means of automatically compensating for the amount of fresh air according to the occupancy of a given area. Probably before long this device will be available and when it is it will certainly pay for itself in the first months of operation in fuel saved in winter heating, and refrigeration saved in summer cooling.

The big thing to watch out for during the coming heating season is not to take any more air in for ventilation than you absolutely need under the given operating condition. Watch this closely and see how much fuel you will be able to save. You could actually afford to hire a man to manually operate your fresh air requirements, particularly in the larger theatres, and still be quite a bit ahead in money saved.

NEW HEATING UNITS

TWO NEW TYPES of unit heaters are the subjects of bulletins just issued by McQuay, Inc., manufacturers of high-quality heat transfer equipment. These units should be of interest to theatre men; they are not only well engineered, but at the same time embody design features which lend themselves well to architectural treatment.

One is a radial type that can be ideally placed behind proscenium walls with a return air duct built up behind, and a return air inlet grill at the floor line of the proscenium wall. By so placing these unit heaters the front section of the theatre can be effectively heated, and as we all know, due to the greater ceiling height at this point of the theatre, there is a tendency for cold air to settle down in this area. Exhibitors having such difficulty will find this unit particularly helpful in overcoming the problem.

The other is a downflow type for mounting on the ceiling, directing a warm blanket of air from overhead, providing a very simple and inexpensive means of heat distribution. It is a lot cheaper to pipe the heat to the units in the form of hot water than it is through the use of air in ducts leading to outlets, because you can move more Btu's of heat in a pound of water than in a pound of air. Hence this permits marked savings in heating costs. We would recommend the use of Anemostat aspirating air diffusing units in connection with these downflow unit heaters.

Also illustrated in the McQuay bulletins is the new all-purpose convectors which are ideal for heating lobbies, restrooms and ticket booths, to say nothing of keeping your office space comfortable.—C.F.B.

Air Supply System of 20th Century Theatre

THE TOWER dominating the facade of the 20th Century theatre in Cincinnati (described in the "Showplace" insert of this issue) houses the heating and cooling equipment, at the second floor. Cooling is by 55° well water, circulated through McQuay removable plug type transfer coils. Heating is by a Hook 10-section boiler. All outlets are ceiling type Anemostats. Special exhausts are placed at entrance doors to draw off cool air in winter, and a separate exhaust system, leading to outdoors, draws smoke from balcony, where smoking is permitted.

How Visual Angles Affect Image Size

• In the September issue, the author of this article presented methods of determining accurately proper arc capacity and image dimensions. Here he explains how seating distribution influences the picture size

By CHARLES E. SHULTZ

THE PRIMARY factor for determining the proper width of a motion picture screen image for any given viewing distance, is the capacity of the visual angle of the eye of the normal observer. It is necessary, therefore, to study the extremities of the visual angle, the minimum and maximum angles of perception in normal vision.

Figure 1 shows a schematic cross-section of the eye and illustrates the meaning of visual angle. As may be seen in the illustration, the eye is similar, in function, to a camera. Light enters the eye and falls upon the pupil, which functions as does the iris of a lens, limiting the amount of light. The light passing through the eye is refracted ("bent") in the same manner that a compound camera lens refracts light passing through it.

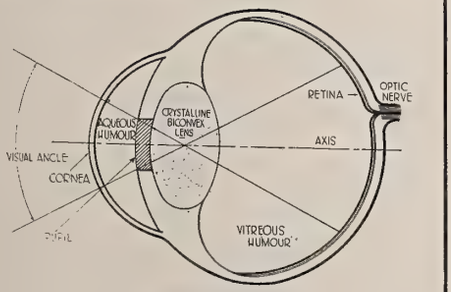

FIGURE 1

The refracted light falls upon the retina as an inverted, sharply focused image. The retina is, therefore, the photographic plate of the eye. The image falling upon the retina is transmitted to the brain by the optic nerve, where it is "developed" into an impression.

It is interesting to note that to spite the fact that we see an inverted image, our brain corrects this error subconsciously.

Unlike a camera, however, the crystalline biconvex lens of the eye is elastic and capable of compensation for various visual distances by changing its shape at the subconscious command of the brain. This is similar to the movement of the entire camera lens in relationship to the photographic plate in focusing for objects at various distances less than infinity. With this general understanding of the physical construction of the eye in mind, let us examine the lower threshold of visual angle.

WHEN VISION BEGINS

The lowest form of perception in the normal eye begins with its ability to distinguish space relationship. It is amazing to note that at a viewing angle greater than 1/21,600 part of a circle, or 1/60 of a degree, the eye can perceive space relationship; that is, it can see two points separately. In order to understand this more clearly, it is necessary to define this very small angle as a measured distance between two points which may be separately distinguished by the eye at a known viewing distance.

Let us assume a viewing distance of 100 feet and from this known distance determine the measurement for the distance between two points distinguishable by the human eye. With 100 feet as a radius, we may describe a circle about a point representing the nodal center of the eye (this is at the biconvex lens). The circumference of a circle is 6.2832 times the radius of the circle. Thus the circumference of a circle with a 100 feet radius will be $100 \times 6.2832 = 628.32$.

Every circle contains 360°, and every degree contains 60 minutes of angle. The product of the number of degrees in a circle times the number of minutes in a degree is the number of minutes of angle in a circle. Thus $360 \times 60 = 21{,}600$ minutes of angle in a circle. We have found the circumference of the circle to contain 628.32 feet, and we have found the same circle contains 21,600 minutes of angle, thus to find the length of the circumference in one minute of angle we must divide the length of the entire circumference by the total number of minutes of angle: $628.32 + 21{,}600 = .02908$ feet in one minute of angle. This is the distance between two points which may be separately distinguished by the normal eye.

As this distance is more clearly understood when expressed in inches, let us multiply the distance found (.02908, or approximately three-tenths of a foot) by the number of inches in a foot: $12 \times .03 = .36$ inches. This is approximately one-third of an inch. Therefore, we have established a definite distance of separation between two points which the eye may separately perceive.

An equation for determining the measurement of separation for any two points at any viewing distance follows:

r = viewing distance

Circumference of circle equal to 6.2832 times radius.

M = total minutes of angle in circle

X = distance between two points separately distinguishable by normal eye

$$\frac{6.2832 \times r}{M} = X$$

For example, if r = 100, M = 21600, and X = distance between points, then—

or X = .02908 distance between points

$$\frac{6.2832 \times 100}{21600} = X; \text{ or } \frac{628.32}{21600} = X$$

or X = .02908 distance between points

WHEN VISION IS CLEAR

We have seen that the lowest point of perception of the human eye begins with space relationship, but at this viewing angle of 1 minute of angle the eye does not perceive detail or sharpness. The threshold for vision begins at 5 minutes of angle. This is the smallest visual angle at which the normal eye can distinguish detail. As this angle is exactly five times as great as the angle at which space relationship is distinguishable, we need only alter our equation for space relationship, to determine the size of the smallest object in which the eye perceives detail, as follows:

r = viewing distance
M = total minutes of angle in circle
f = number of minutes of visual angle required to distinguish detail
Z = width of object
Circumference = 6.2832 times radius.

$$\frac{\frac{6.2832 \times r}{M}}{f} = Z$$

For example, if r = 100 feet, M = 21600, f = 5 minutes of angle, and Z = width of object, then—

$$\frac{\frac{6.2832 \times 100}{21600}}{5} = Z; \text{ or } \frac{628.32}{4320} = Z;$$

or Z = .1455 feet width of object

Thus we find an object .1455 feet wide may be perceived with detail by the normal eye at 100 feet. To reduce this result to inches we multiply by 12: 12 × .1455 = 1.746 inches; this is about 1 3/4 inches.

MAXIMUM VIEWING ANGLES

It now becomes necessary to find the upper threshold of visual angle—that is, the greatest possible visual angle which the eye can receive at either side of a fixed point.

The facial features limit this maximum visual angle differently in the vertical plane (up and down) than in the horizontal plane (sidewise), so it is necessary to study each plane separately. Figure 2 shows the maximum visual angle for the normal right eye in both planes for white light. It is assumed that the eye is focused upon a fixed point, and the angles of vision are shown individually on each side of this central line of vision. Angles indicated by solid lines are in the horizontal plane—that is, vision to right and left. Angles indicated by broken lines are in the vertical plane, indicating vision up and down.

It may be seen that the visual angle for white light in the horizontal plane is more than 90° to the right from a fixed point for the right eye, but only 60° to the left. This condition is caused by the nose cutting down the left angle of vision.

In the vertical plane the visual angle from a fixed point is 70° down, but only 45° up. This is caused by the brows cutting down the upper angle of vision.

These maximum visual angles are for a white field. If a blue or yellow field is being observed, the maximum visual angle is 10° less in each direction than indicated for a white field. If a red or green field is under observation, the maximum visual angle is 20° less in each direction than that of a white field.

COMFORTABLE SCREEN VISION

Now that we have established the minimum and maximum visual angles possible with normal human eye, let us examine the recommended visual angles for comfortably viewing a motion picture screen. It becomes immediately apparent that a relationship between viewing distance and screen size is of utmost importance. Figure 3 shows the present recommended relationship between maximum and minimum viewing distance, and screen width.

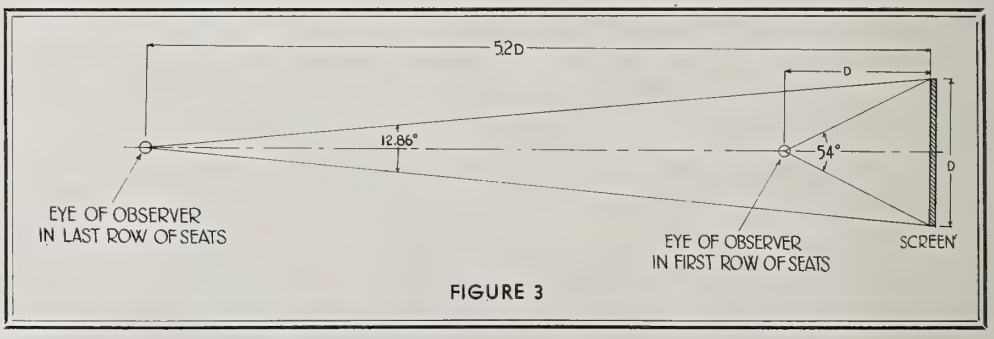

FIGURE 3

This ratio suggests that the longest distance be 5.2 times the width of the screen, and the shortest viewing distance be equal to the width of the screen.

This results in a minimum visual angle of 12.86°, maximum visual angle of 54°.

As may be seen from the foregoing study of the visual capacity of the normal eye, both of these angles are well suited to comfortable vision. It is particularly important that the shortest viewing distance be not less than this specification, for shortening this distance results in rapid increase in visual angle.

When the normal visual angle of the observer is unable to cover a field, it becomes necessary to move the eye about to scan the scene. Scanning of this type results in muscular fatigue if carried on continuously over an extended period of time.

In conclusion, the following out of the suggested recommendations for viewing distance and screen width will result in the visual comfort of patrons for all viewing distances, from minimum to miximum.

IT MUST SPARKLE!

Just as the performance of a football player must sparkle in order to rate consideration for "All American", so too, must the pictures on your screen today sparkle to rate a profitable box office.

To secure the desired screen brilliancy with present dense black and white and colored films, twice as much light is required as is possible to project by any low intensity lamp.

This necessary doubling in light is possible at an increased combined current and carbon cost of less than 2c per hour, with the low cost Strong Utility High Intensity Automatic Projector Arc Lamp.

Without the snow-white light such as is secured by this lamp it is impossible to show colored films satisfactorily. The light of your old low intensity will appear a dim, muddy yellow by comparison.

Increase your business by installing Strong Utility One-Kilowatt Arc Lamps now. Theatregoers readily recognize good projection and go where it is offered.

F. H. Richardson's COMMENT

Union Responsibility For Good Workmanship

FROM AN exhibitor in Missouri comes a letter complaining of the failure of unions to compel competence in its members. For obvious reasons I withhold my correspondent's name. I think his point of view merits serious consideration — the good of unionism itself as well as that of our industry. He writes:

F. H. R.

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have on many occasions noted the fact that projectionists pay a lot of attention to what you say. I therefore take the liberty of asking you to give the exhibitors of this city your help.

"The projectionists of our city all belong to the union. I have talked the matter contained in this letter over with the other managers, who all agree that much the same conditions confront them; that the nuisance is damaging and should be abated.

"I have for a long while been obliged to put up with miserable results both on the screen and in the sound, though when I say 'miserable' I mean as compared with what the projectionists might produce if they really took an interest in their work. There seems to be absolutely no necessity for these poor results; however, complaint to the business representative of the union seems to be merely a waste of energy. I have therefore decided upon this appeal to you—with which action all the other exhibitors agree—thinking an article from you might help. To state all our grievances is not necessary. Two will illustrate the conditions which we exhibitors regard as most unfair.

"(A) Exhibitors all have a rule, which seems both right and fair, but which is almost wholly disregarded, that both projectionists shall be on duty at least 30 minutes before opening time of the show. This rule is consistently ignored. Instead, one man usually unlocks and enters the projection room barely in time to thread one projector, trim one lamp and start the show on time—and occasionally a minute or two late. The other man, as a rule though not always, comes strolling in anywhere up to ten minutes later.

"Reporting the matter to the business representative of the union does little or no good. To discharge one or both of the men mean a first-class row with the union, through its representative; then a little better service for a week or two—maybe.

"(B) On several occasions I have found as many as three girls in the projection room at one time. Mr. Richardson, can you advise me how I can put a stop to such outrageous things? Discharging of men does not help. The union has just enough projectionists in town to man the projection rooms, plus two extra men—and many of our patrons belong to other unions. I don't know that you will be able to do anything to help us, but if you can we will certainly be highly appreciative."

I do not think that the major figures in the IA would overlook such flagrant violations of the necessary regulations of the business served by the IA. I have been identified with unionism in general, and with several specific unions, including the IA, long enough to feel certain of that. Unions cannot afford to be high-handed toward co-operative employers—at least for long. And unionism today has a position of greater responsibility than ever.

I have always held that the unions have been good for both projection and projectionists. At the same time, I have always held that as unions increase control over working conditions and wages, they increase their obligation to supply competent, conscientious workers. And certainly membership in a union cannot give the right to flaunt the accepted rules of the employer group—rules which are right and necessary by the very nature of things.

Practices That Defeat High Standard Policies

H. K. WHITAKER, projectionists of the Madison theatre in Madison, Tenn., comes forward with this timely protest:

"With keen interest I follow your various articles in BETTER THEATRES. Your advice is presented in such understandable form that projectionists can always apply it in practice. I take this opportunity to express my views on film mutilation so very often encountered.

"I have had eleven years of practical experience as a projectionist. The Madison theatre is a large suburban house with a second-run policy. We enjoy an excellent patronage, composed for the most part of business and professional men and their families, who demand the utmost in picture presentation, therefore the ugly face of film mutilation brings repercussions, and how!

"We present prints from 30 to 60 days from their release date. By the time we receive them the cues are very often either entirly gone, or so damaged that they are almost entirely useless. Very often there are grease pencil marks reaching as far as 25 frames. To me this represents downright sloppy, careless and entirely unnecessary film mutilation. In each case the standard cue marks are intact, therefore the pencil marks are obviously the work of some careless, indifferent machine operator who was too damn lazy to watch for the regular cue marks!

"You are quite right when you say that no projectionist would be guilty of such abuse to what is now a respected and respectable calling or, if you please, profession. Any one guilty of so doing is working deliberate injury upon a great industry, as well as upon the public.

"I, for one, am opposed to the use of any kind of cue marker, be it a pencil, or what have you? For every one of such potential film mutilators in the hands of competent men who use them carefully and with discretion, there are many more in use by incompetent, lazy, indifferent, careless film butchers. But what can we do in the face of indifferent exchanges which often demand of their inspectors that they handle entirely too much footage for even halfway decent results?

"As this is my first letter to you, Brother Richardson, I will say that I own all your Bluebooks of Projection. Projection is

Suggestions on Green Emulsion and Threading

FROM Elmer Bryant, projectionist of Brevard, N. C., comes the following suggestions regarding new prints on which the emulsion still is soft enough to adhere to the tension shoes: I suggest the addition of a small percentage of some sort of lubricant to the emulsion before it is applied to the film—glycerine, in minute amount of course, or some other suitable inert substance, or a search might be made for something else that would do the trick without injury to pictorial results.

"I know that film is coated in wide strips and afterward split into film-width strips. Considering the enormous amount of damage done by releasing prints for theatre service before the emulsion is thoroughly dry, it would seem good policy that some standard of emulsion hardness be required prior to release of prints for theatre service.

"I would certainly like to help the projectionist whose letter appeared in a recent issue, with no name or address attached, who is having trouble with his change-overs, due to his projectors picking up speed too rapidly. I think this is because he does not use the cues properly. Perhaps a description of the method I use with satisfactory results, might fit, solve his difficulty, and there will be no extra cue marks required. Incidentally, from the number of cue marks found on prints, there are many others this bit of information might help. Here it is:

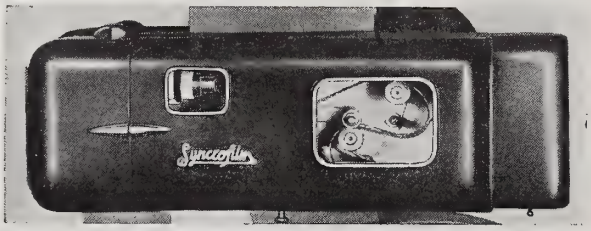
"Thread on the Start frame in order to have the 5 feet to make sure the film is tracking properly. Certainly any projectionist can ascertain the proper number of frames to run down to make the proper lap of 6 inches; also the proper number of frames can be determined by experiment, regardless of pick-up speed. There is, or should be 12 feet of film for this purpose, though judging from the number and location of cue marks often found, some projectionists must be using a system other than that just described. Another thing, where it seems necessary, I make note of the action, wording or of the beginning and ending of preceding title to cue by, rather than scratch cue marks on the film itself.

"One more suggestion and I'm through—for this time anyhow: In mounting shorts, previews, etc., I make the splice toward the end of the leader and thus avoid cutting out two frames each time. A splice can, as you all know, be made in four different positions, as long as there are four sprocket holes between the frame lines. Can you not all see the advantage in so doing?"

I'm sure we are all very grateful to Brother Brayant for his constructive suggestions. They show the right spirit, toward both his work and his colleagues.

Self-Monitoring Control Amplifier in a Suitcase

THEODORE P. HOVER of Lima, Ohio, a projectionist who spends his spare (?) time in lecturing and inventing, writes:



"At the present time I am bending most of my energy to the construction of an electronic control amplifier to take with me when I do lecture work. It will have two speakers which will fit in a small overnight bag, and the amplifier itself will provide for three microphone channels, a regular and an emergency channel amplifier, a tone control which will permit variation of both high's and low's, with the automatic feature so designed that if I turn away from the amplifier or lower my voice beyond a certain point it will automatically bring it up to a satisfactory volume. In other words, no monitor engineer will be required.

"This entire amplifier, including an oscilloscope for checking hum pickup, will go into a small airplane luggage case about 18x 24x8 inches. It will give satisfactory voice reinforcement in auditoriums up to 4,000 seats. It is not a new invention, of course, but merely an instance of some very careful engineering and workmanship."

One Way to Assure Steady Framing Light

FROM OUR good friend, Gilbert R. LaPoint, projectionist at the Strand theatre in Westboro, Mass., comes an interesting little trick for providing framing light. He writes:

"Dear F. H.: Concerning those pesky framing lamps which are always burning just when you are all out of spare bulbs: On our projectors, with 6-watt framing lamps, we found that this trouble was due to vibration and insufficient filament support in the framing light bulbs. After experimentation I found the trouble could be overcome by inserting a resistance of 250 ohms and 10-watt capacity in series with the line plug."

This resistance develops very little heat and may be wrapped with rubber and friction tape. This treatment gives enough light for framing and those bulbs will last a long while. The resistor may be purchased at any radio store for a few cents.

Further Recognition of The Term "Projectionist"

AN AMUSING, and not unimportant, situation arose the other day when a Jackson, Mich., projectionist wrote, saying, "I wish to register a complaint against a Detroit, Mich., publisher of city directories who contrary to modern procedure, lists motion picture projectionists as 'film operators.' The directories put out by this publisher cover several cities."

Well, I thought I would drop that publisher a line reporting that complaint, just to see what reaction I would get. Here is the reply, trimmed to set forth essential facts only:

"Dear Sir: We appreciate very much your having called our attention to the fact that the occupation heretofore indicated as 'Film Operator' is unsatisfactory; that 'Projectionist' is preferable. However, we find it very difficult to make an immediate change. There are directories now in process of formation which are at a stage which make the proposed change impractical. In the future, however, the occupation now listed as film operator will appear as 'Projectionist.' We appreciate your having called the matter to our attention and assure you of our desire to co-operate."

That is courteous and considerate attention, isn't it?

When to Replace Projector Sprockets

GEORGE L. DAVIS of St. Louis, Mo., writes, "I would appreciate your telling me just how I can assert with authority that my intermittent and other projector sprockets should be renewed? At this time the intermittent sprockets of both projectors are quite worn (the teeth I mean, of course), but all the manager will say when I suggest installing new ones is, 'Oh, they're all right." Another thing, too, if you don't mind: How much wear is permissible on the teeth of the other sprockets?"

The public today is likely to avoid a theatre in which the screen image perceptibly jumps, weaves from side to side, or has other definite faults, and each avoidance costs the theatre money. Each movement of the film out of place by even so little as 1/100 of an inch, up, down or sidewise, will be quite visible to the audience.

What will cause the next film image not to register precisely where the last one did?

Wrong joining of film splices and worn sprocket hole edges are probably the most common offenders. Next comes bits of material adhering to the face of the sprocket rim. There are other possible causes, but these are the most frequent ones.

As to renewal of intermittent sprockets, I know of no rule that has been generally approved up to this time for the amount of wear that calls for their renewal. When the picture ceases to be steady, it surely is time that new sprockets be installed.

All sprockets should be replaced as soon as there is any sign of "hooking," because not only does hooking disturb the registration of the picture at the aperture plate in the case of the intermittent sprocket, but also when sprockets become hooked they present a fire hazard. Film can be properly handled by sprockets only where the area of contact at the sprocket holes is undamaged.

I am of the opinion that it is about time that some recommendation, approaching the character of a rule, be developed for guidance as to when intermittent sprockets should be replaced. Naturally, not every projectionist would follow this rule, especially when the management would not permit them to. At the same time, if a recommendation having the authority of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers could be established, it would be adhered to in many theatres, while in others projectionists would have a good basis on which to approach the management on the matter.

What Projection Is And What It Takes

JACK PRATER, of the Congress theatre in Palouse, Wash., has been having some practical experience with the difference between knowing projection fundamentally and superficially. He tells about it in the following letter:

"This has been an unusually busy summer for me. Three projectionists left our service, one for military training and two for what they deemed more desirable positions, so I've been busy training new men (perhaps I should say new boys, since they are all young). Working with these newcomers brings to mind something which you have tried to establish for many years—the difference between an operator and a projectionist.

"It was not difficult to train these young men to operate the equipment according to a carefully prepared and well established routine of turning switches on and off, handling controls, and threading film into the projectors. Unfortunately, the lack of time made it necessary to teach them these things first, then to add the fundamentals later, a proceedure directly opposite to what is proper and good. It is analogous to teaching students to fly before teaching them to land the plane!—except that in the one case the student gets the worst of it, whereas in projection the theatre patron is the one abused—and how!

"With all equipment in good condition, properly adjusted and running smoothly, the light source what it should be and properly adjusted, with proper amperage and the various adjustments watched constantly and kept as they should be, given clean film with all splices well and properly made, there should, as a result, be as good a show as can be produced with what the projectionist has been given to work with.

"If everything that must be done is planned in advance, if all those various things be given proper attention at exactly the proper time, those young men will produce a reasonably good show. Quite naturally, however, they quickly acquire an idea that the projectionist's job is a pushover. It is not the regular routine work that stumps these youngsters; answers to the easily anticipated problems have been made available, all nicely predigested. But after all those answers have small value unless the student understands why they are the correct answers, and how to cypher the problem out for himself. Unless he does know, every time a new problem confronts him he must again consult a book or ask someone to solve it for him. Which reminds me of my late High school teacher of mathematics. He would grade students on a basis of 5% for correct solutions, plus 95% for correct explanation of the why's and wherefore's of obtaining the answer.

"Almost anyone, with just a little practice, can become an operator. To become a competent motion picture projectionist, however, is quite another matter. A man is a projectionist only when he has mastered all those fundamentals contained in the Bluebook of Projection, and how to apply properly that knowledge to the conditions with which he is confronted from time to time. There is no short-cut that can successfully replace acquired knowledge backed up by practical experience.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEMS

CONVENIENT means of keeping daily and periodic accounts, receipts and expense records, tax data, film service cost and insurance figures are available in simplified bookkeeping systems especially designed for the average theatre. One system, with a set of sheets covering a year, makes provisions for all types of taxes now applying to theatres.

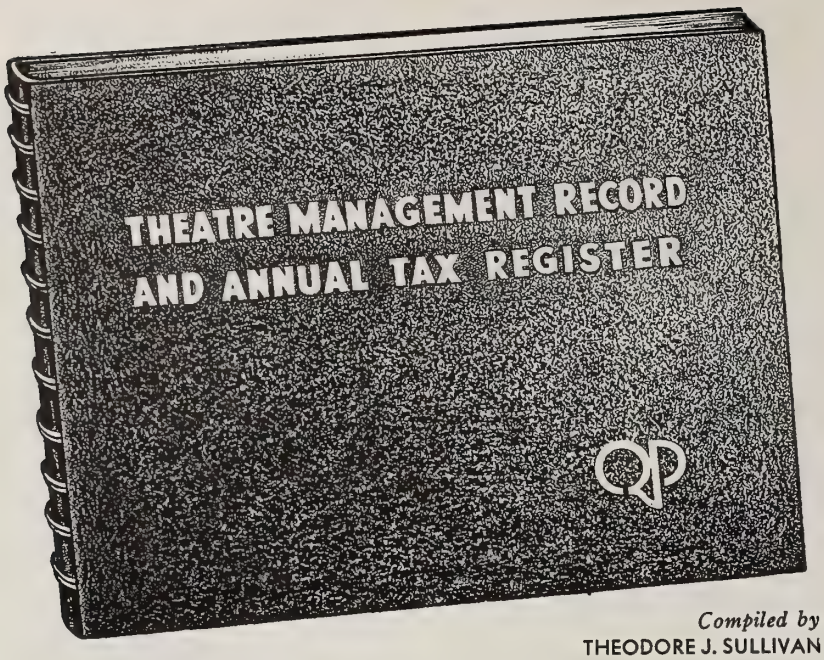
ACOUSTICAL PRODUCTS AND ENGINEERING

THE ENTIRE sound transmission system of the theatre is to be regarded as including the auditorium itself, the acoustical character of which bears directly and fundamentally upon the naturalness of the sound to all of the audience.



Acoustic characteristics can be controlled by the architectural design of the auditorium; the designer, however, is often limited by other considerations (even in a new building, notably by site, capacity and desired style), necessitating general or partial recourse to acoustic-correction materials.

Such materials may be divided into two general groups: Materials which are concealed, and those which have decorative qualities of their own. Acoustic treatment properly takes note of the entire range of available sound frequencies, hence the use of more than one type of material is sometimes advisable, since some are more efficient as absorbents of low frequencies than of the high frequencies, while others have contrary characteristics.

These materials are available in various forms and substances. Those most frequently used in motion picture theatre auditoriums are vegetable fiber and mineral tiles, rock wool and felt blanket, pressed wood veneers, and acoustic plaster (which latter may be tinted in mixing so as to eliminate painting). Ornamental fabrics are commonly applied over those materials which (like rock wool) are not decorative, but perforated tiles may also be used. Before painting any materials, the manufacturer, or competent acoustics engineers, should be consulted so as to make certain that the absorption efficiency be not too greatly reduced.

The decorative acoustic materials are also well adapted to the finishing of foyer and lounge areas that are immediately off the auditorium, where noise reduction may be importantly indicated.

AIR-CONDITIONING AND VENTILATING EQUIPMENT

AIR-CONDITIONING facilities consist in means of controlling automatically the temperature and relative humidity of the air, and of distributing the air so that it reaches all breathing zones at a temperature, percentage of relative humidity, and rate of motion representing comfortable and healthful atmospheric conditions for normal people. Dust, pollen and other particles suspended in the fresh air should also be filtered out before it is introduced into the distribution system.

All-year air-conditioning of course signifies equipment providing mechanical control of temperature and relative humidity of the distributed air no matter what the condition of the air may be outdoors.

SUMMER AIR-CONDITIONING

For summer air-conditioning, some measure of mechanical refrigeration is usually indicated; however, in areas of low relative humidity, a cooling-tower evaporative system may be employed, while well water (rarely water from city mains) may be used as the cooling agent for coils over which the air is passed, if a sufficient quantity of water at a low enough temperature (maximum 55°) is available.

A method designed to reduce the mechanical refrigeration capacity that would otherwise be necessary, is that of storage refrigeration, by which a relatively small compressor is operated a large part of the day to "build up" the air-cooling agent to a quantity sufficient for the load during performance hours.

The self-contained units of the general type used in stores and similar spaces (filters, mechanical refrigeration plant and fan equipment housed in a cabinet) are adapted to the summer air-conditioning of small auditoriums and several units of suitable capacity can be combined to serve medium-sized auditoriums, though it is commonly found that the distribution requirements of the latter advise other methods.

AIR DISTRIBUTION

Distribution systems for the air-conditioning of theatres practically always consist in ducts with fans of proper capacity, and outlets, or grilles, providing control of air motion.

Fans—those of the multi-blade ("squirrel-cage") type are usually preferable—must be of a capacity and design to move the required amount of air against the resistance of the duct system, with the least expenditure of electric current, and without transmission of noise to the auditorium and other rooms. Air outlets should be of a design to assure thorough mixing of cooled air with room air before it is allowed to descend to the breathing zone.

AIR CLEANSING

Filtering equipment, which is installed as part of an air-conditioning system but which usually needs to be replaced from time to time, is of various types. Some filters use spun-glass fibers, some steel wool, others paper, hogs' hair, wood shavings, etc. The filtering material is held in a frame which is inserted into the duct or intake. Filters of this type are thrown away and replaced with a new one as the accumulation of dirt requires. Also available, however, is a self-cleaning type of air-filtering device, but it is seldom adapted in price to theatre installation. (See also Air Purification, Electric.)

CONTROL EQUIPMENT

Efficient operation of an air-conditioning plant requires dependable automatic control specifically adapted to the operating characteristics of the plant. Control equipment available ranges from a simple cut-in for a single compressor to a motor-operated monitoring cabinet inter-relating all operating elements of the system, including the heating plant.

Two accessory instruments of value in theatre operation should be cited here. One is the recording thermometer, which provides continuous temperature readings automatically transcribed on paper, thus permitting the development of a "log" for guidance in determining load requirements and other operating factors.

The other is an "Effective Temperature" thermometer (marketed under the trade name of "Therhumiter"), which ingeniously combines response to the temperature of the air, moisture in the air, and the motion of the air so as to give a direct reading of their relative and aggregate effect upon the comfort conditions of the air, which reading is that of "Effective Temperature"—that is, the true temperature from the point of view of comfort. It thus eliminates the calculation necessary with dry-bulb and wet-bulb thermometers to determine what the Effective Temperature is, and it also provides a simple means of determining the percentage of relative humidity.

[The functions of air-conditioning and air distribution equipment and systems, their critical factors and operating considerations, etc., form too broad a subject for comprehensive discussion here; they have been, and are being, constantly dealt with in special and departmental articles in BETTER THEATRES.]

SIMPLE VENTILATION

Simple ventilation of theatres requires blower equipment of suitable capacity to draw in the fresh air and propel it through ventilators (normally located adjacent to the proscenium arch or screen opening), plus any direct draft exhaust fans and duct contacts with the outside (as from toilet rooms) that the structural plan of the building may require. The blower equipment of course is of importance; it should be of a capacity to ensure the required supply of fresh air, be durably built, and be quiet in operation.

A simple ventilation system may provide air cooling for an auditorium by passing the outside air through a cold-water spray chamber (air washer evaporative cooling). This also cleanses the air.

A simple and relatively inexpensive method of reducing odors in the air is that of ozone generators. Ozone is a specific, unstable form of oxygen which, upon breaking down, oxidizes impurities in the air, including many forms of bacterial life. Ozone generators for theatres, which are of electrical discharge type, are available in various sizes, suited to lounges, toilet rooms and to installation in air ducts.

AMPLIFIERS

AN AMPLIFIER, as part of a sound reproducing system, is the arrangement in an electrical unit (panel or cabinet) of electronic relays (see Amplifying Tubes) with suitable controls.

Amplifiers today contain their own power supplies, needing only connection with an a.c. or d.c. power line, and dispensing with all auxiliary batteries, generators or rectifiers; and in addition commonly supply polarizing voltage to photocells, and sometimes current to exciter lamps and loudspeaker fields. Modern preamplifiers and monitor amplifiers commonly draw this operating power from some other amplifying unit of the sound system.

Very small, low-power amplifiers may be mounted on the projector or on the wall of the projection room, deriving their operating power from the main amplifier. They provide preliminary amplification of the weak photocell current before it reaches the main amplifier.

Amplifier arrangements in a small theatre may consist in a single, compact, combination amplifying and power supply unit mounted on the projection room front wall, between projection ports; or alternatively, of such a combination unit plus a small pre-amplifier which receives the initial current from the photo-cell. In larger systems, a number of amplifying network and power supply units are mounted on a steel rack or frame, or in a steel cabinet, which is located at the rear or one end of the projection room, or occasionally built into the wall dividing the projection room from another room of the projection suite. Medium and large-size systems today include a separate monitor amplifier-speaker cabinet, often suspended from the projection room ceiling by steel straps. The monitor amplifier is sometimes self-powered; sometimes, like the photo-cell amplifier, derives its operating current from the larger system amplifier.

Volume control and sound changeover equipment is today commonly associated with the photo-cell pre-amplifier.

Modern amplifiers or amplifying racks are often equipped with decibel meters for accurate measurement of sound output and quick servicing. Emergency amplifiers may be exact duplicates of the normal amplifying system, or smaller, less elaborate apparatus, and in some systems the monitor amplifier is utilized to supply sound to the audience in an emergency.

ARCHITECTURAL MATERIALS AND DESIGN SERVICE

PROGRESS IN chemistry and in manufacturing technique have made available a wide variety of decorative materials to supplement or supplant the familiar marble, stone, brick, ceramic tiles, etc., to which facade architecture was formerly largely restricted. Glass and the plastics known as phenolics are now obtainable in a great variety of colors, and also in patterns.

Porcelain-enameled metal is now well adapted to the creation of colorful fronts; it may be obtained in plates for facing, or attached to concrete masonry blocks. Concrete blocks are also available with facing of architectural glass.

Architectural glass can be had in both facing tiles and structural blocks. The tiles offer a complete selection of colors and a number of patterns (some of them simulating marble). Glass blocks are also available in colors and patterns; they are not only adapted to the construction of architectural features like towers and window effects (admitting light, but assuring privacy), but also to interior partitions. Translucent glass blocks lend themselves to interesting luminous treatments.

Mirrors, in large panel effects (sectional or otherwise) as well as in smaller sizes of various shapes, are effective decorative elements while at the same time contributing a sense of spaciousness. Glass murals provide a striking embellishment of a wall in color abstract or pictorial designs.

For treatment of doors, pilasters, display case framing, and also ticket booth and vestibule finish, a phenolic like Formica provides a wide choice of colors and texture effects (while also having certain weather-proofing qualities). This material may be obtained with metal inlays for decorative relief, and also in a fluorescent type permitting luminescent pictorial and abstract patterns under "black light."

Fabric (usually cotton-rayon damask) is frequently used to conceal sound-absorbing blanket. Wall paper of the more durable types (such as Tekko and Salubra) merits consideration for limited areas, as do leatherette and linoleum. Then there are the tiles, wood veneers, and so on, many of them to be considered for their acoustic values as well as decorative qualities (see Acoustical Products and Engineering; also refer to Curtains and Drapes).

Lighting today is a principal source of decorative effect, by means of either built-in sources (coves, troughs, etc.) or fixtures, possibly employing several colors (commonly amber, blue, red or green, in addition to white) with circuits controlled to permit gradual mixing (see Dimmers). So-called "black light" also permits interesting decorative effects, such as glowing figures in darkened niches, or ornamental patterns picked out in fluorescent paint (see "Black Light" Materials and Lighting Equipment; also see Lamps, Incandescent for Theatre Lighting, and Lighting, Architectural and for Public Areas).

Statues and bas-reliefs based on classic, patriotic and other themes, are available in stock reproductions, many of them relatively inexpensive and well adapted to theatres of modern as well as traditional style.

"BLACK LIGHT" MATERIALS AND LIGHTING EQUIPMENT

"BLACK LIGHT" is the term popularly applied to the application of "radiant energy" that is not itself visible, to surfaces treated with certain chemicals which this energy causes to glow. It provides decorative effects of a character peculiarly associated with the theatre, and in addition has many utilitarian applications such as in connection with advertising matter, fluorescent carpet, etc.

Luminescent materials are found on the market today in the form of transparent lacquers, opaque lacquer enamels, dyes for carpets and other fabrics, inks, water colors, plastics, liquid solutions, etc. The materials in paint form may be readily applied with either brush or sprayer. A variety of colors are now obtainable.

The radiant energy required for "black light" effects is radiation in the near-ultarviolet region which extends from 3,200 Angstroms to the visible violet. This energy is not harmful to the eyes; it is only radiation shorter than 2,800 Angstroms appearing in quantity from which the eyes must be protected.

Mercury discharge lamps are best for "black light" effects. The type of lamp most proper depends upon the nature of the application. The latest types of lamps of capacity usually required for theatre applications are the Mazda 100-watt type known as the AH-4, BH-4, CH-4, and EH-4. The CH-4 and EH-4 are spot and flood lamps respectively of the projector type; they need no other reflector equipment as the bulb itself is an integral reflector hermetically sealed. The 250-watt type MAZDA AH-5 is also applicable for theatre use. Each of these lamps are available in connection with fixtures especially designed for various conditions of mounting as a unit including the transformer.

These lamps are all equipped with red-purple filter glasses such as Corning No. 587 to screen out the visible light. The amount of light in the visible region passed by the filters is so small that it is negligible in theatre uses.

Special types of lamp equipment for the application of "black light" sources are available in designs adapted to ceiling and wall decoration and to fluorescent carpeting (see Carpeting).

BOX OFFICES

ISLAND BOX offices, as well as those built into one side of the vestibule or lobby, are commonly built "on the job" from specifications of the architect or other designer of the front and extrance area; however, box offices may be obtained ready for erection, in styles, colors and materials to harmonize with the vestibule or lobby treatment. Architectural glass, glass structural blocks (which may be interestingly illuminated from behind), porcelain-enamelled metal, and some of the phenolics (synthetic materials), are prominent among the materials used today, often with chromium or stainless steel mouldings, and these materials are procurable cut to specifications.

CABINETS, FOR FILM AND CARBONS

REALLY FIREPROOF cabinets for film storage are essential accessories of the projection room if the protection required either by law or theatre operator's responsibility is to be provided both projectionists and patrons. With the 2,000-foot reel standard in the American film industry, film storage facilities should accommodate this size of reel in metal compartments that at least prevent the spread of fire from one compartment to another and reduce the effect of heat as a cause of combustion to a minimum.

The desired safety is provided by a sectional cabinet of relatively thick (approximately 1½ inches) steel walls insulated with fireproof material. Such cabinets are obtainable with or without vents (vents required by fire regulations in some communities) and with or without sprinkler heads inside.

A cabinet for carbons (wherever no suitable compartment is otherwise provided) is a convenient place to keep carbons. The carbons, while drying out, are out of the way so that breakage tends to be reduced. One cabinet will hold several hundred carbons (according to trim) and also provides a handy compartment for small tools.

CARBONS, PROJECTION

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using incandescent projection lamps). The type and size of carbons required depends upon the type of arc, and in this connection the reader is referred to the several articles in The Buyers' Index on projection lamps.

CARBON SAVERS

THESE DEVICES, which permit use of carbons down to a very short stub, consist in a metal rod that is clamped into the carbon jaws of the lamp house, one end of the rod being provided with means for holding a stub of carbon that is too short for use in the normal way. There are several methods of attaching the stub to the carbon saver, some of them permitting use of the carbon down to one inch.

CARPETING

TYPES OF carpeting suited to the heavy-duty requirements of theatres are (to name them alphabetically) Axminster (only in the finest grades, except possibly when used in small lounges), Broadloom, Chenille (an expensive weave feasible only in rare instances in which a superior carpet of special shape is absolutely required), Patent-Back (a special type consisting in Broadloom sections cut into desired shapes and colors and cemented in a pattern to a backing), Velvet (pattern dyed) and Wilton (pattern woven). The last two are the weaves most widely used in theatres because of their beauty of pattern, durability and relatively moderate price.

Carpeting today provides more than "softness under foot." It is an integral part of the interior treatment of the theatre, a critical element of the entire decorative scheme and the stimulating environmental effect sought. Dominant colors of the carpet should have a direct relation to the influential tones of the general color scheme of each carpeted division of the theatre. Pattern has similar references to the general decorative scheme, harmonizing with it in style, strengthening it in configuration. Traditional patterns are frequently as well adapted to modern-style interiors as patterns specifically modern (or modernistic); many traditional decorative devices, in fact, have been used in modernized versions to effect carpet patterns adapted to both modern and traditional designs.

Theatres are frequently carpeted in a single pattern, but consideration should be given to the advisability of using another design, or a plain Broadloom, or the same design in a smaller scale, for areas like lounges, which differ greatly in size and function from foyers and standee areas.

Carpeting which goes considerably beyond the usual function of carpeting is that in which are used dyes having a high degree of luminescence under a near-ultra-violet light (see Black Light Materials and Lighting Equipment). All or part of the pattern may be so woven with luminescent yarns so as to glow, when properly lighted with invisible "black light." In aisles, fluorescent carpeting, as it is called, not only contributes to the visible decorative scheme during the performance, but provides an illuminated aisle without the use of aisle lights in chair standards. Additionally, fluorescent carpeting is well adapted to some standee areas, and here the pattern may be given a directional effect, guiding traffic to the aisle heads, and also to lounges if the latter are immediately off this area. In weave and in maintenance, fluorescent carpeting does not differ from non-fluorescent carpeting adapted to theatres (see Black Light Materials and Lighting equipment).

CARPET LINING

THEATRE CARPETING should always be laid over pads made for the purpose. Such lining does not merely add to the resilience, therefore the feeling of luxury, of the carpeting; it definitely reduces the wear of the carpet, thus representing a substantial saving in carpeting costs.

There are three general types of carpeting lining: (1) All-jute, or vegetable fibre; (2) hair and jute combined; and (3) All-hair. The latter is made of animal hair, which will not burn (it will singe only), is very durable (a well made all-hair lining will usually outwear the carpeting itself), and does not deteriorate from the effect of moisture. The hair-and-jute type is serviceable according to the amount of hair in it, while the all-jute type is the least desirable in the theatre.

CHAIR CUSHIONS OF FOAMED LATEX

CUSHIONS FOR auditorium chair seats and backs (or other chairs, settees, etc.) are obtainable in a pourous material made from the milk of the rubber tree and referred to as foamed latex. Such cushions take the place of padding and coil springs, the fabric being fitted directly over them.

This material may be moulded to fit any chair dimensions or design formation. Except for hollow cores, the cushion appears solid, but actually has access to air throughout its structure (there are over a quarter of a million interconnecting air pores to the cubic inch), thus the cushion is completely self-ventilating. Foamed latex cushions are vermin-repellent.

For foyer and lounge furniture, foamed latex cushions are available in standard sizes calculated to fit nearly all chairs, settees, etc. They may be obtained through upholsterers or from jobbers.

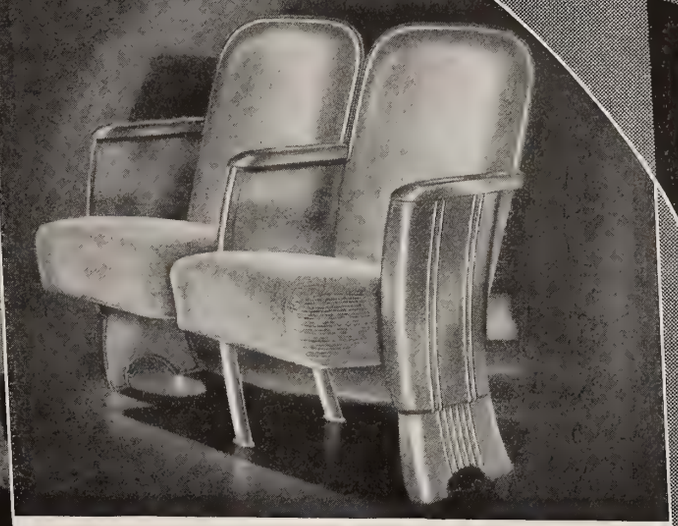
CHAIRS, AUDITORIUM



AUDITORIUM CHAIRS best suited to the motion picture theatre are those manufactured from designs developed specifically to meet the conditions encountered in film theatre operation. Prior types were modifications of the "opera chair" of the stage theatre. Today's motion picture theatre chair comprehensively represents new designing to provide luxurious comfort, protection of person, quiet hinge operation, durability under severe usage, and beauty of line, strengthening the whole seating assembly in its contribution to the decorative character of the semi-dark auditorium—achieving these qualities, furthermore, within a price range making all of them essentially accessible even to small, low-budget theatres.

Chairs may be obtained with seat cushions of box-spring or spring-edge type; or with no-sag springs, alone or in combination with coil springs (the no-sag springs absorbing the shock of initial tension imparted to the coils); and with combination coil and Marshall Springs construction. The backs may of course be either of spring or padded type, and here it should be noted that the choice affects the row spacing, spring back cushions being substantially thicker than padded backs. Also available is a type of chair having a retracting, or push-back, seat, designed to facilitate passage between rows. While end standards may be obtained in special designs, regular models offer a wide choice of patterns, which may be readily executed in colors suggested by the color scheme of the auditorium. Arm rests may be of wood or plastic, in "blonde" shades enhancing visibility.

Acoustic considerations (each chair should represent approximately the sound-absorption of a person, so that the capacity factor affecting volume is fairly constant) demand a fully upholstered chair.

Today there is extensive adoption of soft fabrics (mohair, velour, corduroy), which is often confined to the backs, simulated leather being employed for the seats (except possibly the sides of the seat cushions).

To meet the higher standards of comfort applied today, 20 inches may be generally regarded as minimum for chair width. While widths of 24 inches have been used on occasion, it is probably true that widths of 21 or 22 inches provide better support for the average person and therefore are actually more comfortable for most people. CHANGE MAKERS

OCCUPYING LITTLE space in the box office, modern change making machines prevent annoying errors in offering change to a patron and loss to the theatre through mistakes. The correct change is automatically determined upon manipulation of the proper keys, and is delivered into a metal cup, from which it is easily scooped. Not only greater accuracy, but greater speed in handling a line of patrons make change-makers a box office requisite.

For attachment to change makers without such provisions, where admission taxes in pennies are added to the regular price, a penny chute is available. It is clamped to the side of the change-maker and holds about 150 pennies.

CHANGEOVER AND CUEING DEVICES

SWITCHING out one picture projector while switching in the other may be accomplished in various ways according to the several types of devices available. The electrical type in general, performing its functions at the touch of a switch (either foot or hand), cuts off the light by a shutter arrangement while opening and closing the alternative circuits. There is also a mechanical device which merely cuts off the light at one projection port while opening the other port.

One mechanism that employs the port cutoff method of light interruption, is electrically operated and includes circuit switching means. One of the electrical changeovers cutting off the light at the aperture also provides for closing the speaker circuit, if this is desired. Yet another electrical device cuts off the light by a dissolving shutter mechanism in front of the projection lens.

Several types of changeover time indicators are available, including reel-end alarm bells actuated by the takeup. There is also an indicator not attached to the projection mechanism which operates an alarm bell actuated by a clock mechanism that is preset according to a running time dial.

Marking of cue signals on film is not approved of (Standard Release Prints have necessary cues when in proper condition); however, for those emergency occasions when cueing the print is deemed unavoidable, there is a simple marking device that presses small circles into the film with minimum damage.

CLEANING MATERIALS AND IMPLEMENTS

CLEANLINESS THROUGHout the public areas of the theatre, and at the front exterior as well, is of course imperative at all times, and to reduce the time and labor cost of maintenance are many cleaning and sanitation aids (see also Cleaning Mechanisms, and Deodorants and Perfumes).

The list of such products is a long one; to be regarded as more or less essential for the convenient and effective maintenance of the theatre are a variety of brushes, including those adopted to the cleaning of corners, behind projecting structural elements, etc.; corn brooms, mops and mop pails with dryers (a rubber mop is also available with a squeezing device incorporated in the design); soft dusting and polishing rags, deck brushes for washing rubber mats, terrazzo, etc.; neutral soap and detergents, sweeping compound for floors beneath seating, wood and metal polish, carbon tetrachloride, and gum remover. So that patrons themselves may help to keep the theatre clean, sand urns for cigarette butts, gum wrappers, etc., should be judiciously distributed throughout the lobby, foyer, lounges and standee area.

In connection with cleaning compounds, care should be used to assure use of a compound which requires the least amount of time and will not injure the surface.

For the partial or complete cleaning of carpeting and other fabrics from time to time (that is, dry shampooing, as distinguished from daily vacuum cleaning), a soapless lather is available, which may easily be applied with a rubber mop or similar implement; drying requires but an hour or two. A powder is also obtainable for carpet and fabric cleaning; this is sprinkled on small areas at a time and brushed in, then after a few hours, when the fabric is entirely dry, the residue can be removed with a brush-type vacuum attachment.

For keeping sidewalks free of snow without manual removal, calcium chloride may be sprinkled over the sidewalk when the snow begins to fall. This is available under various trade names.

Safety ladders are also to be considered among cleaning as well as equipment servicing accessories (see Ladders, Safety).

CLEANING MECHANISMS

ECONOMICAL AND safe cleaning of theatre carpeting, drapes, seating fabrics, etc., require regular and frequent application of vacuum cleaning equipment. Carpeting, for example, should be vacuum-cleaned daily. Vacuum cleaners may be used for other cleaning jobs around the theatre, such as blowing dust from out-of-the-way places, drying wet floors and carpeting, and so on.

Theatres really require heavy-duty vacuum cleaning equipment. Ordinary domestic type cleaners are useful as auxiliary equipment, particularly in theatres not having a central system piped to all areas, but they have neither the endurance nor the suction demanded by theatre cleaning.

Of the heavy-duty equipment, two types may be regarded as specifically adapted to theatre work. One is the central system, with pipes leading to outlets so placed as to provide access at least to all public areas of the theatre. The other is a portable type, with power plant, suction mechanism and dirt disposal equipment on rollers, to which equipment the hose is attached. Portable models are available with motor and suction devices detachable, to be used as a hand unit. Theatres require a hose length on portable models of not less than 20 feet, and this may be provided in two sections, if desired, 10-foot lengths being connected by a brass coupling. Nozzles and brush attachments are available with both central and portable types for every kind of dry pick-up, and also for wet pickup. In portable units, the mechanism, with attached dust bag, should not weigh over 50 pounds so as to be conveniently carried on stairs and in seating area.

CONDENSERS (LENSES)

THE PROJECTION condenser is located between the lamp house and the projector, and serves to focus the light on the aperture. It serves a similar purpose in spotlight projection. The condenser is a single glass lens, unmounted, made in various shapes—moon shape, plan-o-convex, bi-convex and meniscus. The diameters of projection condensers range from 2¼ to 7¼ inches; of spotlight condensers, from 5 to 8 inches. Focal lengths for theatre work runs from 6½ to 9½ inches.

SMOOTH AND silent opening and closing of curtains are effected, either from backstage or from the projection room, by automatic machines that operate at the touch of a button. The curtain may be stopped at any point along the stage, or its motion reversed as desired.

Also obtainable is a slack-rope takeup device designed to eliminate slackness of curtain ropes and cables, with attendant whipping and starting jerk.

CURTAINS AND STAGE DRAPES

CURTAINS USUALLY required for motion picture theatres in which stage performances are not regularly presented, are of the traveller type made up in such fabrics as velour. Asbestos fireproof proscenium-opening curtains are required in some States and all the larger cities in theatres having full stage facilities.

Drapes are commonly indicated for the sides, and across the top of the proscenium opening; the extent to which they are needed is of course dependent upon the design of the proscenium area. Velours are indicated for such drapes also, but rayon-cotton mixtures and similar fabrics are also suitable.

Companies capable of supplying these materials are also excellent sources of drapes for other parts of the theatre.

DEODORANTS AND PERFUMES

IN THEATRES not having facilities for contending with sources of disagreeable odors that cannot readily be eradicated, the use of perfumes especially prepared for such conditions is often indicated. Among products of this type available are liquid perfumes to be sprayed before and between performances; powders that may be placed in ornamental wall holders made of porous material; and also highly aromatic pellets, which are placed in a small receptacle that clasps on an incandescent lamp, the heat from the lamp evaporating the perfume oil in the pellet. All of these perfumes are obtainable in a wide variety of odors.

THESE ELECTRO-MECHANICAL devices for controlling stage and auditorium illumination permit fading out of any desired set of lights and fading in of others. They are necessary to the gradual changing of color tones in auditorium lighting, and to the production of stage lighting effects commonly desired; in addition, they are highly desirable for raising or lowering house lighting before and after performances.

DISPLAY FRAMES, POSTER

POSTER FRAMES built to desired size and in plain or moulded styles, are available in extruded aluminum, in decorative natural wood finish, and in metal-on-wood (kalamein). Extruded aluminum frames cost most (about 75% more than natural wood), but they require practically no maintenance, are not affected by normal settling of the building wall, and last indefinitely.

All-wood frames are obtainable in natural grains (such as walnut and bleached mahogany), with or without a protective coat of clear lacquer; and in common wood lacquered in desired color.

Kalamein frames may be had with finish in stainless steel, chromium, aluminum, bronze and other metals, also in a phenolic, such as Formica.

Poster frames of all types are available complete with frames mounted on veneer case ready for installation in wall recess (the most desirable method) or on the surface of the wall.

EXPLOITATION MECHANISMS

VARIOUS DEVICES are available for the presentation of scenes from a current attraction or special advertising stills or motion pictures in the vestibule or lobby of the theatre, or in stores and other locations for which suitable arrangements can be made. The simplest type provides for the automatic display of a series of stills or advertising cards.

More impressive is the showing of motion pictures by means of an automatic projector mounted for the rear projection of advance trailers or other advertising films on a small screen. Such equipment may be obtained either with or without sound reproduction facilities.

Posters can be quickly and conveniently made, often by persons of little or no training in poster art, with the aid of a poster projetcor, which enlarges exploitation material, such as that in press books and other accessories, on the poster sheet, in the original colors, and the image may be readily sketched or painted in.

FOUNTAINS

MODERN PRACTICE with respect to both design and operating costs give no place in the theatre, ordinarily, to the purely decorative fountain (which once was a part of statuary displays, effecting "garden pools," etc.). Theatre fountains today are essentially drinking fountains, though they may be and commonly are decorative enough. The simplest types are white or tinted porcelain-finished pedestals or wall bowls. The wall types may of course be incorporated into a built-in decorative feature of tiles, or architectural glass, or a mirror; indeed, such ornamental fountain schemes are available in stock designs, complete with decorative lighting provisions, and they are procurable as well complete with bubbler or faucet, and even with so-called "magic-eye" mechanism (See Photoelectric Cell Mechanisms for Doors and Fountains).

It should be noted that old-style bubblers, without a guard preventing the lips from touching the bubbler itself, is not compatible with the sanitation expected in the theatre; in fact, it is good practice to have, perhaps in addition to a protected bubbler, a faucet or spout, with individual paper cups in an ornamental holder, since some patrons (particularly women with small children) fear contamination from any kind of bubbler.

FURNITURE FOR FOYERS AND LOUNGES

FURNITURE DURABLE enough to be practicable for theatre foyer and lounge areas is obtainable today in a variety of styles, in both metal and wood.

Metal furniture, which is markedly durable, is available in chromium, stainless steel and aluminum, with dull or glossy finish. Chairs and settees may be of very simple design, and accordingly very inexpensive; or they may be of the fully upholstered type, with coil-spring cushions (feather or down cushions are not indicated for theatres because they do not return to shape). Metal tables, having burn-resistant composition tops (or tops of glass or some phenolic like Formica) are particularly indicated for cosmetic rooms, along with small chairs to match. Neither these, nor metal occasional and end tables are necessarily out of place in a room otherwise having non-metallic furniture, especially when the wood furniture is of definitely modern design (like so-called "Swedish modern").

Wood furniture may of course be selected from the better-built pieces adapted to home living rooms, but to be really practicable these should be merely of wood construction, with the frame fully covered in durable fabric (eliminating armrests, feet, etc., in woods like walnut or mahogany). Moderately priced wood furniture of sturdy construction which is suited to theatres quite as well as to homes is that of birch and maple, which may be obtained in novel "modern" designs, and also in rustic or Early American styles, with "wheat" (pale yellow) or the darker maple finish.

HEARING AIDS

THESE RECEIVING instruments (phones) either of air conduction or bone conduction type, to assist patrons whose hearing is impaired, may be regarded as standard equipment for motion picture theatres today, with from five to ten outlets (two seats served by one outlet) usually considered sufficient. The receivers are plugged into suitable outlet boxes permanently mounted and wired in selected seating locations. Individual volume controls which the patrons can adjust at will, may be provided either on the outlet boxes or on the cord leading to the receiver.

Sound may be taken from the main theatre system, either directly or through an auxiliary amplifier, or may be picked up via microphone from the screen speakers and passed through a low-power amplifier that is part of the hearing aid system.

It is also possible to have hearing aids that do not require wiring of seats. A magnetic field is created by forming loops in the seating area of copper wire or foil connected to sound system (or microphones). The deafened patron holds a small amplifier connected to earphone and can hear from any seat.

HEATING SYSTEMS AND ACCESSORIES

HEATING SYSTEMS used in the theatre present different requirements from those of other public buildings because of the concentration of occupants in the auditorium, and the wide variation in the number that may be present at any given time.

Heat distributing systems are of two general kinds, those using standard steam or hot water radiators or convection type units, and those circulating masses of warmed air through a ventilating system. The later may of course be part of a complete air conditioning system (see Air-Conditioning and Ventilating Equipment).

Oil and gas are preferable as the fuel where automatic control is provided in the system and when their cost is comparable to that of coal. With coal, automatic stokers reduce labor and insure efficient use of fuel.

It is a measure of economy in some theatres having air-conditioning for the auditorium, possibly also for the foyer, or a ventilation system for the auditorium, to use unit heaters for other divisions, such as lounges and toilet rooms, lobby, manager's office, etc.

Unit heaters are obtainable for connection to existing steam systems, or they may be individually heated by gas. Also, they are available for exposed installation as well as for concealed locations.

INTERCOMMUNICATING HOUSE PHONES

TO INSURE the manager's control over every department of theatre operation, and efficient co-ordination of the activities of different departments, suitable methods of signal or communication are indispensable. The simplest are mere buzzer systems, as sometimes used, for example, to advise the projection staff that a change in sound volume is necessary, but the limitations of the buzzer do not allow different departments to report to the management or permit communication of any but the simplest instructions.

House phones for more effective interdepartment contract are used by most theatres. They range in design from simple, two-station communicating lines to elaborate dial systems by which any station can make contact with any other.

Loud-talking systems, consisting essentially in distant-pickup with any other microphones and miniature speakers are also adopted to theatre intercommunication.

LAMPS, AC ARC

THE TYPE OF light source here referred to is a modern application of alternating current to motion picture projection employing a special means of modifying 60-cycle current for the purpose of eliminating current alternation as a cause of flicker. Screen illumination levels and operating costs are such that the equipment is marketed as a high-intensity light source adapted to the small and medium-sized theatre.

Current modification is provided by a rotary transformer that is excited by the line frequency but delivers 96-cycle alternating current, or at a frequency exactly twice that of the shutter. The trim is 7-mm. x 14 "Suprex" positive carbons, unrotated.

LAMPS, HIGH-INTENSITY

PROJECTION ARCS of high-intensity characteristics for operation on direct current are of two general classes—condenser and reflector types. The high-intensity reflector types in turn are divided into two classes—the type generally known as Hi-lo, and the so-called low-voltage high-intensity arc. The Hi-lo type may be regarded technologically as having been superseded (except for installations not yet replaced) by the low-voltage high-intensity arc, which employs a copper-coated carbon of small diameter with a core of rare-earth elements, and is further distinguished by the horizontal position of both carbons and non-rotation of the positive.

Condenser type high-intensity projection arc lamps specifically adapted to theatres are those operating at from 120 to 130 amperes and 65 to 70 volts; others of higher arc wattage are available however.

Low voltage high-intensity arcs adapted to medium-size houses are operated at currents ranging from 35 to 65 amperes, and 31 to 40 volts at the arc. Carbon combinations are 6 mm. positive, 5 mm. negative for from 35 to 40 amperes; 7 mm. positive, 6 mm. negative for from 42 to 50 amperes; and 8 mm. positive, 6.5 or 7 mm. negative for from 56 to 65 amperes.

Designed to replace the low-intensity arc formerly manufactured for the medium to small-size theatre are the new intermediate capacity high-intensity D.C. lamps, utilizing a cored negative carbon specifically made to give smooth operation at very low current densities, and operating at 40 amperes, 27-27½ volts, or about one kilowatt at the arc.

LAMPS, INCANDESCENT FOR PROJECTION

INCANDESCENT LAMPS for theatre motion picture projection are characterized by a high degree of source concentration and relatively high wattage. The most effective lamp for this purpose—namely, the 2,100-watt, 60-volt T-24 bulb lamp— is designed for lower voltage to secure additional source concentration. Hence a transformer with voltage-regulating characteristics is required. This lamp provides relatively acceptable illumination on screens up to 16 feet wide and throws not to exceed 100 feet.

There are also available, 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane filament construction. This construction makes possible relatively high source concentration for lamps operating at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus.

The 1,000- and 1,500-watt lamps are frequently employed in projectors of the semi-portable type.

For portable 35-mm. motion picture projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane-filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in T-20 bulbs with medium-prefocus bases. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt require forced ventilation.

A newer type of 1,000-watt projection lamp is designed to burn base down and as a result of a new method of internal construction and of burning the filaments at higher temperature the lamp increases by 50% the light available from incandescent sources of this wattage. Because it maintains screen illumination at so high a percentage of the original intensity, this lamp does not require the inclusion of anti-blackening electric grids internally.

For stereopticon projectors there are the 500-watt short T-20, medium-prefocus base projection lamp, and the 1,000-watt long T-20 bulb, mogul-prefocus base lamp. Both are of the 100-120 volt type and employ monoplane filaments.

LAMPS, INCANDESCENT FOR THEATRE LIGHTING

GENERAL SERVICE lamps —available in sizes from 15 to 1,500 watts —serve the majority of lighting applications in and around theatres. Except for the tubular bulb bipost lamps, all are designed for burning in any position; all are available with inside-frosted finish to diffuse the light, to eliminate filament striations, and to produce a smoother lighting effect. The frosting absorbs little light—in fact, inside-frosted and clear lamps (clear lamps are regularly available in sizes above 100 watts) have the same rating in light output.

Inside-colored lamps for sign and decorative service: The general service lamps mentioned above are suitable for enclosed lamp signs and luminous displays where protected from rain and snow. For outdoor exposed applications, a line of vacuum lamps from 6 to 50 watts is available in frosted and inside-colored types.

Outside-colored lamps: Several sizes of outside-colored lamps are also listed in round and flame-shaped bulbs.

Lumiline lamps: Available in colors and in 30 and 60 watts (length 17¾ inches) and 40 watts (length 11¾ inches), these tubular lamps have, by their physical shape, introduced new concepts of decorative lighting design. They may be used exposed or in narrow reflecting and shielding equipment. The standard colors are white, straw, orange, moonlight blue, emerald and surprise pink.

Also on the market is a filament tubular lamp which differs from the "lumiline" in that it plugs in along its length instead of at the ends, thus permitting an interrupted line of light. These lamps are also available in higher wattages—up to 200 watts. Lengths of units are 6, 12, 18 inches, etc., up to 36, and there are three diameters. They may be obtained in sprayed colors, sprayed white and opal glass. A feature of this filament lamp is that it may be bent to most any desired shape for architectural and exposed fixture effects.

Fluorescent lamps: These are much more efficient than the filament-type lumiline lamps, and are particularly recommended for color lighting, since the color is not created by the glass of the bulb, but in the light itself. The lamp is of the electric discharge type, using mercury vapor as the medium for sustaining the arc. Ultraviolet radiation is produced in the tube, which acts upon certain chemicals (the nature of which varies according to the color or tone of white light desired) with which the interior of the bulb has been treated. The reaction of the chemical to the electronic bombardment produces visible light.

These lamps differ from the usual type filament lamps in that they contain their own reflecting surface which is hermetically sealed within the lamp providing a high-intensity, accurately controlled beam for supplementary lighting purposes.

The Projector spot and flood lamps are provided with lens cover glasses which produce narrow and wide beams respectively. They are made of rugged, heat resisting glass and are suitable for service inside and outdoors. They are equipped with medium screw bases to fit regular sockets, PAR 38 bulbs and are available in the 150-watt size.

The Reflector spot and flood lamps also have built-in, mirror-like surfaces; however, they are made of ordinary glass and must be protected from the weather. Like the projector lamps, the spot type has a narrow light distribution of high intensity and the flood, a wide-beam distribution. They are equipped with medium screw bases to fit regular sockets, R-40 bulbs and are available in 150, 200, and 300-watt sizes.

LENSES, PROJECTION

THERE ARE two general classes—the condenser lens, which focuses the projection light on the aperture (See Condensers); and the objectives. The latter are commonly referred to as the projection lenses; they focus the light upon the screen. They are made in four standard diameters, with focal length as determined by the size of the screen image desired, and its distance from the projector.

Knowing these factors, the supply dealer or the lens manufacturer readily determines the focal length required. In ordering projection lenses, one should also name the type of light source, projection angle and the make and model of the projector.

Stock focal lengths are usually in quarter sizes from 3 to 7 inches, 7½ and 8 inches.

In addition to the regular optical glass projection lenses corrected for color and flatness of field, so called "coated" lenses are available. They differ in that the optical components have inner and outer surfaces chemically treated so as to effect a certain disintegration of surface and a resultant film or "coating" of pure silica. Focus is also sharpened by lenses of this type.

LETTERS, ATTRACTION BOARD

IN ITS application to the motion picture theatre, a marquee serves primarily the purpose of an advertising medium, the attraction display provisions being the dominant feature. The changeable letters for attraction advertising are largely of silhouette type, and the availability of these in interchangeable sizes for multiple-line lighted glass panels permits arrangement of the advertising copy in "typographical" (printed advertising) style so as to obtain maximum interest and variability.

Interchangeable letters in the sizes noted above may also be obtained in a type having the general features of a silhouette letter, but with a middle strip of transluscent material in color. If desired, the attention-arresting effect may be enhanced by lamping the panel box in several colors and fading one color into another on automatic dimmer control.

The only practicable attraction board letters adapted to front attraction advertising other than those of silhouette type are glass block letters with opaque grounds, emitting light through the letters themselves.

Regular silhouette letters are of cast aluminum, or entirely of plastic, and the latter are available in several colors. Interchangeable sizes are 8, 10, 12, 16, 24 and 30 inches. Also obtainable are 4-inch letters, which are mounted in their own frame, which in turn is mounted on the panel where desired. Six-inch letters are obtainable but are not interchangeable.

Panels of opal glass, with the necessary lamp box mounting, may be of any dimensions (see Marquees). For flexibility of copy arrangement and legibility, a panel height providing for at least three lines is necessary (this permits a vertical variation covering five lines). Panels may be had with rounded glass corners allowing a continuous attraction board around the marquee or elsewhere.

For "typographical" layout of the display at least three sizes of letters are recommended. These will be determined by the size of the panel and local needs, but fonts of 10-, 16- and 24-inch letters have been found to meet average conditions.

To augment the display copy with "illustrations" are silhouette transparencies of leading screen players (head-and-shoulders). These come ready for insertion in the frames.

The panels, set in metal frames with steel rods on which the letters are mounted, are installed in movable sections (entirely removable, sliding or hinged) to provide convenient access to the lamp box.

LIGHTING, ARCHITECTURAL AND FOR PUBLIC AREAS

IN ADDITION to the part that sign and marquee play on the architectural effect of the theatre facade, light may effectively contribute to the front design, maintaining its daytime values after dark, or even adding to them, by flooding the entire upper front, or parts of it, by means of reflector sources on the roof of the marquee; by outlining architectural features with neon or lumiline lamps; by creating panels or stripings of light by means of neon or lumiline or regular lamp sources concealed behind architectural structures, and so on to the limit of the ingenuity of the designer.

For the public areas of the interior, lighting facilities are to be divided into two general classifications—(1) built-in sources, and (2) fixtures.

Built-in sources include coves and troughs, recessed light boxes (usually having a diffusing device, like concentric louver-rings, or covered with flush-set panels of translucent glass with or without diffusing ribs), and so-called downlights, consisting in ceiling reflectors or projectors behind tiny apertures in the ceiling, with the light beam directed to cover precisely a prescribed area.

Both classes of light sources are suited to modern interior treatments; indeed, even though built-in sources be used in the auditorium, or perhaps the foyer as well, fixtures may serve the needs of the lobby, or the lounge more economically. Either method, of course, may well be used throughout the interior, for each embraces a vast array of practicable devices for efficient illumination and effective decoration.

Modern fixtures are available in stock designs of great variety—bracket or pylon luminaires, flush-type ceiling drums and boxes, suspended troughs, ceiling bowls, wall urns, etc., constructed of metal or glass or both, variously ornamented in the same materials, in direct, indirect and direct-indirect types, or with light emission through decorative louvers, in sizes to suit every location, and at prices to make modern luminaires accessible to theatres of the most modest budgets. Specially designed luminaires are obtainable at relatively moderate cost.

While incandescent lamps (as distinguished from the gas tube sources generally referred to as neon) are more flexibly adapted to theatre interior illumination, and also have maintenance advantages, neon has its interior applications, confined largely to cove and trough lighting.

MARQUEES

A MARQUEE is to be regarded as essential to the motion picture theatre. There are exceptions, due to location and form of building, but not many. Its function as a means of protection for patrons from rain and snow has become of less importance than its function as an advertising medium. It advertisers the theatre and the program, by distinguishing the building from other commercial establishments on the street, by the theatricalism of its lighting, by advertising the program.

Marquees today have become more closely associated with the general architectural form of the theatre front than they originally were. They are frequently constructed according to specifications supplied by the architect, who has designed the marquee itself, along with other display and sign elements of the front, as a part of the facade.

Another later development is unit construction of marquees, providing prefabricated marquees to fit most any theatre entrance, complete with all attraction board equipment, and also with theatre name sign (vertical or otherwise).

Most marquees have been rectangular in shape, but because the greatest amount of announcement space on such marquees cannot be read up and down the street, particularly on the side on which the theatre is located, other shapes have come into vogue, notably one combining rectangular with triangular forms.

Marquees are generally of sheet metal construction, painted, or with porcelain enamel finish in desired colors. with soffits of metal or glass illuminated by incandescent lamps or lighting troughs. There are, of course, many variations in pattern and illumination; however, the design should provide for attraction advertising panels with changeable letters (see Letters, Attraction Board) as integral parts of the structure.

MATS AND MATTING FOR ENTRANCE AREAS

HEAVY-DUTY corrugated rubber mats for vestibules, or corrugated and perforated rubber mats for the entire entrance area, are to be regarded as standard equipment for the average theatre, if not all theatres, since they are the principal means of reducing to a minimum the amount of dirt carried into the theatre on the shoes of patrons and of preventing slipping which can result in costly damage suits.

Lobby mats, as they are generally called, should cover all of the floor of the immediate entrance area (as far as the point where carpeting begins, unless there is an especially long inner lobby) that constitutes traffic lanes. In entrance area of moderate width or less, the traffic lanes will extend within a foot or so of the side walls. The rubber mat may be laid on top of a floor of terrazzo or tile (if it has beveled approach edges), but preferably it should lay in recess, flush with a border of terrazzo or ceramic, stone or asphalt tile.

It is also desirable to place lighter rubber mats (corrugated, but not necessarily perforated) just inside the entrance to the carpeted area, laying them flush with the pile of the carpet. Smooth or pyramid-surface rubber mats are also available in patterns to match any figured carpeting.

Lobby mats are obtainable in a variety of standard colors, but special mats may be made up in colors as desired and also in interesting patterns, which may be given directional lines guiding traffic (of particular value when an inner lobby or foyer is at right angles to the sidewalk), and also be designed to incorporate an emblem symbolizing the name of the theatre.

Metal link mats, thicker and more rugged than regular lobby mats, are advisable for use in vestibules or outer lobbies during wet weather.

Available for temporary laying over carpeting, to protect the fabric in main traffic lanes during wet weather, are various types of matting, of sisal fibre, of a canvas-like fabric, of cocoa fibres, etc. Some are available in designs; widths generally run to 12 feet.

MIRROR GUARDS, PROJECTION LAMP

GLASS SHIELDS, or guards, are obtainable for the protection of reflector arc mirrors against pitting (which is produced to a relatively pronounced degree by the low-voltage high-intensity arc). The shields themselves are pitted in the course of operation, but since they are much less expensive than reflectors, their use reduces maintenance costs.

MOTOR-GENERATOR SETS FOR D.C. ARC SUPPLY

CURRENT CONVERSION equipment to supply direct current to arc lamps from alternating current lines is available in types and capacities to meet specific projection arc demands, from small spotlights in combination with picture projection lamps, to condenser lamps of super-high-intensity arcs.

To meet general theatre needs, twin sets are available having two generators driven by one motor on a common shaft and providing a five-minute overload up to 80 amperes, thus eliminating dipping of voltage at warming up periods during changeover.

Constant potential type m. g. sets, for heavy-duty spotlight and effect projector supply, are available in capacities from 100-150 to 750-1125 amperes, 100 volts, with 30-minute overload.

The type and capacity of m. g. set indicated for a specific installation depends upon the type of arc and carbon trim of the picture projection lamps, and whether spotlights or effect projectors are also to be supplied. (See Lamps, High-Intensity.)

PHOTOCELL MECHANISMS FOR DOORS AND FOUNTAINS

MECHANISMS FOR the automatic operation of drinking fountains and opening of doors, with the mechanism actuated by the interruption of a beam of light trained on a photoelectric cell, are obtainable alone or as part of such door or fountain equipment. (See Fountains.)

Doors that open automatically merely upon the approach of a person, increasingly being used in hotels, restaurants and bus and railroad stations, have similar application to the theatre for passage from vestibule to lobby, and from lobby to foyer.

PHOTOELECTRIC CELLS

ALTHOUGH IT has a number of applications in many fields, in the theatre the photoelectric cell functions principally as a vital "organ" of the sound reproduction system, transforming the light of the exciter lamp, after it has passed through the sound track of the film, into the electrical energy which, amplified, actuates the loudspeakers.

PROJECTOR PARTS

THE WEAR to which projectors are subjected requires close observation of all parts and prompt replacement or repair before any that have become defective injure others that must work with them. It is also to be borne in mind that mechanical faults in the projector are usually "picked up" by the sound system.

PROJECTORS, STANDARD THEATRE

A ROCK-STEADY image, freedom from faulty lubrication, unit removability of parts to permit easier maintenance, greater shutter efficiency, gear meshing safeguards, generally stronger construction than that of earlier models, and also greater convenience and accuracy in framing, are among the features characterizing standard theatre (non-portable, heavy-duty, 35-mm.) projectors of late design. Additionally, these mechanisms are available with housing styled attractively in the manner of modern industrial designing, either integrally or at least intimately in association with magazines and bases.

Also available are projectors of a simpler and more compact fabrication, intended for permanent installation in theatres not requiring as many hours of continual service.

Pedestals, sold separately from the projector mechanism, are adapted to any standard type of lamphouse designed for corresponding service, and the modern pedestal, of enclosed construction, provides easy and accurate means of tilting and freedom from effective vibration.

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS

PUBLIC ADDRESS and sound-re-enforcement systems may provide any one or all of various services. They can be utilized for amplifying stage sound, for managers' announcements, for ballyhoo.

In the theatre the public address system may consist of microphones suitably connected to the standard sound installation, or an entirely separate system, with its own amplification, wiring and also speakers, may be employed. Hearing aids may be used in association with any type of theatre public address reproduction.

Separate record-playing devices for reproduction of standard phonograph discs, through the sound or public address system, are available for exit music, pre-show or lobby entertainment, or attraction music outside the box office.

RECTIFIER TUBES

VACUUM AND gas-filled tubes used to convert alternating current to direct current are made in many ratings. The smaller sizes are commonly thought of as being in the category of radio or amplifier tubes. But while there is no distinction in principle of operation, the larger sizes, having current capacities of from 2½ to 30 amperes, are by custom classified separately.

These are often described by their best-known trade name as "Tungar" tubes. In the theatre such tubes are used to provide rectified direct current to arc lamps and to sound exciter lamps.

RECTIFIERS AND POWER UNITS

RECTIFIERS ARE devices that employ rectifying tubes or copper compound rectifying assemblies (dry type) for the purpose of converting alternating current to direct current. The larger sizes are fan-cooled, and supply direct current to the projection arc.

The smaller sizes are of somewhat different design electrically, incorporating electrical filters to insure smooth d.c. output, and to supply power to exciter lamps, speaker fields or other parts of the sound system.

REELS

REELS NECESSARY for takeup magazines of projectors and also otherwise constantly utilized in the projection room, are available in a number of sizes and types of construction. The standard reel in the United States has a diameter of 14½ inches, and a 4½-inch hub for the accommodation of film lengths up to 2,000 feet. Reels are also available in the former American standard size (diameter 10 inches, hub 2 inches) while another available size adapted to the standard American film length of 2,000 feet has a diameter of 15 inches. REFLECTORS FOR INCANDESCENT LAMPS

METAL RECEPTACLES for incandescent lamps, having a reflecting inside finish and with a curvature calculated to make most efficient use of available light, are obtainable in several types adapted particularly to marquee trim and soffit lighting, to sign letter lamping, sign borders, display lighting (some types as "spots") and similar uses.

There is also a type of reflector designed for low-wattage lamps, equipped with a glass roundel, or cover, having inside ribs to create sparkle, which not only protects the lamp and reflector, but provides color if desired without use of colored lamps. These reflectors produce effective illumination equivalent to 25 watts with 7½-watt lamps, and to 40 watts with 10-watt lamps, and are adapted to cove and other interior lighting as well as marquee and sign lighting, reducing current costs substantially as well as providing sparkle and desired color effect.

Other types of reflectors have swivel mounting, readily permitting reflection of the light in any direction.

REWINDERS, FILM

FILM REWINDERS are available in two general types, open and fireproof enclosed. The open type is offered in a number of different models, either as a single unit or as two separate units that are clamped to the rewind table, or bolted in place. The enclosed type is a single unit.

Both open and enclosed types may be hand-driven or motor-driven, may have sleeve bearings or ball bearings, may accommodate either 1,000- or 2,000-foot reels, or both, and may have either one or several driving speeds.

Some of the motor-driven types incorporate accessories by means of which the same motor can be used for general machine work, such as grinding and polishing.

Rewind tables of metal provide a fireproof work bench especially adapted to projection room needs and are available with tool drawer, rack for film cabinet, and clamping blocks accommodating any type of rewinder.

SCREENS, PROJECTION

THE SCREEN, an integral and vital part of the projection-sound systems, is properly selected according to the dimensions of the auditorium, including the distance from last row to screen, and to its sound transmission characteristics (attenuation factor of the perforations). Although no standards have yet been fixed, it is authoritatively regarded that the width of the image should be not greater than the distance between the first row and the screen, nor less than about one-sixth the distance between the last row and the screen.

Technically, screens are of three general types: Diffusive, for auditoriums having a ratio between width and depth of approximately 3½ or more, to 5; Semi-Diffusive, for auditoriums tending toward the narrow; and Specular, for auditoriums definitely elongated. Another type of screen is Translucent, used with rear projection.

In surface treatment (which is more or less associated with the critical materials used in general fabrication) screens are "white," plastic, "silver" (metallic) or "beaded" (glass). Specular screens are either "silver" or "beaded."

Ignoring the solid screen (unperforated), screens may be further divided into those consistently perforated throughout the image area; and those variably perforated (perforated only at speaker area, with holes of receding diameters).

Plastic screens are the latest development in this field. They are fabricated of a special composition (differing according to manufacturer), which, forming the essential body of the fabric, supplies the reflective surface as well. The type was developed in large part for the purpose of reducing the rate of surface deterioration and of increasing reflection power.

SIGNS (ELECTRIC) FOR THEATRE NAME

ELECTRIC SIGNS (metal framework with illumination provisions) are available in a wide variety of designs more or less closely associated with the architecture of the theatre front. While they are commonly especially designed by the architect or sign construction company, there are also stock designs adaptable to the theatre front. Gas tube (neon) and incandescent lamp illumination have been found effective for these signs in combination as well as alone, and either type of lighting can be flashed.

Horizontal name signs have normally been more closely associated with the marquee than the vertical sign has, but often the vertical sign can be effectively related to the marquee and entrance by continuing the sign illumination scheme down to the marquee and even across its soffit. It is to be noted that a prefabricated type of marquee is available complete with theatre name signs either vertical or horizontal and all electrical facilities.

variety of d.c. types, and in permanent magnet types that need no field excitation.

Baffles are required with every speaker. The simplest is flat board, behind which the speaker is mounted, large enough to provide baffling for the lowest frequency to be reproduced. In many auditoriums, however, the "folded" baffle provides a longer sound path, and therefore better "loading," for the low-frequency speakers. Directional trumpets or baffles used for high-frequency speakers consist of clusters of small trumpets operated by one or more units. These arrangements secure better distribution of the high frequencies, which have a normal tendency to travel in straight lines, over-supplying some seats and missing many others entirely. Clusters of directional baffles applied to the h.f. speakers correct this tendency.

TICKET REGISTERS

AUTOMATICALLY registering ticket dispensers facilitate the handling of box office peaks, and impart the impression of efficiency, cleanliness and business-like methods; they eliminate all excuses for errors on the part of the cashier (some type of dispensers make the usual errors impossible); and they may be regarded as necessary to any real assurance that box office losses are not occurring through cashier-doorman collusion. They are obtainable in motor-driven and manually operated types.

The most elaborate system for keeping ticket sales under control of the management embraces both the ticket issuing mechanism and the ticket itself. The cashier, when going on duty, turns a knob to a specific number assigned to her, at a time clock, then releases a ticket from each unit, and these tickets, with her code number and time printed on them, are pasted on her report form. A special water-marked ticket paper is used, of a precise thickness to which the machine is exactly adjusted, preventing substitution.

Additionally, ticket rolls are designed for issuance and tearing in a special manner calculated to prevent dishonesty, while other refinements introduce similar safeguards.

Also available is a device for attachment to the ticket register which, by electrical connection to the mechanism for releasing tickets, automatically flashes on an indicator board suspended in the box office window, the total price that the patron is to pay for the tickets.

TOILET ACCESSORIES

THE PROVISION of soap, paper towels, etc., for the use of the public, is not to be regarded as merely a service to patrons; such provision, maintained constantly, contributes to the cleanliness of the toilet rooms, thus reducing maintenance work of the theatre staff. These supplies do represent a service, of course, the absence of which can create considerable ill will toward the theatre.

The soap should be preferably of liquid-type, available from a handy dispenser. Built-in dispensers with only the spout visible above each lavatory, are preferable to the glass bowl type in that they are neater and are theft-proof. Paper towel dispensers should be as accessible, supplied with towels of at least 32-pound stock. (They may be obtained in control type issuing only one section at a time).

Toilet paper should be of at least 10-pound stock and dispensed by holders using either flat folded sheets, or issuing two sheets at a time. These may be obtained in chrome-plated metal or in synthetic materials to match compartment color.

For the patron to place over the seat, disposable tissue covers are available, and can be issued by a coin dispenser.

A special type of toilet seat (lending itself to exploitation of a theatre's protection of its patrons) is one associated with an ultraviolet lamp arrangement for sterilization of the seat by u.v. radiation when not in use.

UNIFORMS

THEATRE PRESTIGE emphasized through service, is greatly enhanced by costumes worn by attendants.

Uniforms should be made to individual measurements to assure perfect fit and neatness at all times. Catalogues are available containing appropriate suggestions as to proper styles for each class of personnel, and each season.

Collars for ushers are obtainable in reversible type so that when one side gets dirty the collar may be turned with other side out thus doubling the time that a single collar may be used before laundering.

UPHOLSTERING MATERIALS

UPHOLSTERING materials are of importance in theatre operation, first in relation to auditorium seating, second as coverings for foyer and lounge furniture. They may be divided into two general kinds—(1) soft fabrics, and (2) simulated leather.

The soft fabrics regarded as suited to motion picture theatre auditorium chairs are mohair, velour and corduroy, and these are of course available in various grades. Because of the hard usage to which theatre auditorium seating is subjected, and the liability of the theatre management for discoloration of clothes due to unstable dye, the cheaper grades should never be used.

There are two general classes of simulated leather, that having a coating of rubber-base type, and that with paroxylin-base coating. Each is available in different grades.

The rubber-base type is the more expensive, but it is also regarded more durable under stress of flexing. Simulated leather is obtainable in a large variety of standard colors and off-shades, and also in "antique" finishes having a worked leather pattern effect.

One of the makes of simulated leather of auditorium seating quality is also available in a so-called "ventilated" type. It derives this classification from the presence of tiny apertures.

The purpose of the apertures is to provide outlet for air upon compression of the cushion. (See also Chairs, Auditorium.)

Simulated leather is suited to foyer and lounge furniture. Here, however, and particularly in women's lounges, soft fabrics are often preferred for their suggestion of luxurious comfort, and also for the colorful patterns available. Of the soft fabrics, those most often used for lounge and foyer furniture are the cottons and wools, or cotton-rayon mixtures, having a firm texture and minimum of nap. VENDING EQUIPMENT FOR CONFECTIONERY

THE SELLING of candy and popcorn, and also beverages, in the theatre provides both a service to patrons and a source of extra income, and while such sales may be handled on a percentage basis through a concessionaire, many theatre managements are in a good position to operate this end of the business themselves, taking the entire profit, which in the case of candy may run as high as 30-40 per cent, and of popcorn as much as 70 per cent.

Candy vending machines are available in designs especially developed for the theatre, with modern lines and decorative features which, while making the machine noticeable enough, allows it to blend more or less with the surroundings. Theatre candy machines should provide a substantial choice of popular bars, and be of a mechanical quality assuring ease and assurance of operation. The better machines are equipped with a slug-detecting device, and are lighted with fluorescent lamps, which do not generate a level of heat injurious to candy.

Candy counters, for dispensing of a large variety of confectionery by an attendant, are obtainable in many styles and shapes for any location, with open counters or glass-enclosed case. Most types contain storage space for stock.

Popcorn machines are available in attractive styles in porcelain enamel and bright metals, with mounting on wheels permitting easy transfer from vestibule or lobby to storage room. Popping equipment (associated with the use of especially prepared cooking oil and seasoning) is practically automatic in action to assure consistent quality and minimum waste. Available for complete refreshment bars or shops are decorative units compactly combining soda fountain with candy and popcorn dispensing facilities.

Beverage dispensers operate automatically on insertion of a coin, dispensing in paper cup.

VOLTAGE REGULATORS

WHILE ELECTRIC power companies are supposed to maintain their lines at approximately established voltage, they cannot be depended on to do so in some communities. Fluctuation of voltage, which may be pronounced at certain times of the day, has its most critical effect on the sound system.

Voltage regulators of inexpensive type, but fully automatic, are available for the control of such line fluctuations. For stabilizing current to all of the sound system except the motors (and the motors do not ordinarily need to be included), capacities of from 500 to 1,000 watts cover theatre requirements.

AFFILIATED THEATERS, INCORPORATED
310 CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BUILDING
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA

September 26, 1941

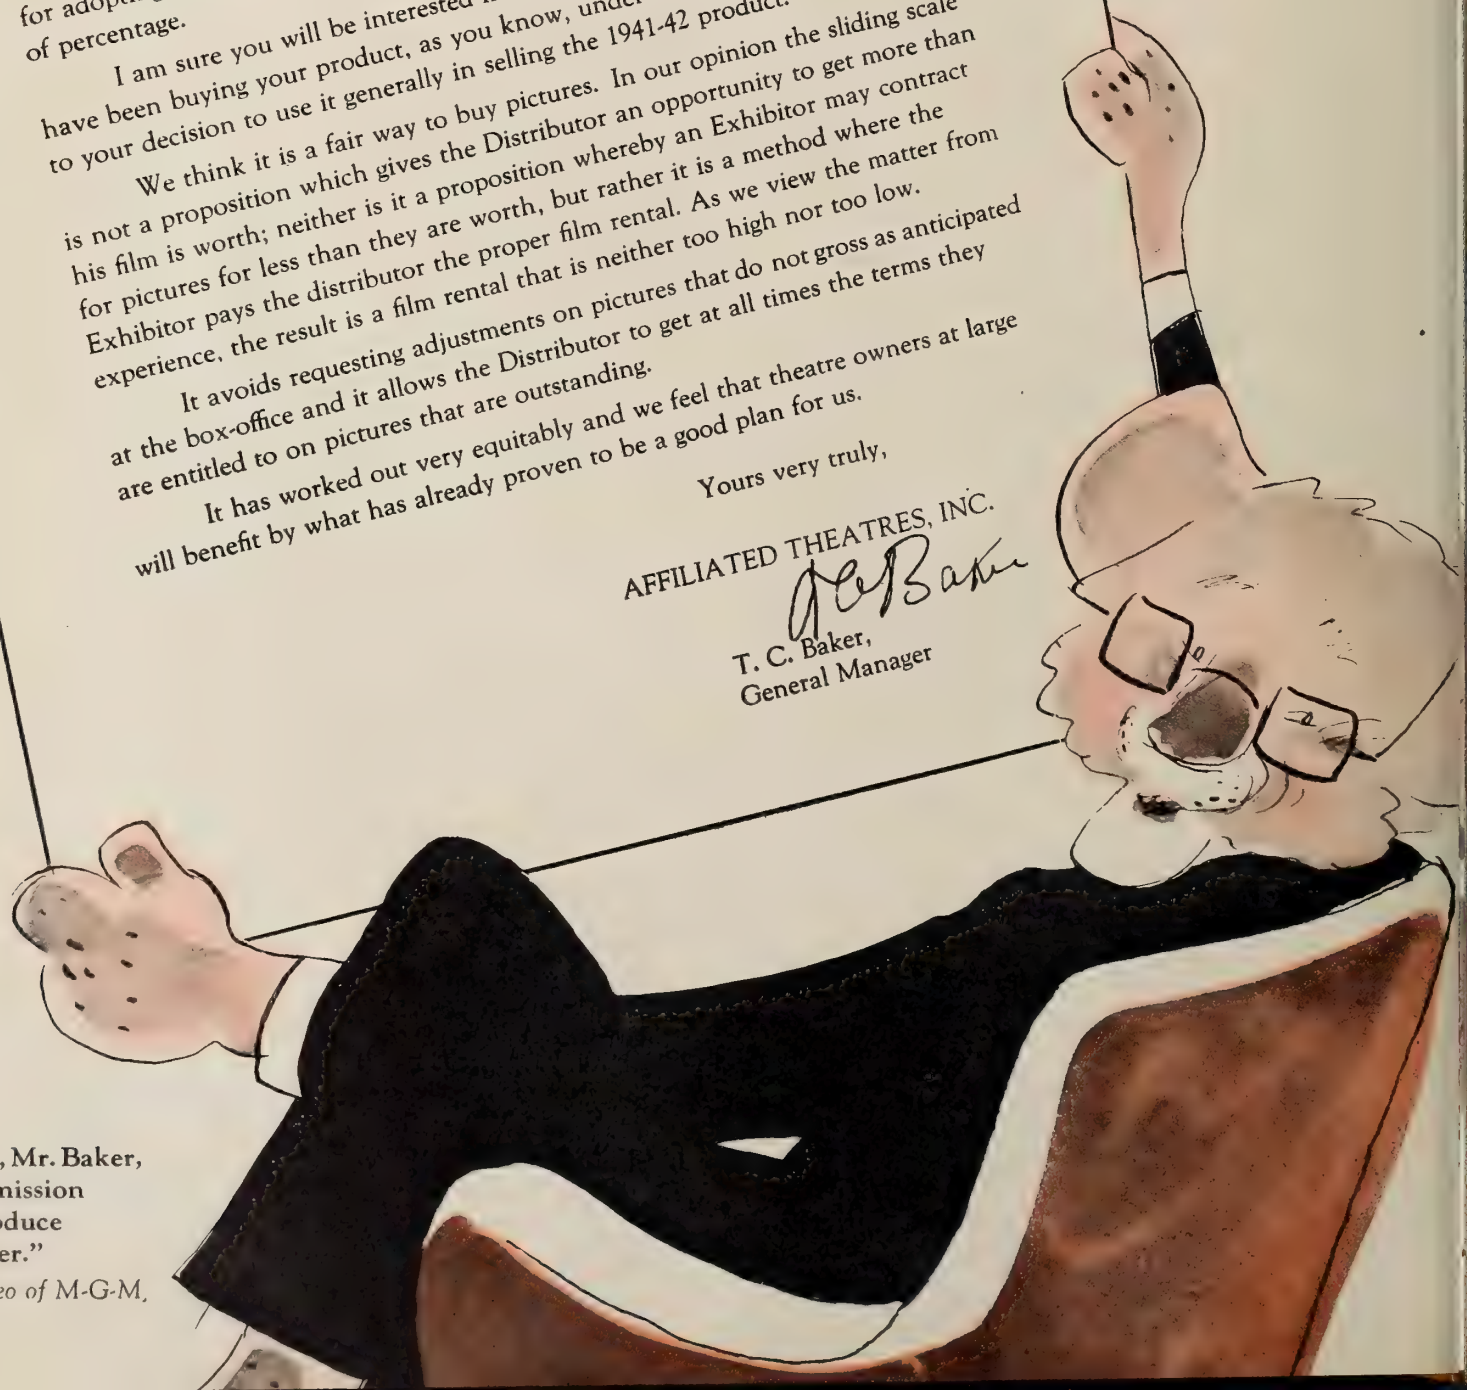
Mr. W. F. Rodgers
Loew's Incorporated
1540 Broadway
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Rodgers:

You no doubt have noted some trade paper reports criticizing your company for adopting the policy of selling your top brackets of pictures on a sliding scale of percentage.

I am sure you will be interested in our reaction to this plan of selling. We have been buying your product, as you know, under this plan for two years prior to your decision to use it generally in selling the 1941-42 product.

We think it is a fair way to buy pictures. In our opinion the sliding scale is not a proposition which gives the Distributor an opportunity to get more than his film is worth; neither is it a proposition whereby an Exhibitor may contract for pictures for less than they are worth, but rather it is a method where the Exhibitor pays the distributor the proper film rental. As we view the matter from experience, the result is a film rental that is neither too high nor too low.



It avoids requesting adjustments on pictures that do not gross as anticipated at the box-office and it allows the Distributor to get at all times the terms they are entitled to on pictures that are outstanding.

It has worked out very equitably and we feel that theatre owners at large will benefit by what has already proven to be a good plan for us.

Yours very truly,

AFFILIATED THEATRES, INC.

T. C. Baker,
General Manager

"Thanks, Mr. Baker, for permission to reproduce this letter."
—Leo of M-G-M.

May we reply with pictures, dear Mr. Baker!

Our third group just trade-shown is literally the talk of the industry!

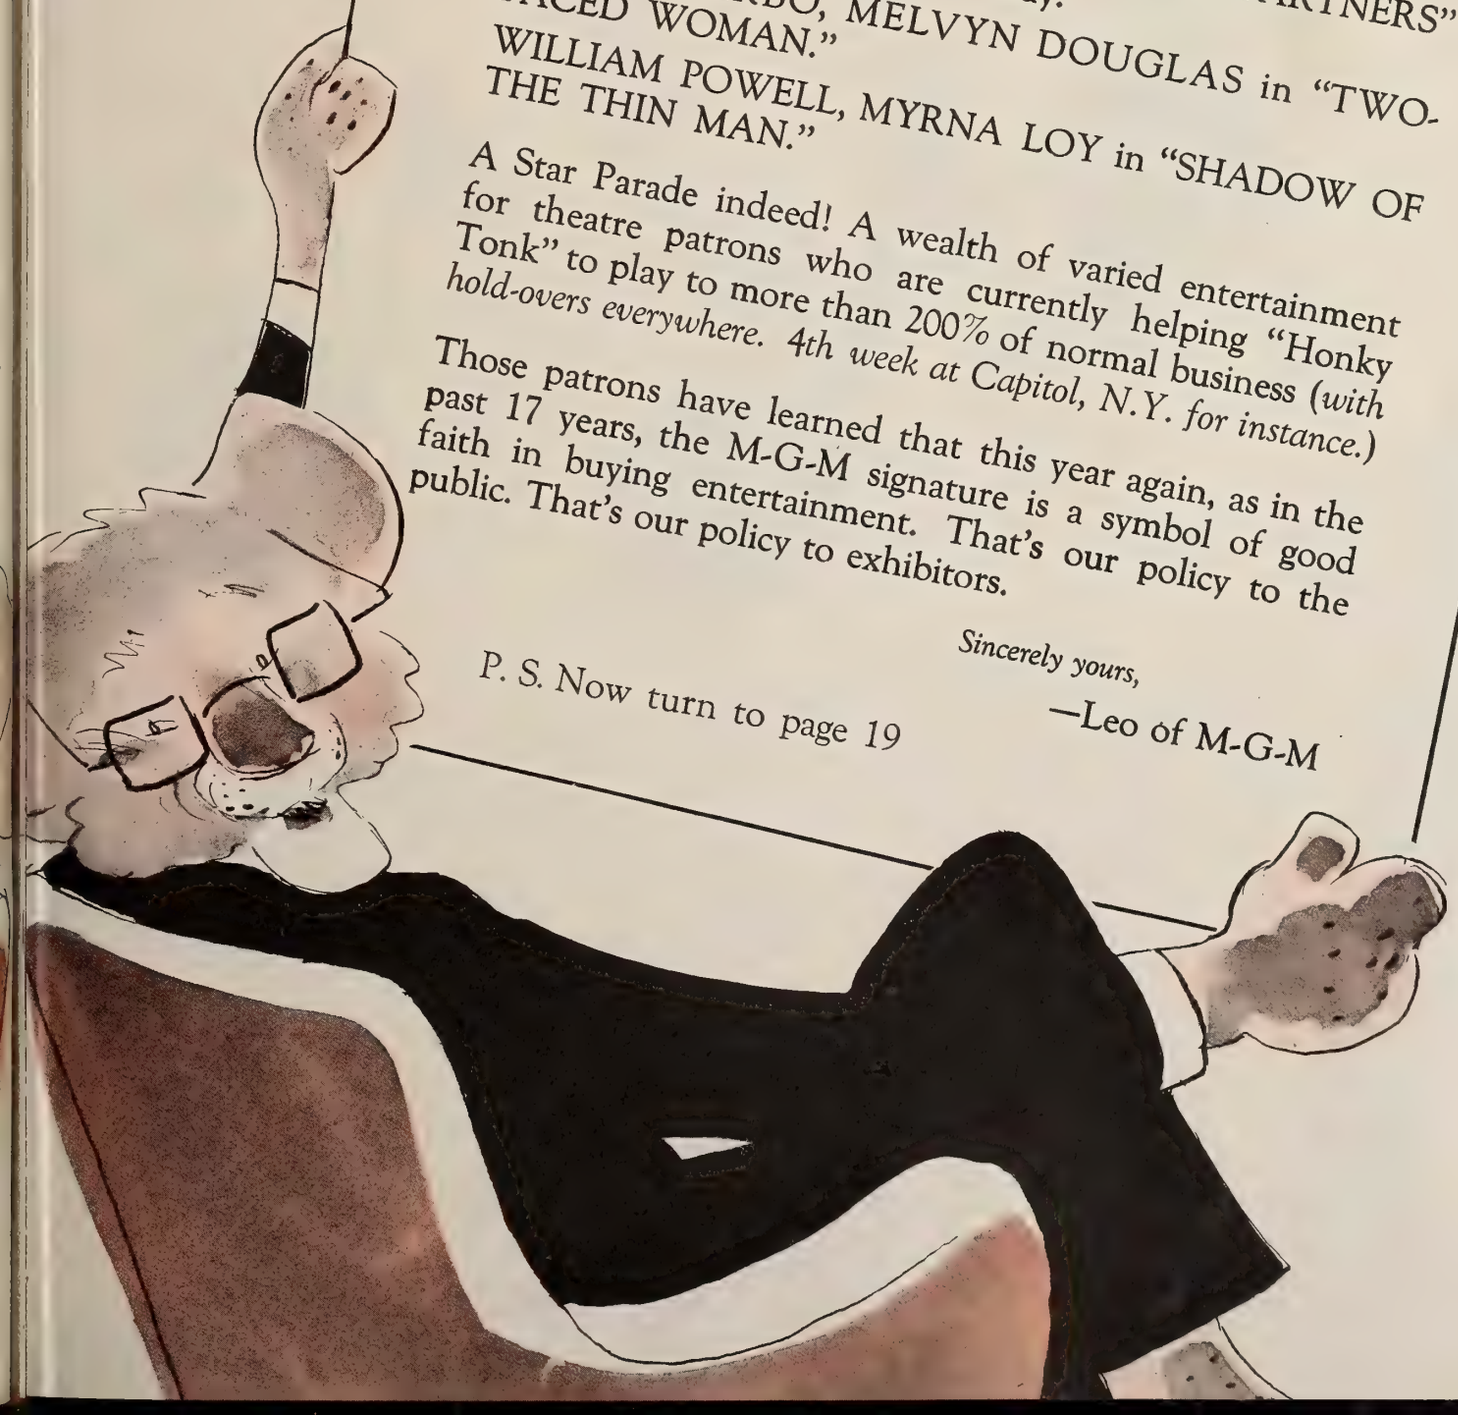
Continuing our fast early-season pace we offer 4 more Big Ones:

NELSON EDDY and (introducing) RISE STEVENS in "THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER."

EDWARD G. ROBINSON in "UNHOLY PARTNERS" with Edward Arnold, Laraine Day.

GRETA GARBO, MELVYN DOUGLAS in "TWO-FACED WOMAN."

WILLIAM POWELL, MYRNA LOY in "SHADOW OF THE THIN MAN."



A Star Parade indeed! A wealth of varied entertainment for theatre patrons who are currently helping "Honky Tonk" to play to more than 200% of normal business (with hold-overs everywhere. 4th week at Capitol, N.Y. for instance.)

Those patrons have learned that this year again, as in the past 17 years, the M-G-M signature is a symbol of good faith in buying entertainment. That's our policy to the public. That's our policy to exhibitors.

Sincerely yours,

—Leo of M-G-M

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

MARTIN QUIGLEY, Editor-in-Chief and Publisher

Vol. 145, No. 4 — October 25, 1941

REFRESHING REASSURANCE that this is still an ordered, disciplined industry, in the face of a world at war and amid the perplexities produced by labour racketeering and the political footballing of Washington inquisitions, was afforded this week by the sessions of the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in New York.

Here were gathered several hundred men of professional and technological attainments and interests, all impinging on this art and industry, very much interested in their job, willingly and eagerly sitting through long sessions of papers, talk and debate—dichroic reflectors, densitometers, electrostatic air cleaners, iodide analysis in an MQ developer, and even out into such subjects as where film vernacular comes from.

This was a meeting about things that work by discoverable law and regular order, by slide rule and logarithm table, in pounds and grams and wave lengths and other measurable things. All this pertains, of course, to a world that is not only filled with potential adventure, but also a considerable comfort of assurance.

Into this peaceful oasis of technology up on top of the Hotel Pennsylvania, your editor, taking advantage of an invitation to make a speech, intruded with a suggestion to the engineers that they extend their concerns outside their assured world of tools and test tubes into the broader fields where most of today's problems and troubles are.

"WE have all heard for quite a while that demand from certain quarters," he observed, "that science and invention should take a holiday because society is not getting along so well with all the machinery on hand. The idea is that you gentlemen should end your progress now so that civilization can catch up.

"It would appear perhaps more practical to suggest that there is yet quite a lot that might be done for civilization and the customers if the problems of what are called 'social gains' and the 'new order' might be measured and controlled by some part of the same sort of processes of verification used in our laboratories and workshops—where things are made to work by honest application of information, not guesses, not vagrant hopes, not gilded dreams.

"Everybody else has had his fling at it. Perhaps it is now time that engineers and scientists can serve by coming out of the laboratories into the world of politics and social movements. The world picture today presents a bloody chaos because of figures that do not add and calculations that have no calculation in them.

"This idea of potential contribution of the scientific order to the social order is not new. It is also not especially alluring to such comfortable fellows as you are. The notion was even stated on the screen just a while ago. You'll remember that Mr. H. G. Wells wrote a story about a world ruled by engineers, under the title of 'The Shape of Things to Come'. Mr. Alexander Korda made a picture of it, a rather good picture of this technologically developed Utopia—and it was one of the three Wells pictures on which Mr. Korda told me he lost a million dollars. The public did not go for it—it was too fantastically reasonable. So this is no invitation to a pageant of triumphs offered to you—but it is to point out to you that the skill and order of application by which engineering has given us this mechanized age, can also have an important share in making it work—if not perfectly, then maybe a bit better than it is working now.

"The customer is really part of the machinery, and he's the part which now seems to be the most in need of adjustment and repairs."

NEWEST OF THE NATIONAL MENACES is the purchasing agent. By way of the United Press and the New York Times we learn that "the public relations men working for the United States", in Washington, have been told to write their copy single spaced and use both sides of the sheet to conserve paper, and that "the command came from officials who have to supply the mimeograph paper . . . "

It is alleged that the government is buying all the mimeograph paper and that, even so, there is not enough to carry out all the publicity which is being written. It is said that the press releases of OPM have been requiring 4,000,000 sheets for 5,000 copies each on 245 releases a month, and that the Washington total has been 800,000 pounds a month, to tell the world.

There is no showing that these purchasing agents have any yardstick on the effectiveness of any of the copy.

It can be guaranteed, however, that single spaced copy on both sides of the sheet, producing the maximum of inconvenience for the editors, will get the minimum of attention and space. It is characteristic of purchasing agent logic that paper should be saved even if the project is lost.

The legitimate function of a purchasing agent is to supply materials and tools for people who work, and if he knows his own business he does not know theirs. When the purchasing agent comes into editorial and publicity departments, efficiency goes out the window—or the side door in the direction of the nearest bar.

It may be true, and probably is, that there is hellish waste in government publicity copy in terms of lineage in print produced. The same purchasing agent might go around and tell the War Department to quit buying so many cartridges for machine guns because some of them miss the mark now and then.

It has been said that the pen is more deadly than the sword. Maybe what the purchasing agents need is some publicity.

One hears about other items besides mimeograph paper. There's a case, for instance, of enough toilet tissue shipped to a certain army camp to supply its probable requirements for twenty years. They might ask the commandant to speak to the soldiers about that, too.

EVERY SEASON of the cinema marks new milestones of progress and elegance. For instance, with the opening of the new selling season of '41-'42, the cocktail party, for so many years an institution of broad acceptance, is no more—officially. Officially, as the invitations now read, they are all "receptions" for the purpose of "introducing" the new ones, "greeting" the old ones. It is to be recorded, however, that the quality of the hospitality, etc., remains unimpaired.

This Week in the News

Gradwell Sears, U.A. President?

Gradwell L. (LeBerthon) Sears, general sales manager of Warner Brothers Pictures and selling the films of that company and its predecessors for 21 years come December, arose, quite unexpectedly, at mid-week, as the No. 1 probability for the presidency of United Artists.

Some in informed quarters anticipated the signing of a contract by next mid-week, a contract described as running for at least five years, and possibly seven, paying $3,000 a week, plus 'a healthy bonus,' probably in U. A. stock, and vesting in Mr. Sears 'sole authority' with a voice in all of United Artists' producing and distributing activities, stipulating, in this connection, however, that the four company partners—Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Alexander Korda and David O. Selznick—approve all personal service contracts.

At United Artists, Arthur W. Kelly, vice president and sales manager, admitted that, "the matter is being taken up with the U.A. owners now."

Elsewhere, the deal was described as being "orally set."

The same quarters expected that Carl Leserman, Mr. Sears' Warner assistant and confidante, would move with him to United Artists, as "executive assistant to the President."

Mr. Sears' contract with Warners is dated to next March, but a U.A. deal would include arrangements for his pre-release.

United Artists' partners have been conferring for months on the selection of a president, with William A. Rodgers, MGM, formally invited, and declining to head the company, and with Joseph Bernhard, of Warners, and George Schaefer, RKO, having been mentioned more recently.

Quick development of the Sears' matter this week followed by only a few days the association of David Selznick as producer-partner in U. A., and the announcement that the company would produce for the first time followed by the withdrawal of Walter Wanger from United Artists' producing ranks (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, October 18th, page 8). Mr. Wanger, who was to leave immediately for London, to produce, subsequently cancelled his Clipper reservation.

Harry Kosiner, eastern representative for Walter Wanger, on Monday was named executive assistant to Haskell M. Masters, western sales manager for United Artists, effective November 15th with the closing of the Wanger offices in New York.

Deanna's Suspension

Fodder for columnists and chit-chat for Hollywood cafe-society, but not as yet a factor affecting the flow of product from camera to projector, the Deanna Durbin-Universal difference, responsible for the star's suspension, continued in status quo at midweek with conferences in progress and nobody on either side talking for the outside.

Still on schedule to start in late November, as it was at the outbreak of the controversy, was the studio's next vehicle for the star, and still engaged in preparation for the production of it were producer-writer Bruce Manning and Director William A. Seiter.

Rumors of the reasons for the rift included everything in the columnists' kit of monkey wrenches, and realists in the production community were beginning to wonder whether an over-abundance of solicitude on the part of the star's journalistic admirers down the years and now, might not be in fact the real root of the trouble.

These realists were remembering that for several years the columnists had been referring to Miss Durbin in type as "Universal's life saver," "The little girl who lifted the mortgage on the studio," etc., going on from there, more recently, to conjecture this and that in connection with the Vaughn Paul and Joseph Pasternak resignations from her contract-holder's employ.

They were aware that Miss Durbin's contract has more than three years to run, and that she is but 19 years old, and the humorists among them were recalling that her current picture is entitled "It Started With Eve." The majority opine that a peace will be achieved before starting date of the film.

Financing the Decree

A $1,500,000 two per cent-six months' loan has been secured by Radio-Keith-Orpheum, from Bankers Trust, of New York. The parent of RKO-Radio acquired the loan, unsecured and unrestricted, for six months, closing the deal on Monday, following approval of action by Radio-Keith's board at a special meeting held last Friday.

It is understood that the producing company desired additional funds to build up a large inventory of films because of consent decree selling. RKO is reported to have approximately $8,000,000 tied up with three blocks-of-five product completed and revenue on the first block.

Other producing companies are said to be concerned over the problem of obtaining additional financing to cover production costs at a time when their blocks-of-five are on the shelf or just beginning to move.

Review Priority, Again

First breaching of the defenses set up against pre-release previewing of product by the lay press occurred this week Tuesday when two Los Angeles newspaper critics published glowing reviews of "How Green Was My Valley" a week in advance of tradeshowing. It was "All a Mistake" and due to a "misunderstanding" and it is not to happen again, but it brought to the light of printer's ink two pieces of copy establishing a new mark in the field of critical abracadabra.

Edwin Schallert wrote in the Times: "'How Green Was My Valley' was shown at 20th Century-Fox studio yesterday for comment by movie observers. So this is in no sense a preview of the picture, but it may be said of this filmization of Richard Llewellyn's novel that it will go far with audiences as a study of human characters, and in that domain is remarkable.

"The production belongs to that class of cinemas which do not strain theatrically for dramatic effects but which essay rather to make the dramatis personae human beings—ideally honest and sincere.

"While it was utterly different in motivation, 'Sergeant York' was of that genre, and doubtless 'How Green Was My Valley' will be rivalling it for Academy Awards in many departments.

Virginia Wright wrote in the News: "From all who have been privileged to see 'How Green Was My Valley' you will be hearing that it should be the undisputed contestant for the Academy Award this year. . . .

"Now that reviews of films are forbidden before their release, I am not permitted to go into details about the virtues of this picture. I can only say that it has a haunting beauty, infinite tenderness and the kind of realism that tears the heart."

Critics Schallert and Wright were two among several filmwriters invited as individuals interested in the development of the art, and not as reviewers, to see the picture in a studio projection room on Monday. The inviting of lay press people to early screenings, under pledge to withhold review until release date, commenced shortly after institution of review restrictions at start of consent decree selling and was adopted as a means of enabling correspondents with long deadlines to keep abreast, publication-wise, of the product going into exhibition. It is said of the Schallert and Wright pieces published on Tuesday, and borne out in a measure by the copy, that they were written as a result of a misunderstanding.

Another view of the matter was expressed by James Francis Crow, cinema editor of the Hollywood Citizen-News, who did not review "How Green Was My Valley" in his Tuesday evening edition but did review the preview situation under the heading, "Now It Can Be Told."

Critic Crow asserted, "If, indeed, there was ever any doubt about it at all, the reason for the recent studio ban against film previews in the daily papers ought now to be quite clear to the most naive. . . .

"It is Okay, in short, to inform the public in advance about good pictures but not Okay to inform the public in advance about bad pictures."

"How Green Was My Valley" was seen by a MOTION PICTURE HERALD reviewer on Friday, October 17th, at the 20th-Fox home office in New York, but, pursuant to the company's request, that publication be withheld by all of the press until the regular advance consent decree trade showing, next week, the review will not appear in the HERALD until November 1st.

Who Likes What

Moviegoers in Los Angeles, in the heart of film production, prefer double bills, although city as a whole is only 60 percent for duals and 40 percent against, according to a "front door ballot box," conducted by Dan E. Clark II in the Los Angeles Times.

In a breakdown by income groups, the results were as follows:

High income group, 21.1 percent for doubles, 78.9 for singles.

High medium group, 34.6 percent for doubles, 65.4 for singles.

Low medium group, 58.7 for doubles, 41.3 for singles.

Low group, 85.2 for doubles, 14.8 for singles.

War-and-Defense Pinch

Hollywood leaders and national exhibitor representatives were pleading this week with the Office of Production Management, at Washington, for "a break" on priorities, claimed to be needed to maintain both studios and theatres.

On behalf of exhibition, Joseph Bernard, Warner circuit general manager, and chairman of the Theatre Division of the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense, spoke to the OPM Monday and commented Tuesday in New York that "not only is it important that the Hollywood studios be granted the materials they need for the production of pictures, but unless the theatres also get the supplies to keep in shape, our exhibitors won't have suitable houses in which to show the pictures."

He also compared the "tremendous public good" done by theatres with their comparatively small priorities demands.

On Monday, also, Francis Harmon, of the MPPDA, forwarded to the OPM, a list of materials deemed essential for studio maintenance and erection of production sets during 1942. Items on which the industry asks priorities range all the way from lumber and wall boards, to nails, paint, electric wire, foundry metals, freon gas, helium, and whatnot, not forgetting $50,000 worth of ammunition, fireworks and liquid smoke.

Wheeler Hits "Jukes"

U. S. Senator Burton K. Wheeler is now turning his anti-film guns in newspapers in the direction of 'juke-box' movies, those nickel-in-the-slot performances in bar and beanery, which, he said, are both "lewd and lascivious" and should be brought into the Nye-Clark-Wheeler investigation of propaganda on the screen, the investigation of which been in indefinite recess, on numerous postponements.

Senate subcommittee chairman D. Worth Clark, of Idaho, said this week in Washington that he expected to call the other four committee members together in a week to determine on a reopening of the propaganda hearings.

Senator Clark mentioned U. S. Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, Norman Chandler, publisher of the Los Angeles Times, and Louis de Rochemont, producer of March of Time, as likely witnesses—if and when.

Fiorello Henry LaGuardia, Mayor of New York, told the press and motion picture industry, last Thursday, at a luncheon of the AMPA, in New York, that the industry "has nothing to be ashamed of" and is to be commended "for standing up, toe to toe and fighting back" those groups responsible for "the Washington inquisition."

WAR-AND-DEFENSE NO. 1 INFLUENCE ON GROSSES TODAY, OWNERS REPORT

Defense Spending, Labor Migrations, the Draft, Army Camps, Emergency Schedules, All Changing Recreational Life

War and the national defense program have become a matter of personal concern to almost every exhibitor in the United States. In practically every section of the country motion picture theatre operators report that local defense activities are a major influence on their boxoffice grosses.

The effect of the national defense program, generally, has been to stimulate business of all kinds, including theatre patronage. Managers report from many sections, however, that boxoffices have not exactly kept pace with other business rises. To many exhibitors the national defense program has presented problems of labor migration, rising costs and changes in the entertainment habits of their customers.

New factories, labor migrations, the draft, neighboring army camps and rearrangement of community working schedules are only a few of the factors which are working drastic changes in the industrial and recreational life of American communities. Some theatres have found the defense activity a bonanza with grosses rising as much as 25 per cent in the past few months. Other exhibitors report defense headaches from the drafting of help, shutting down of local industries by priority curbs, and large sections of their audience moving to other towns for employment in defense factories.

Executives admit, however, that the increase in the nation's payroll has been spread over a wide area with all types of theatres in all neighborhoods likely to profit. At the end of the fiscal year on June 31st the Office of Government Reports listed defense contracts and expenditures of $17,164,915,000.

Theatregoing Habits Changed

Changes in theatre-going habits have been brought about in many sections by the defense programs. Night shifts, and odd hour swing shifts in many industries have taken patrons from regular evening and matinee performances. To reach them many theatres have started morning shows, earlier matinees, special midnight performances, and "lunch hour matinees" of short subjects.

The draft as yet has not made serious inroads into theatre personnel. But with many of their ushers in 1-A classification many managers are hiring girls to seat patrons and take tickets. Managerial staffs, generally, have been exempted from the draft through age or family dependence. Large theatres and circuits report no loss of executives, although some student managers are in national service.

New construction, while inspired in some sections by new army camps or defense plants has been limited. Government restrictions on building materials, imposed last week will probably halt any further expansion.

Sale of U. S. bonds and stamps is another defense contribution by the motion picture industry. Bonds are being substituted for cash prizes in games and defense stamps in all denominations are offered in change by many theatres.

There is general reluctance by managers and circuit executives to discuss the percentage of increase in grosses attributable to defense work in their territory. Estimates of the increase range from 20 to 25 per cent in the larger "arsenal areas" such as Detroit, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, to "slight" or "none at all" in communities hit by priorities or to which the flow of defense expenditure has not yet penetrated.

WAR AND DEFENSE AT THE BOXOFFICE

War threats, the nation's vast defense activities, and their effect on the motion picture boxoffice were the subject of a special MOTION PICTURE HERALD investigation made at first hand in the field. The report is the first of a series revealing what the draft, priorities, defense expenditures, industrial migrations, new labor hour schedules and other symptoms of the national emergency have done to the entertainment business in every section of the country. The second article will appear in MOTION PICTURE HERALD next week.

Washington Business Zooming But Exhibitor Fears High Costs

Washington, the hub of the Nation's defense program, finds itself—from the film entertainment point of view—in the position of playing host to the largest number of amusement-goers in the capital's history, but with many complications plaguing operators.

On the bright side are a skyrocketing federal payroll, attendance mounting approximately in proportion and a fair degree of certainty that the local "boom" will be maintained for a long spell, possibly several years.

On the other hand, theatre operators are worried by rising operating costs, difficulty in getting and holding personnel because of military conscription and the competition of government jobs. There is also an undercurrent of uncertainty generated by workings of the consent decree.

In general, however, exhibitors, chains and independents alike, are satisfied and uncomplaining. Certainly they could hardly wish for better attendance volume. As for the flies in their ointment, these are being accepted in the hope that they will eventually be eliminated.

Operators of Washington's first run houses are loath to discuss business at present in terms of dollars and cents because negotiations are still pending with the projectionists' and stage hands' unions for new contracts. There is apparent caution lest any admission of revenue rises by the "bosses" would be converted into an argument by the organized technicians for more pay.

While withholding actual figures, exhibition executives do not hesitate to say that business is good. Here and there a tendency is noted to attribute current boxoffice prosperity primarily to quality of product, rather than to the population influx.

"Washington is noted for its business stability," says Hardie Meakin, managing director of RKO Keith's. "What we're having now, speaking for this house, is not so much a 'boom' as a good response to good pictures."

Uniforms Fill Downtown Seats

Although there are upward of 50,000 service men billetted within a short radius of Washington, men who converge on the city in droves on week ends, Mr. Meakin is not inclined to credit this factor as a boxoffice aid. He points out, as do the heads of other picture-only policy theatres, that the boys in uniform head first for the vaudeville centers when they are showminded.

Further, patronage by the military, while eagerly welcomed, is a revenue drawback, rather than an advantage, in a city jammed with more than 200,000 civilian employes of the federal government. Men in uniform are admitted for half the regular admission price. This cut in grosses is particularly true at the downtown first runs, which reap the majority of soldier tickets.

All the first runs, as well as virtually every neighborhood house, have lowered tariffs for service men. The prevailing special rate downtown is 25 cents, plus government tax. In the neighborhoods, it averages 20 cents. This concession applies to the Negro theatres, most of which are operated by A. E. Lichtman.

The Warner Brothers theatres, whose two downtown first-run and 19 neighborhood houses are the most important single chain in Washington, concede a healthy rise in business since the defense program moved into high gear this year. They, too, cite higher operating costs and increasing difficulty in obtaining and holding ushers, student managers and office help.

Warner's Earle and Loew's Capitol are the two downtown combined policy houses which are experiencing the most consistent boxoffice gains. Until the beginning of this year, $15,000 was an average week at either theatre. Now $20,000 and $25,000 weeks are not unusual.

Headquartered in Washington are Loew and Warner theatre territories covering large portions of Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, Delaware, and Pennsylvania. Many of these houses are revamping their opening and closing schedules to accommodate night workers, split shifts, etc. There is no such problem to meet in the District of Columbia. Now, as before, the Capital is a city of government, not of industry. There has been no change in performance times.

Staggered Paydays Help

A recent development, due indirectly to the defense upturn, is the staggering of government paydays, which has resulted in a more even time distribution of theatre business, as well as other forms of spending. Previously all government employes were paid on the 15th and last days of each month. Now one-half are paid on those dates and the other half on the 8th and 23rd. The government payroll, incidentally, is flirting with the $35,000,000 a month mark. That means that each and every week in the year some $8,000,000 to $9,000,000 is paid out to Uncle Sam's workers in Washington and suburban Maryland and Virginia.

Shortage of help in house management brings up the usherette question. Will young women be hired—as in World War 1—to take the places of youths called into the Army or who have accepted the call of more lucrative positions?

EFFECT OF DEFENSE WORK VARIES

The answer, on the basis of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD survey, is an emphatic no. Without exception, Washington executives said they will bend every effort to retain male ushers. Several theatres are attempting to solve the problem by hiring college boys on a part-time basis. RKO Keith's, for example, has two part-timers for every full-time usher. In a number of instances ushers' pay has been increased to hold turnover to a minimum.

An interesting case, in this respect, is the Kogod-Burka chain of neighborhood housees, which reports no personnel worries whatever.

"If anything, we have more help available than we can place," says Fred Kogod, of the K-B Amusement Co., which operates the new Apex and Atlas theatres and the old Princess.

Build New Neighborhood

Kogod, independently, is putting the finishing touches to the "Senator," a 932-seat theatre expected to be completed by Christmas and which will serve a 600-family defense housing community in the Benning (northeast Washington) community. Particularly in northeast and southeast Washington housing developments are being erected in large numbers and the Senator will be the first film center erected expressly to meet this specialized demand.

Simultaneously, the Warner office is engaged in air-conditioning its Savoy, York and Apollo neighborhood houses, while its Home theatre recently underwent extensive remodeling. Warners' Metropolitan is having its lobby redecorated. New seats are in store for RKO Keith's.

A humorous sidelight, reflecting the steady influx from the hinterland, is the fact that many patrons walk up to the boxoffice with the query: "Are you giving away prizes tonight?"

The answer, almost invariably, is in the negative. Washington is not a double-feature, prize-giving show town, although a few houses here and there do indulge.

In summary, Washington's film folk are uncomplaining, hopeful that motion pictures will continue to hold their universal popularity, for if they do, the population growth and high standard of living in the Nation's Capital are twin guaranteees that business will remain good.

Key Niagara Factories Bring Top Buffalo Trade

National defense has greatly increased motion picture theatre business in Buffalo and throughout the entire Niagara area. Buffalo and its environs house many new industrial plants, all of which are keys in the country's national defense setup. Among them are Bell Aircraft (plants in Buffalo and near Niagara Falls), Curtiss Wright Corporation (plants in Buffalo and Cheektowaga, just outside city limits), Buffalo Arms Corporation (in Cheektowaga), Spencer Lens Company, Bethlehem, and Republic Steel companies, and Wickwire Spencer Steel Company.

Expansion programs have brought countless thousands of new residents to the Buffalo district. Wages are high, working conditions excellent in new plants.

These workers and their families have plenty of money for recreation, a good share of it going for motion pictures. Boxoffice income, as a result, has measurably increased.

No theatres here have yet begun running early morning or late night performances for defense workers.

Defense work, coupled with the Army Draft, has been responsible for a lack of men as theatre ushers. The Twentieth Century, a Dipson house, has a complete new staff of usherettes. Other houses may follow suit, if conditions warrant.

The closest Army Camp to Buffalo is Fort Niagara, at Lewistown, below Niagara Falls and some 35 or 38 miles from Buffalo. The soldiers have their own motion pictures of first run caliber. Consequently there is little effect on the business at the theatres. A new theatre being constructed at Main Street and City Line by Dipson interests is partly a result of an influx of defense workers and a migration of families to outskirts and suburbs lying near Main Street city line. Dewey Michaels, owner of the Mercury and Palace theatres, plans a community house in the Kenmore-North Park section. There are defense housing projects near by.

No local theatres are selling defense stamps or bonds to their public, but the drive is plugged on the screen.

All theatres have made reductions in admission price for servicemen. The average reduction is 20 per cent.

Drive-ins here are using the save-gasoline drive-in plugs for sitting in your car to watch a movie.

Defense Assistance to Central Ohio Is Slight

There has been no appreciable upturn in theatre business in the Cincinnati territory by reason of military mobilization or industrial defense activities.

Despite the fact that many key industries are working "around the clock," and payrolls, on the average, are higher than they have been in the last decade or longer, the higher wages drawn by factory workers have not been reflected at the box-office to any worthwhile extent. Workers' hours, either regular or overtime, appear to be such as to leave little, if any, time for theatre attendance. Theatres, nevertheless, except in a very few instances, have not provided showings at special hours to meet the convenience of these men.

No usherettes have as yet replaced ushers, since the draft has not made sufficient inroads on staffs to date to justify this change.

Although soldiers from Fort Thomas, adjacent to Cincinnati, and Fort Haynes, in suburban Columbus, attend the theatres in these cities, the number who do so is negligible compared with the whole. Cincinnati first-run theatres are making a special rate of 24 cents after 1 P. M. weekdays, and 30 cents on Sundays and holidays to men in military uniform, compared with the regular scales of 40 and 50 cents.

Defense stamps are being sold at the Twentieth Century, Ohio and Eden, Cincinnati suburban theatres, and the State, at Newport, Ky., all units in the chain operated by Willis H. Vance. No other houses as far as is known have as yet undertaken this.

St. Louis Competition Outgains Film Trade

The federal government has awarded contracts totaling an estimated $300,000,000 in St. Louis area, but a slim portion of this has found its way into the theatre box-offices.

Exhibitors are frank to admit business is off. Fred Wehrenberg, co-owner of a chain of 25 neighborhood houses and head of the MPTOA in St. Louis, says his theatres are off 15 per cent compared to a year ago, adding: "If you want to see where the defense money is going, drop into the taverns, honkey-tonks and bowling alleys."

Defense contracts have been numerous in St. Louis, because of its strategic location, but not a single theatre has even contemplated late-night or early-morning performances to accommodate the thousands of workers in this area.

Competitively the St. Louis Cardinals' race with the Brooklyn Dodgers for the National League baseball championship in a three-game series, drew approximately 75,000 persons. The Cardinals' attendance was more than 600,000 for the season, a record. The St. Louis Municipal Opera played to its recent season, a new attendance record. The Civic Theatre, small legitimate house, also set a new mark.

Citing the success of competitive entertainments, and asserting that first-run motion picture houses seldom exceed a normal gross, Mr. Wehrenberg blamed the "poor product now available."

While no male ushers have been replaced by usherettes as yet, such a move is contemplated by several houses, Mr. Wehrenberg said, including his own. On the problem of ushers, Fanchon & Marco officials said 650 young men answered their help wanted ad last week. Apparently there will be no shortage for some time.

Building of new theatres has been concentrated chiefly in areas outside the city, near the three Army camps here. However, Jefferson Barracks located just outside St. Louis, has put up three new post theatres with a total capacity of about 3,000. Ft. Leonard Wood near Rolla has five with a capacity of about 5,000, and Scott Field has one theatre with 1,000 seats.

Mr. Wehrenberg said the thousands of soldiers at liberty on weekends from these camps seldom attend the theatres, though admissions have been reduced in half for them and their dates.

Mr. Wehrenberg estimated the general loss in business, "because people aren't interested, that's all," in the St. Louis area at 15 per cent.

Twin City Upswing Set at 15 Per Cent

Theatre men in the Minneapolis territory are heartened by a definite upswing in business attributable, they say, to defense industry.

Minneapolis is the site of Fort Snelling, used as a basic training center. A number of defense industries are located there. At New Brighton, a few miles outside the city, the new $30,000,000 Twin City ordnance plant is being constructed.

One result has been a move to construct New Brighton's first theatre. The Engler Brothers at Hopkins, Minn., a suburb, have recently opened their new 1,200-seat Hopkins. In Minneapolis the Alvin, closed after a fire early in the summer, will be rebuilt.

Theatres are not selling defense stamps and bonds, nor have they made special rates for service men. There has been talk of employing girl ushers because of rapid turnover among male employes. No theatres have changed hours to accommodate defense workers. Twin City industry schedules have not as yet made that feasible.

A consensus of estimates holds that business is up about 15 per cent. The increase is steady, indicating possible further gains before January 1st.

Pennsylvania Coal Cities Hit by Labor Exodus

Until lately Luzerne and Lackawanna Counties in Pennsylvania have received little benefit from the defense boom. In reverse, several thousand workers and families have left the region to take defense jobs in Philadelphia,

New Jersey, Maryland and New York as well as the New England area.

Of late the demand for anthracite has bolstered operations at the coal mines. For the first time in many years practically all of them are working five days a week.

With the migration of workers and families to other areas theatre attendances slumped considerably and only lately have they felt gain as a result of the increased coal production. Only two regions in Northeastern Pennsylvania, Berwick and Williamsport, have had any defense booms.

As yet no theatres have resorted to early morning or late night performances for defense workers. Neither have any had to replace male ushers with usherettes, although some of the theatres have found that some of their ushers have left to take defense jobs.

Since there are no Army camps in the vicinity, the area received no increased business from the military trade. The nearest military reservation is Tobyhanna shooting range outside Scranton.

While new theatres are going up in Plains and others have been either completely or partially remodeled in Hazleton, Wilkes-Barre, Sheppton and McAdoo, among others, none of the work can be directly attributed to defense projects.

Cut rates for service men have not yet been instituted in the region, although there is talk of them. Neither do the theatres sell defense stamps nor bonds.

Comerford circuit executives at Scranton report that defense work has not aided their business in Pennsylvania's coal areas. There is little defense manufacturing in the coal counties. The demand on mines by defense industries has kept them working steadily, but Comerford managers report that these wages have been offset by the migration of younger men to manufacturing areas.

None of the Comerford houses are selling defense stamps. A decision on cutting rates for servicemen on furlough has not been reached. There are no army camps near the coal fields.

Influx of Workers Aids New Haven Area

Although New Haven territory exhibitors first cried that defense industries were ruining the attendance of male patrons and their families who had to adapt themselves to new working hours, the late summer and early fall improvement in business seem to belie this conclusion. Exhibitors now admit that although there is less leisure time because of the tremendous impetus of defense industries throughout New England, and regular week-day attendance may have decreased somewhat, a good picture now far outgrosses former takes. Concentration of business in the week-ends seems to be greater than ever.

To compensate for the business lost by the three-to-eleven o'clock shift in industry, Loew-Poli and Warners have been running early morning "Defense Shows." They reportedly draw good attendance from workers, and their families, during the summer.

In Bridgeport, where population and weekly payroll have shown the biggest improvement in Connecticut, the Warner and the Poli houses both have weekly shows starting at 9 A. M. The Loew-Poli, Worcester, starts two-a-week morning shows this week, on Fridays and Saturdays, while the Palace, Meriden, Poli, in Hartford, and Poli in Waterbury play one morning a week. Admissions are on the matinee scale. Earl Bird shows are operated in Bridgeport, Meriden, Worcester, Waterbury and Hartford. Managers report these morning shows well attended.

As a result of an increase in population due to migratory workers, a new 1,000-seat house is under construction in East Hartford, which, with Hartford, has become increasingly important in the industrial scene. Peter Perakos and Joseph Quittner report their new house will be ready for operation by October 15th. In Bridgeport, two new building permits for theatres have been granted, but some delay has arisen because of lack of steel for construction and prohibitive building costs. However, several houses on the Strand Amusement chain and others have renovated at substantial investments to meet the increased activity.

All houses have reduced their admission by about half for service men, but attendance is negligible. since soldiers are seeing new pictures at camps.

Chicago Defense Stimulus Felt in Loop, Mill Districts

Chicago theatres have not benefited greatly by defense projects, according to leading operators of the city, although for a period beginning around July 4th and ending September 1st, they enjoyed an increased in business of approximately 9 per cent due, it is thought, to improved employment conditions. Business has dropped off in the past two weeks.

Outside Chicago, but in the area served by local film exchanges, several towns are profiting by their proximity to ordnance and munitions workers. Others, with defense projects nearby, report only a negligible increase in receipts.

M. M. Rubens, vice-president of the Publix-Great States circuit, operating 68 houses in Illinois and Indiana, has compared figures of theatres in defense areas with those in non-defense towns and says there is little difference in receipts. Taking Joliet, Ill., which is 12 miles from the Elwood ordnance works at Wilmington, as an example, he compared results there with that of Aurora, a town of the same somparative size as Joliet and found very little increase in receipts over Aurora. The Wilton Theatre, in Wilmington, has found it necessary to run extra matinees to accommodate munitions employees and a new 500-seat theatre has been announced. Building will start in December.

LaPorte, Ind., 11 miles from the Kingsbury ammunition plant, is enjoying a healthy increase in business. Most of the theatres find it necessary to open earlier and run later. The Roxy theatre, heretofore operating from 2 to 11 P. M., now opens at 11:30 A. M., and runs until 11:30 P. M. Business in Hammond, Ind., located in an industrial region, has increased 20 per cent in the last three months, while Gary, Ind., has undergone a strange transition despite the fact the mills there are going full blast.

Ten weeks ago the steel mills of Gary, the heart of the middle-west steel industry, went on full time operation and for six weeks business increased about 30 per cent. In the past four weeks business in general over the entire town has been below normal. An investigation by the Chamber of Commerce revealed that the town had bought $472,000 worth of defense bonds within the last month and attributed the decrease in business to this.

Conditions at Rockford, Ill., adjacent to Camp Grant, and Waukegan, Ill., near the Great Lakes Naval Station and Fort Sheridan have not been materially affected. Approximately 4,000 men from the last two camps filter into the downtown district of Chicago weekly and take advantage of the cut rates for service men. These are five to 38 cents below prices.

Two new developments, the result of defense projects, have been announced in Chicago. The H. and E. Balaban Corporation plans a $500,000 suburban, shopping, residential and amusement center in Melrose Park, Ill. The project is headed by Harry and Elmer Balaban, younger brothers of Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures. It is not connected with the Balaban and Katz circuit. It will adjoin the new 31 million dollar aircraft engine works of the General Motors Corporation. Plans include a 1,000 car drive-in theatre and a 900-seat year-round playhouse.

Omaha Anticipates Boom From Army Activities

The defense boom has yet to boost theatre boxoffice takes in the Nebraska-western Iowa area, but exhibitors and others in the film industry at Omaha are anticipating a prosperous fall and winter due to the nation's arms program.

Nebraska and western Iowa have received about $30,000,000 worth of defense contracts so far, and part of that amount is bound to reach boxoffices, Will Singer, manager of the Brandeis, first-run Mort H. Singer house, reports.

Omaha itself has a $15,000,000 bomber plant under construction at Fort Crook, ten miles south of the city. At present 3,000 men are working there. When completed it is expected that 10,000 to 20,000 men will be employed there. They are bound to help theatre business, exchange men say.

The draft has so far put no pressure on male ushers. The Orpheum has usherettes, but has had them for several years. A few Omaha houses report difficulty replacing ushers that leave. Ushers are getting harder to find, they report.

Fort Crook is a motor transport base but does not have a large number of men. There are also only a few soldiers at Fort Omaha. Camps scattered through Nebraska are helping theatres in their immediate vicinity.

So far there has been no theatre building due to defense activities, but theatre supply men report locations are being considered in South Omaha and Bellevue, suburbs adjacent to the bomber plant area. Two theatres now in South Omaha, owned by the Epstein chain, are doing good business, but have no special hours.

OHIO JOB INCREASE TYPIFIES WAR BOOM

Scenes reminiscent of the war-work boom of 1917-18 are being enacted in many Ohio industrial cities, it is reported, as the state's rubber, automotive, steel mills and other industries turn full attention to defense work. The state, one of the first to benefit from defense sub-contracting, is considered a typical example of the increasing defense employment.

Industrial employment in Ohio showed extensive increases for August of this year compared with the same month of 1940, according to figures released by the Ohio State University Bureau of Business Research, at Columbus. Canton led with the biggest gain, 41 per cent. Other key situations showed percentage gains as follows: Cleveland, 31; Akron, 30; Dayton, 29; Cincinnati, 28; Columbus, 23; Toledo, 20, and Youngstown, 17.

64 CIRCUITS BUY MORE PRODUCT, IN LARGE AND SMALL BLOCKS, FOR '42

Metro First to Report Results of Blocks-of-Five Sales; Marked Trading in Product of Decree and Non-Decree Companies

MGM, first of the five decree-bound majors to disclose the total number of deals on its first blocks of film offered during the new season, reports, through its sales manager, William F. Rodgers, that it had made 6,130 deals for the first block, and 5,209 deals for the second.

Mr. Rodgers added that the new decree selling system was working smoothly, for this company, and that most of the theatres so far signed are independent, adding that he had not completed figures on the circuit deals.

Meanwhile, the larger circuits continue to buy majors' product, both decree and non-decree, in increasing numbers, with several large deals disclosed recently.

Universal, for instance, reports that it had closed deals with Balaban and Katz, Great States, Minnesota Amusement, Wilby-Kincey, Intermountain Theatres, Interstate of Texas, Texas Consolidated Mullin and Pinanski, and other Paramount-affiliated circuits. Other circuits which have bought the company's new product are RKO, Famous Players Canadian, Canadian Odeon, Fox West Coast and Warners.

The announcement was made following the recent return to New York, from a western tour, of William A. Scully, company general sales manager, and William J. Heineman, assistant sales manager. They said the circuit deals closed by the company set a record for any comparable period.

The FWC and Warner pacts are for three years; the RKO, for a "long term", likewise those with Paramount's partners and associates.

Other buyers of Universal's new product are the Butterfield circuit, of Michigan, and the J. L. and S. Circuit, Chicago.

United Artists, selling its films singly, this week disclosed a number of deals with circuits in the eastern district.

In the New York territory, of which Clarence Eiseman is branch manager, deals have been closed with Century, Randforce and the Skouras circuits.

In the Washington territory, deals were completed with the Frank Durkee, Lou Rome, Craver, Gaertner, Bernheimer, Wilder, Garman, and the Abe Lichtman circuits.

A deal for the entire 1941-42 program was also made with the Wilmer and Vincent circuit in the Washington and Philadelphia territories.

Other deals in the Philadelphia territory have been completed with the Affiliated, Varbalow, Chamberlain, Boyd, and the Greenfield circuits.

In the Midwest, the company has sold to the Warner theatres in Chicago, and, in that general territory, to the Indiana-Illinois, Anderson, Robert Lucas, and Ben Lasker aggregations.

RKO continues to sell the circuits, last week adding nine more, as follows: Florida State Theatres, 102 theatres; Wilby-Kincey, 86 houses; Jefferson Amusement Co., and East Texas Theatres, 76 houses; Lucas and Jenkins, 53 houses; Everett Enterprises, 24 houses; J. Real Neth Theatres, six houses; Lam Amusement Co., 13 houses; United Amusement Corp., Canada, 25 houses; Confederation Amusements, Ltd., Canada, seven houses.

The national Warner circuit has also bought new RKO films.

The company's short subjects sales will probably exceed those of 1940 by 15 per cent, according to Harry Michalson, short subjects sales manager, who asserted the consent decree had not decreased sales.

Cooperative Theatres, of Detroit, last week bought Republic's 1941-42 output, for 49 theatres. Previously, the company had sold its program to 161 theatres of the Texas Interstate chain, and to others.

Among recent additions to Warners' customers for new product, are the Kerosotes Circuit of Springfield, Illinois, and the Hanline Circuit, Macomb, same state.

Additional buyers for Monogram's 1941-42 pictures include the Florida Theatres circuit of 65 houses; the Morse and Rothenberg aggregation, in New England; the Dipson houses in western New York State; the R. E. Griffith houses in New Mexico, and Publix-Richards-Nace in Arizona.

Producers Releasing Corporation's 1941-42 program is also being bought by circuits, and the latest deals, as disclosed by the company's New York home office, are with the Waters Theatres, Atlanta; Wilby-Kincey Circuit, Charlotte, North Carolina; the Ray Allison Circuit, Pittsburgh; Frisina Amusement Company, St. Louis, and the Maine and New Hampshire Circuit, Boston.

EXHIBITOR WANTS FILMS ON DEFENSE

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice-president of Fanchon & Marco, announced in St. Louis this week that his company is "eager" to obtain as many films showing American armed forces in action as possible, "because our patrons, we find, are eager to see such pictures." Mr. Arthur said "vociferous applause" has greeted films of this kind in the F. & M. houses, and he reported further that the singing of the national anthem before each performance has been accepted by the audiences.

Kreisler Joins Army

Samuel Kreisler, member of United Artists home office publicity department in New York, left last week to join the United States Army. He had been with the company for the past nine months.

Levinger Joins N.S.S.

Herbert Levinger, advertising man, has been named special representative for National Screen Service in Chicago, replacing Phil Rouda, resigned.

Michigan Houses Launch Hudson's Campaign Plan

A total of 373 theatres in Michigan, more than a majority of houses in the state, has been enrolled as the first contingent by Allied Theatres of Michigan in the plan proposed by Earl J. Hudson to sell the motion picture institutionally as "the country's greatest form of entertainment." The campaign has been titled the "Michigan Allied Plan."

Material for the campaign will be available to interested exhibitors, according to Ray Branch, Michigan Allied's president, for adoption on a local or regional basis, and cooperation has been pledged by national leaders for launching the plan throughout the country.

Among those who have commended the plan are Abe Montague, general sales manager of Columbia; Arthur Kelly, vice-president of United Artists; Claude Lee, director of public relations for Paramount, and representatives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mr. Branch said he has received invitations from other state groups to attend their meetings and explain the plan.

The campaign will include the use of testimonials by prominent persons outside of the motion picture industry and is designed to build goodwill for the industry as a whole.

The testimonials will stress the value of films as entertainment and an educational force and the health, comfort, convenience, safety and inspirational values of theatres, Mr. Branch explained. This material will be used in advertising in various forms, including trailers on the screen.

Theatres so far enrolled include 135 independent houses affiliated with Michigan Allied; 105 Cooperative Theatres; Butterfield's 115 houses and 18 theatres of United Detroit.

Details were worked out at a meeting in Detroit on Thursday, October 16th, by a committee headed by Mr. Branch and including E. J. Hudson, president of United Detroit Theatres; E. C. Beatty, president of Butterfield Circuit; C. L. Buermele, general manager of Cooperative Theatres, and John McPherson, manager of the Detroit branch of National Screen Service.

Monaghan Succeeds Carey

Al Rosenberg, head of Washington state theatres in the Hamrick-Evergreen circuit, has appointed Robert Monaghan city manager of Bellingham theatres for this chain, succeeding the late James Carey. Monaghan thus moves from the American theatre to the Mt. Baker theatre in that city. His position at the American will be filled by John Bretz, at present manager of the Neptune theatre in Seattle's University district. Bretz's successor here has not yet been selected, and Carl Mahne, manager of the University Egyptian is also temporarily directing the Neptune operation.

ARBITRATION HIGH COURT OVERRULES BOARD DECISIONS AS 'INADEQUATE'

Board Reverses Los Angeles, Boston Awards; Interprets Section VIII, Cites Inadequate Testimony; New Cases Reported

Inadequate testimony from the complaining exhibitor and the strictly limited powers of arbitrators under the consent decree were cited by the motion picture Appeal Board as causes for two reversals of arbitration awards, this week.

The "Supreme Court" of film arbitration on Monday overruled the findings of arbitrators in Boston's third and Los Angeles' first cases. The appeal decisions were the first to completely overrule local arbitrators.

In the Boston case the three members of the Appeal Board, Van Vechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger, reversed the award of Henry Channing, arbitrator, in a clearance action filed by Lucien Descoteaux of Manchester, N. H. They dismissed the complaint with costs.

"Proof offered by the complainant is inadequate to show that existing clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable" the Appeal Board said in setting aside Mr. Channing's award. As reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for July 12th, Mr. Channing had reduced Mr. Descoteaux' clearance to 30 days maximum after first run and seven days after second and subsequent runs.

The limited powers of the arbitrator under Section VIII of the consent decree were cited by the Appeal Board in dismissing the Los Angeles complaint of O. W. Lewis, operator of the Mission Playhouse, San Gabriel. They declared that the language of the decree is permissive not mandatory in its discussion of maximum clearance. This, they ruled, prohibits the arbitrator from increasing clearance. Herbert Cameron, arbitrator of the first Los Angeles case, lacked jurisdiction to raise the maximum clearance against intervening theatres, they declared.

A comment by the Appeal Board that the record "strongly indicated the equity of the arbitrator's award" and the opinion that it would have been a fair and equitable adjustment of clearance relations between the involved theatres, except for decree restrictions, was appended to the decision by the Appeal Board. They held however, that such a result cannot be accomplished under Section VIII of the consent decree.

The Los Angeles case was appealed by James Edwards, Jr. of the Edwards circuit on August 1st. The case was filed in April by Mr. Lewis and was heard in late May by Mr. Cameron, counsel for the state railroad commission. Paramount, Warners, Loew's, Inc., the Edwards circuit, United West Coast Theatres Corporation and the Alhambra Amusement Company were involved.

Sought Uniform Clearance

Mr. Lewis's complaint, the Appeal Board reported, called for a complete readjustment of zoning and clearance in the Los Angeles area. He asked a uniform clearance system and an award granting the Mission theatre clearance after Pasadena instead of Alhambra, and a run ahead of the intervening Rosemead and Garvey theatres with seven days clearance over them.

The arbitrator found that the following clearances, granted by the three defendants, were reasonable. Pasadena 1st run, 7 days over Alhambra 1st run; Alhambra 1st run, 14 days over Monterey; Alhambra 1st run, 21 days over Mission Playhouse. He found that the following clearance was unreasonable; Alhambra 1st run, 21 days over Rosemead and Garvey, because this latter clearance was not long enough to give effect to a priority over them to which he held Mission Playhouse was entitled.

The arbitrator made the following award:

"(1) The maximum clearance which may be granted to Alhambra and Garfield theatres (Alhambra first run), over the Rosemead theatre in licenses hereafter entered into by Loew's, Paramount and Vitagraph, distributors, shall be seven days after Mission Playhouse closing (San Gabriel first run).

(2) The maximum clearance which may be granted Alhambra and Garfield theatres (Alhambra first run), over the Garvey theatre in licenses hereafter entered into by Loew's, Paramount, and Vitagraph, shall be seven days after Mission Playhouse closing (San Gabriel first run).

In other respects the complaint was dismissed and the arbitrator added the customary clause to the effect that,

"Nothing contained in this award shall restrict the exhibitors' right to license for any theatre for any run which he is able to negotiate with any distributor, nor the distributors' right to license for any theatre any run which it desires to grant."

The sole question at issue on appeal, the Board held, was whether the arbitrator had power under the decree to grant a run to the Mission ahead of the Rosemead and Garvey and a seven day clearance over them.

Section VIII, the board wrote, limits the power of the arbitrator to finding a clearance unreasonable or reasonable. If found unreasonable the arbitrator's award may fix "the maximum clearance between the theatres involved which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant."

This language contemplates an exhibitor complaint that clearance against his theatre is unreasonable in point of time the appeal board ruled, which view, it said, "is reinforced by the further provision limiting the arbitrator to fixing a maximum clearance between the theatres involved."

"This can only mean a reduction, not an increase," the three judges wrote, "because the fixing of a maximum greater than the existing clearance would "have no effect. The distributor would not be compelled to grant the greater clearance. The language of the Decree is maximum clearance 'which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant.' This is clearly not mandatory but permissive, and the exhibitor against whom the maximum clearance is granted is still free to bargain with the distributor for such clearance less than the fixed maximum as he is able to obtain. The Decree primarily aims to prevent oppression on the part of distributors by the imposition of unreasonably long clearance."

Mr. Cameron's award, they added, increased the maximum clearance against the Rosemead and Garvey in a manner not authorized by the decree.

Cites Section VIII Violation

The board also pointed out that Section VIII provides that nothing in the section and no award under it shall "restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which he is able to negotiate with any distributor, nor the distributor's right to license for any theatre any run which it desires to grant."

"It is clear that the award in this proceeding violates this provision" the Appeal Board said.

"By providing that the Rosemead and Garvey theatres cannot play a picture until seven days after Mission Playhouse closing the arbitrator has created a run in favor of the Mission Playhouse and against Rosemead and Garvey. He has fixed their respective playing positions so far as run is concerned. Since the three theatres are competitive the award plainly restricts the right of distributors to grant and an exhibitor to negotiate for a run. The arbitrator lacked jurisdiction to make such an award under Section VIII," they ruled.

The Appeal Board reversed in full the award handed down on July 9th by Mr. Channing, in the clearance complaint filed by Lucien Descoteaux of Manchester, N. H., against the Big Five.

The appeal was made by 20th Century-Fox and the State Operating Company, intervenor. The State Operating company is a subsidiary of the Shea circuit.

In reviewing the facts, the Appeal Board declared there are 10 theatres operating in the Manchester area. Manchester has a population of 77,000, most of them mill workers earning moderate wages. All of the theatres are located in or within a short distance of the town's shopping center and are highly competitive they said. Mr. Descoteaux operates three theatres while the State Operating Company operates four and has an interest in a fifth.

The clearance under which the Descoteaux theatres now operate varies. Loew's and RKO give clearance of 60 days on first run, 14 days on second run and seven days on third run. Paramount has 45 days on first run, "blank" on second run and third run "as usual." The Rex and the Empire, both operated by the complainant, play seven days after second or third run. Fox clearance is 60 days on a percentage picture and 45 days on a flat rate for first run; 14 days for second, 14 days for third and 14 days for fourth run. This is under the terms of a three year franchise granted in 1939 to the State Operating Company.

Historically, the Appeal Board said, the 60 day clearance established by Fox and enjoyed by the intervenor, is shown to have been in

FANCHON AND MARCO WILL NOT DROP TRIPLES

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice-president of Fanchon and Marco, discussing triple features at several St. Louis neighborhood theatres his company operates for St. Louis Amusement Company, said he had no intention of discontinuing the lengthy programs.

He likened triple features to the large Sunday newspapers, saying, "Readers of newspapers can read the features they like and toss the rest of the paper aside; it's that way with triple features. Patrons can come in and see all three features or two or one of them. I don't think newspaper publishers would discontinue their big Sunday newspapers if a minority of their readers attacked them."

Mr. Arthur said triple features have been popular and he will make no changes until competitive theatres stop "giving away dishes."

SEVEN DISTRICTS REPORT CASES

existence for 11 years and antedated the coming of the State circuit to Manchester.

"Sixty days clearance on first run is also shown to have been prevalent in a number of New England industrial areas somewhat comparable to Manchester," they also observed.

"It is incontrovertible," said the decision, "that by far the largest revenue of the distributors is derived from the intervenors' prior run theatres. The first run houses of the intervenor are booked mainly on a percentage basis. The complainant books mainly flat rate with few selective percentage pictures."

"We find the testimony of the complainant quite inconclusive," the Appeal judges wrote. "Upon it, however, the arbitrator has undertaken to revolutionize completely clearance in Manchester. He has done this although he has not specifically found that any one of the particular existing clearance or the aggregate of all clearance between the intervenor's first run and the complainant's fourth run is unreasonable. He has reduced the first run clearance from 60 days to 30 days and provided a 7 day clearance after second run and has completely abolished clearance after third and subsequent runs provided however that distributors may, if they choose, use sequence in selling feature pictures.

The Appeal Board also condemned "meager testimony" in support of the complaint, writing,

"Substantially, the entire testimony of the complainant with reference to the unreasonableness of the clearance structure which he seeks to rvise, is Mr. Descoteaux's statement of his own opinion as to what he thought a reasonable clearance should be. Complainant's opinion is based on some twelve years of experience as an exhibitor, which has been his only connection with the motion picture business."

"Various objections to the award have been raised by the appeal which do not require consideration by us now because we are constrained to find that the proof offered by the complainant is inadequate to show that the existing clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable. It is essential that such unreasonableness should appear by sufficient proof before any award can properly be made revising clearance.

"The award is reversed and complaint dismissed, with costs."

The decision was signed by the appeal board, VanVechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger.

Arbitration Docket Of the Week

Buffalo

The Buffalo tribunal this week received its sixth case when Irving Cohen, operating the Allendale theatre, at 203 Allen St., Buffalo, entered a clearance demand against the Big Five and the Marlowe theatre.

Mr. Cohen's complaint asserted that the "present availability of product in the operation of the Allendale theatre is unjust and unfair because of reduced admissions at the Marlowe theatre and because of unfair practices at the same theatre." He demanded that "availability of product to the Allendale be changed to read 'ahead of the Marlowe theatre'" on contracts.

Although the case was filed as clearance, under Section VIII arbitration observers at New York expressed doubt that it could be heard as such. They cited the decision of the Appeal Board this week limiting the power of arbitrators to impose maximum clearances and expressed the belief that the case would have to be refiled as specific run.

Officials of the AAA declared that it was not within their scope to classify an arbitration demand. Only the arbitrator, they said, can rule that the case is not clearance, and must be filed under a different section of the consent decree.

Chicago

A demand for clearance was filed with the Chicago Arbitration Board on October 16th by the R & G Theatre Corporation, operating the Olympic theatre, Cicero, Ill., naming the consenting companies.

It claims that the 14 and 21 days clearance given to Lasker & Sons' Villas theatre, and the Palace theatre, operated by the Schoenstadt circuit, as unreasonable and seek relief accordingly. It is the eighth Chicago case.

The Oriental Theater clearance case, sixth Chicago complaint originally scheduled for hearing October 20th has been postponed until October 22nd.

An intervention has been filed against the Oriental by the Empire Theatre Corporation, operating the Esquire Theatre, in the northside of Chicago, close to the loop district of the Oriental.

New York

The Appeal Board received its 15th case from the New York tribunal this week when Warner Brothers and its subsidiary the Stanley Theatre Company appealed the award in the 12th New York complaint. They asked a review of the decision of Michael N. Chanalis, arbitrator, who as reported on October 4th, reduced the clearance of the West End theatre, operated at Newark by Paustan Amusement Enterprises, from 14 to seven days. Warner's Ritz theatre was an intervenor.

A consent award settled New York case number 15 on Friday when the Gleason Amusement Company, operating the Colonial in Monroe, N. Y., reported that all parties concerned in its clearance demand had agreed to a new schedule in the Newburgh area. The Ritz and Broadway theatres, Newburgh, and Paramount, RKO, Warners and 20th-Fox had been named in the complaint.

Through the settlement, it is reported, the Ritz and Broadway clearance is reduced from 14 to seven days. Paramount was dismissed inasmuch as it is affiliated with both houses. Charles Ballon, arbitrator, signed the award. A similar settlement was reached two weeks ago between the Newburgh theatres and the Storm King theatre at Cornwall-on-Hudson.

Boston

The fifth Boston case, clearance action brought by the Waltham Amusement Company for its State theatre, Whittenton, against the Big Five and the Strand and Park in Taunton has been withdrawn. The same company on August 30th won a clearance cut in behalf of its Grand against the Park and Strand theatres from arbitrator William H. Hitchcock. He cut the clearance from 60 to 30 days and said that some experiment might be necessary before a satisfactory formula was reached.

The sixth Boston case filed on August 10th by William Deitch and Pauline Goldberg of Weymouth against Paramount, RKO, 20th Century-Fox and Loew's was heard this week. Arbitrator Arthur L. Brown is scheduled to visit the houses in question before filing an award. The complainants, operators of the Weymouth theatre in Weymouth, Mass., declared that they had enjoyed a 14-day clearance after the Strand and the Quincy theatres, operated by the Levinson Brothers of Quincy. This clearance subsequently "and without warning" was raised to 30 days, they asserted. A return to the 14 day clearance is sought.

Philadelphia

After an all-day session last Friday, hearings in Philadelphia Case No. 11, the clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis in behalf of his Parkside theatre, Camden, N. J., was continued until October 24th. Testimony from witnesses for the complainant was completed at last Friday's hearing. Hearing on Mr. Ellis' complaint in behalf of his Broad theatre, Philadelphia, Case No. 9, was also continued until this Friday and Case No. 10, Mr. Ellis' demand in behalf of his Liberty theatre, Camden, N. J., also scheduled for the 24th, will be opened upon the completion of testimony in the two other cases.

St. Louis

The some run complaint against the Big Five of Mrs. Mildred Karsch, owner of the Ritz, in Rolla, Mo., was heard Tuesday by John J. Nangle at St. Louis. Mrs. Karsch testified that she had been offered only old films and that the company managers refused specific contracts. Sales agents testified for the five companies that the Gasconade circuit operating the Rolla-Mo and Uptown theatres named in the complaint had first and second run contracts. The Uptown is under construction. They said they had not refused pictures to Mrs. Karsch but declared that the Gasconade circuit held contract priority.

Dean William H. Stead of the Washington University School of Business Administration at St. Louis will hear the some run complaint of Floyd Lowe, of Lebanon, Mo., on October 28th. Mr. Lowe names the Big Five and the Gasconade circuit.

Detroit

The first Detroit case, clearance action of the Booth theatre, Detroit was postponed from Tuesday until November 4th.

Two clearance complaints were filed by Grand Rapids, Mich., theatres at Detroit Tuesday. Both were directed against the Butterfield circuit and Cooperative Theatres of Michigan and charged that they forced a minimum wait of 80 days on independents.

Alyce Cornell, owner of the Galewood theatre, filed Case No. 7 against Warners, 20th Century-Fox and Paramount. The eighth case was filed by R. G. Taylor, for the Southwestern theatre, also in Grand Rapids, and named RKO, MGM, Warners and 20th Century-Fox.

Both complaints charge the Butterfield circuit's first run has 60 days clearance over the same circuit's second run which in turn has a seven day margin over third run. An additional seven days is imposed on fourth run Grand Rapids theatres. Subsequents, such as the Galewood and Southlawn must thus wait a minimum of 80 days the complaints assert.

Albany

Alex Papayanakos, operating the American Theatre, Canton, N. Y., has refiled his clearance complaint as the St. Lawrence Operating Company in accordance with instructions of the Appeal Board. The Appeal Board dismissed the action on a technicality, but it will now be reconsidered on appeal on the basis of merits.

Badgley Named Air Precautions Officer

Frank C. Badgley, former director of the Canadian Government motion picture bureau, has been appointed assistant Federal Air Raids Precaution Officer. He will assist Dr. W. O. Gliddon, Air Raid Precaution Officer for Canada.

Mr. Badgley has resigned as director of the Film Bureau office according to an official report from Toronto, and has been appointed also to a position in the Ottawa Department of Pensions and National Health. John Gierosn replaces Mr. Badgley and will direct the combined National Film Board and Bureau.

STATE DEPARTMENT SUGGESTS SCENES FOR FILMS TO TELL STORY OF U.S.

Outline of "Desirable" Subjects Prepared for Producers; Lack of "True Cultural Films" Is Noted in Department Report

The U. S. State Department at Washington not only insists upon "censoring" those American motion pictures which are distributed through Latin America and elsewhere abroad with government "blessing," but has prepared a list of film themes and treatments which it believes are proper for foreign consumption—in line with the cultural aims of the Administration's "good neighbor" program.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in the October 11th issue (page 15), disclosed how the State Department's insistence on previewing films prepared for South America by the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs has been one of the largest tangles in the red tape which has retarded the country's cultural film export program in the Latin-American countries.

Private producers of educational and documentary films and the motion picture division of the Coordinator's office have reported delays of many months in securing State Department approval of the pictures that were submitted.

From Experts' Suggestions

"True cultural films are not yet produced by intention in this country," the Department declares in its annual report on the Division of Cultural Relations. Now, to remedy this situation, apparently, it has drafted an outline of the type of film subject which it feels the Government should send abroad. The outline is intended for producers of films deisgned for the good neighbor program. A copy of this outline from State Department sources at Washington is reproduced in adjoining columns.

The recommendations were evolved chiefly from a consensus of suggestions from educational, business, radio, film, and diplomatic foreign experts. They embody "what the experts believed South Americans wanted to know" about the United States and its customs. It is not recorded that South American opinions were extensively solicited, although a few diplomats and business men were consulted.

Also, in December, 1938, American diplomats in the field in a circular letter were requested to supply "specified data not only with respect to informative educational films but also, perhaps unfortunately, with respect to propaganda films as well."

"Doubtless because of political tension abroad the latter part of the circular received more attention in the missions' replies than the department's interest in the first part of it might have preferred," a report on the activities of the Division of Cultural Relations observed.

The memorandum of recommended cultural film subjects prepared by the film section of the State Department's Division of Cultural Relations, is entitled: "Suggestions on Production of Informative Educational Films Suitable for Distribution abroad through Government Channels." Text of the official memorandum appears in adjoining columns.

The Department of State recognized the importance of motion pictures in a cultural foreign policy when the Division of Cultural Relations was formed in 1938, principally to assist in the "good neighbor" program in South America.

The State Department at no time has had funds of its own for an "all out" cultural film program abroad. Nevertheless it continues to insist on specific authority to supervise all film activity aimed overseas. The preview machinery, consisting of representatives from seven State Department divisions, with triplicate report forms, has proved a bottleneck.

The department has asserted however that it is solely "interested in assisting in non-profit distribution of films through government channels for cultural purposes only and not at all in the mechanics of production."

As authority for its claim to the final word on cultural films for abroad members of the department cite a meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on Cooperation with the American Republics. This inter-bureau government group preceded the office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, a post now held by Nelson Rockefeller. At the meeting on April 26,

State Department's Suggested Themes for Films Sent Abroad

The U. S. State Department at Washington goes beyond inspection of American pictures intended for foreign markets—and recommends subject contents, as listed on the following Department form:

SUGGESTIONS ON PRODUCTION OF INFORMATIVE EDUCATIONAL FILMS FOR DISTRIBUTION ABROAD THROUGH GOVERNMENT CHANNELS

OUTLINES DESIRABLE FILM SUBJECTS

1939, a resolution was approved to the effect that:

"Matters having to do with the exhibition in foreign countries of government and government-sponsored motion pictures and the exhibition in the United States, through United States government channels, of foreign educational films shall continue to be handled in the first instance by the Division of Cultural Relations."

Previously George S. Messersmith, then an assistant secretary of state, and now ambassador to Cuba said it was to be generally recognized "that the Division of Cultural Relations in the Department of State is the organism of the American Government which should be primarily responsible in the exercise of control of cultural material sent out through government channels, whether it emanates from a government department or agency or from private sources, and for the coordination of government departments and agencies and private institutions in the assembly and despatch of such material including, of course, informative educational films."

However, the State Department was without funds, personnel or experience in the motion picture field with which to start a film program to meet demands for motion pictures from South American schools, educational and professional societies and the general public there. Not until the Rockefeller organization was formed by the President, as a part of the Council of National Defense, and granted a $10,000,000 budget, $200,000 of which was immediately appropriated to John Hay Whitney's films section, did the United States Government have an official agency specificially concerned with motion pictures abroad.

There has been ample government recognition of the need for special film production for overseas cultural relations. The State Department, in its last Cultural Relations Division report for 1940, recognizes the problem while discussing films made by other government agencies.

Division Report

"None of the pictures made in this government were planned to present the American Way for itself without ulterior intention to teach, to preach, to advertise or to propagandize. This is because none of the producing agencies are concerned to present upon the screen of life, customs and ideals of this country for their own sake. Therefore, the Department of State, which 'through its division of cultural relations, seeks to present the American Scene abroad,' to this end is endeavoring to use available motion pictures for a purpose for which they were not intended.

"Outside the government," the report continues, "the situation with respect to cultural films is little different from the situation within the government." In support it cites the American Council on Education's evaluations of informative films.

"The fact is that true cultural films are not yet produced by intention in this country," the Division of Cultural Relations observes. "However a tendency toward them is strong, particularly in connection with industrial production. Here the trend is towards documentary films containing no direct advertising, but instead displaying manufacturing processes, plants in operation, and life of workers, i.e.: A particular American scene. Similarly universities and colleges are producing films of campus life, with the intention, it is true of attracting student enrollment, but these films are cultural and the department is looking industriously for those among them not marred by the inclusion of objectionable details."

South America, meanwhile knows what it wants filmwise, and has forwarded many specific requests to the United States for educational films on particular subjects. Many of these requests in fact have been carried through commercial motion picture channels. Export managers of the large distributors, and their South American distributors report that the "good will" film effort is lagging far short of its mark. The organization to fill the cultural film requests of Latin America appears, they say, to have been lost somewhere in the bundles of red tape entwined between the State Department, the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and the embassy outlets for government sponsored education pictures.

SEC Reports Few Stock Transfers

Few transactions in stocks by officers or directors of film companies were reported in Washington, in the final summary of the Securities and Exchange Commission for August, made public Monday. The largest was the disposition of 500 shares of Paramount Pictures common stock held by Stanton Griffis, New York director, through his N. Griffis Trust.

Included in the report was a long list of previously unreported indirect transactions by Mr. Griffis, dating back as far as 1937, showing that at the close of August he held 7,500 shares of Paramount common direct and 21,000 shares through four trusts.

Two acquisitions of Loews, Inc., common stock, each of 33 shares, were reported by Charles C. Moskowitz and Joseph R. Vogel, New York directors, who at the close of the month held 1,000 and 300 shares, respectively.

Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation increased its holdings of Keith Albee Orpheum common stock to 1,205,665 shares through the acquisition of 67 shares during the month, and Attilio H. Giannini, Los Angeles director in Columbia Pictures, acquired 200 shares of that company's common stock, representing his entire holdings.

A special meeting of the board of directors of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation was held last Friday in New York, at which the board discussed financial and current operating matters. Consideration was given to the declaration of a quarterly dividend on the six per cent preferred stock of the corporation for the quarter ended October 31, 1941, and the board determined to take no action with respect thereto.

RCA, Republic Extend Pact

The 10 year film recording license between Republic and the Radio Corporation of America Photophone, Inc., initialed in 1938, has been revised, and extended ten years. The revision allows for expansion of the film company's record facilities. Two additional, custom-built, mobile film recording units, and a custom-built acetate disc recording channel are to be provided by RCA, to handle Republic's increased production schedule.

Monogram Dealers Building Circuit of 16mm Shows

In its latest expansion, the comparatively recently established National 16mm Film Libraries, Inc., headed by John Manghan, Monogram southern franchise holder and with Herman Rifkin, New England Monogram franchise holder as secretary and treasurer, is to have a unit in Des Moines. It will be known as Midwest 16mm Libraries, with F. E. Judd, Des Moines Monogram franchise holder, as president and will distribute in Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska.

All films distributed will be on an exclusive basis, with "strict territorial regulations." The schedule starts with the company's 1941-42 product. All Monogram pictures henceforth sub-standard size will be handled through this outlet.

In a statement to Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, read at a recent meeting, Mr. Judd said that Midwest 16mm Libraries will assume responsibility for all bookings made by them, and that they will not permit sub-standard showings in competition with established 35mm theatres. Neither will free shows be tolerated, he promised.

A report that exhibitors have been annoyed by the rapid rise of "Jack Rabbit" circuits in that section, with 16mm films being used in direct competition is erroneous, according to Leo F. Wolcott, president of Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska.

The "Jack Rabbit" theatres against whom the exhibitors hope to take action, are those operators entering the small towns of the state and tying-up with merchants or newspapers so that their running expenses are practically nil, often the rent being paid by the merchants and features secured cheaper than what other exhibitors pay, placing the "Jack Rabbits" in a position to cut prices.

16mm Committee Named

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in Hollywood, has appointed a committee on 16mm film and equipment.

The committee will co-ordinate the activities of the producing companies in the use of 16mm for location and wardrobe tests, and will consider and develop other possibilities for studio use of that medium. The committee will keep the Council informed of current and new uses of 16mm and will assist in the formulation of standards for 16 mm film and equipment.

C. Roy Hunter is chairman. Other members being: John Aalberg, John Arnold, Dan Clark, Lloyd Goldsmith, C. H. Lindblom, C. L. Lootens, Emil Oster, Roy Seawright, Joseph Valentine, and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council.

'GET FILM GOOD-NEIGHBOR IDEAS IN SOUTH AMERICA', DISNEY ADVISES

Sees Much Potential Story Material for Hollywood Producers; Reports American Films Most Popular

"Watch Latin America grow" is the word which Walt Disney brings back from South America.

Returning to New York on Monday from a ten-week tour of the principal countries below the equator, the creator of Mickey Mouse reported that he and the staff which accompanied him had acquired many ideas and enthusiasms which would be incorporated in future Hollywood productions.

The Latin American republics, Mr. Disney told interviewers at New York, have a culture, traditions and native folklore which can provide a wealth of topflight story material for Hollywood. He was enthusiastic in his description of the many suggestions which he and his staff gathered during their tour and urged other Hollywood producers to go in person to Latin America.

The many signs of the swiftly growing industrialization and economic self-dependency which he and his party saw in all the countries visited was one of the most impressive aspects of the trip, Mr. Disney reported. South America is anxious and able to do business with the United States in many lines on a reciprocal trade basis, Mr. Disney said. This increase in trade and the rapid development of industrial, agricultural and mining activities throughout the continent will all swell the demand for American film entertainment, he predicted.

Mr. Disney reported that American films are by far the most popular in South America. Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Pluto, Goofy and other cartoon characters all have real and popular South American identities, he said.

"Good pictures here are good entertainment in South America, too," the returning Hollywood traveler reported. Pictures with conscious "South American touches," aimed specifically at the Latin market, do not build hemisphere goodwill for Hollywood, he said. Instead, he urged film producers to "send writers, directors, artists and go themselves" to South America to discover the wealth of native color and story material there. "In itself this is a superb source of film entertainment material, not just dressing," Mr. Disney added.

Trip Adds to Schedule

At least a dozen, and possibly more, short subjects will originate from the notes and sketches which his staff made during the South American tour, Mr. Disney said. The pictures will be in addition to his regular production schedule. Although they will be based on Latin American folklore themes and with South American characters he expressed confidence that they would have the same universal appeal of previous subjects in English.

"We might even try some all-Spanish cartoons, with English sub-titles instead of English with Spanish or Portuguese subtitles," Mr. Disney revealed.

The Spanish and Portuguese folk-legends of the Argentine, Chile, Peru and Brazil are particularly fruitful story material, Mr. Disney said. He reported also that he was "delighted by and very much interested in" native music. South American animals, colorations, music and backgrounds will be used extensively in future Disney Hollywood stories, he said.

To insure authentic use of the South American stories, colors, and tradition Mr. Disney said that he plans to bring native artists, musicians and writers to Hollywood to aid in production of the future subjects. He reported that he saw many examples of South American art particularly suited to the techniques of animated cartoon films.

Native Animals for Films

Native South American animals should make particularly engaging cartoon film characters, Mr. Disney added. He described seeing anteaters, ostriches, llamas and many other native fauna and said that he and his staff sketched and photographed them extensively. All will be considered in new casting, Mr. Disney said.

The animals all have their legendary characters and attributes in the folklore and children's stories of South America, he said. He cited the popular characterization of the parrot as a voluble politician, gaucho ballads, campfire tales, and a comic Argentine pampas version of the Faust legend as possible subjects for forthcoming Hollywood pictures.

The music of South America is also a very attractive source of new motion picture material, according to Mr. Disney. He described the Brazilian Samba, and said he had brought back numerous recordings of the dance from Rio de Janeiro. It, and other tunes, may be used in a forthcoming Mickey Mouse productin, he indicated.

"South Americans are swell people. They are the friendliest I've ever met," Mr. Disney declared, describing the enthusiastic receptions which greeted his party in Rio de Janeiro, Mendoz, Buenos Aires, Santiago and other cities. He met the presidents of Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil. Mr. Disney described the attitude of South Americans toward the United States as most friendly. Nowhere, he said, did he encounter any evidence of fascist or pro-axis popular sentiment.

Sixteen members of his staff, including 11 artists, accompanied Mr. Disney. Among the group which returned to New York on Monday were Mrs. Disney; John Rose, business manager; William Cottrell, story editor, and Mrs. Cottrell; Norman Ferguson, producer; story department; Janet Martin and Franklin R. Thomas, animator. Eight other members of the original party are returning direct to Hollywood via Mexico and Central America, where they will gather additional story material.

Mr. Disney said that he hopes to visit Mexico and Central America on a subsequent tour.

RKO-Radio, distributor of Disney product, was host to Mr. Disney and party at a reception Monday evening at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York. The group were to remain in New York until after the premier of the new Disney feature, "Dumbo" at the Broadway theatre, Thursday.

Current Production Plan

Current Disney production plans, the company head revealed, include "Bambi," a feature from an original story which is near completion, "Wind in the Willows" and "Uncle Remus" which are in work. The version of the fairy tales of Hans Christian Andersen which Mr. Disney had projected in collaboration with Samuel Goldwyn has been postponed.

The Andersen picture, Mr. Disney said, would require a world market for profitable distribution. Hence production will be postponed until the end of the war. The loss of European markets has borne very heavily on distribution of his product Mr. Disney revealed. He said war had curtailed almost half of his revenue and predicted it would be four or five years before it could be offset. "Meanwhile, somehow, we will keep going," he added.

Mr. Disney filmed a number of reels of 16 mm color films of his tour at the request of Kenneth McGowan, director of short subjects for the motion picture division of the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American affairs. The pictures will be edited and distributed in South America and here by the film committee headed by John Hay Whitney.

HALF OF PARAMOUNT ISSUE IS SUBSCRIBED

Up to the close of business on Tuesday, approximately $10,000,000 of the $20,000,000 issue of 4% debentures, due 1956, of Paramount Pictures, Inc., had been issued in exchange for the old 3¼% convertible debentures and corporate notes of that company, it was announced Wednesday by Stanton Griffis, chairman of the executive committee, in New York.

"The exchange offer made on October 9th has met with an immediate response by holders of the old 3¼'s and corporate note holders," said a Paramount announcement. It will expire on November 10th, unless extended.

Bing Crosby Also Returns From South America

Bing Crosby, Paramount singing star, also returned from South America on Monday, arriving at New York on the SS Brazil. He cut short a tour of the South American continent and a stay on an Argentine ranch to return for the opening of his new picture "Birth of the Blues" on October 31st.

Mr. Crosby left New York on August 29th. While in South America he appeared in benefit performances at Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro. He also purchased riding stock and a share in a cattle ranch at Corrientes, Brazil. His next picture, Mr. Crosby revealed, will be with Fred Astaire, and as yet an unselected actress "who both sings and dances."

Affiliated Books for Y. & W. Management

Affiliated Theatres, Inc., buyer and booker for 49 theatres in Indiana and Kentucky, has assumed the purchasing of all film requirements for the Y. & W. Management Corporation, which owns and operates 29 Indiana houses.

Y. & W. is headed by V. U. Young of Gary and will continue actual operation of its theatres, except for the buying and booking of film. Tom Baker is president of Affiliated Theatres. Both firms are to take new offices in the Illinois building, Indianapolis, next week.

WHAT HOLLYWOOD PLANS FOR "STARS OF TOMORROW"

Story Changes, Cast Shifts and Budget Revisions Undertaken to Build 25 Young Stars Who Led Herald Balloting

by VANCE KING
in Hollywood

Taking the advice of their exhibitor customers who advanced their selections of the "Stars of Tomorrow" in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S poll as published on August 9th, Hollywood producers have started on a careful buildup campaign for each of the 25 players adjudged by both independent and circuit operators as having the best box office prospects for development and promotion.

Studio executives are conning the prospective assignments for these players with prudence, in determining the type of personality to be created.

Revamping of stories fattening up of roles, shifts in castings, and changes in budgets now are subjects of executive discussions concerning the young players, following the special exhibitor recognition, and in line with a new intensity of concern about product, players and performances.

The response to the questionnaires in the HERALD poll, both in volume and in the celerity of return, was extraordinary, a token of the exhibitor's anxiousness to have his say on this subject.

As pointed out in the presentation of the results of the ballots of thousands of exhibitors, it is to be remembered that, "No matter how the exhibitor buys, by program or block, and with all due respect to decree-controlled positions, he sells picture by picture to his public. His convictions are many, acute, and in general his opinions are absolute. He enjoys no possibility of so intimate a knowledge of available story material as does Hollywood, but he does know people, on the screen and in the seats in front of the screen. . . ."

The exhibitors in balloting for the "Stars of Tomorrow" spoke earnestly and often with vigor. And Hollywood apparently has taken the cue, carefully, cautiously for the buildup.

27 Roles Assigned

Twenty-seven roles have been assigned to 19 of the top 25 players named by exhibitors as potential star material. The 25 have already finished or are working in a total of 40 assignments for the new season's schedules.

Results of the poll had as the first ten, in order: Laraine Day, Rita Hayworth, Ruth Hussey, Robert Preston, Ronald Reagan, John Payne, Jeffrey Lynn, Ann Rutherford, Dennis Morgan and Jackie Cooper.

The fifteen who followed, in order, were: Louis Hayward, Stirling Hayden, William Holden, Eddie Bracken, Kathryn Grayson, Lucille Ball, John Carroll, Nancy Kelly, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Bonita Granville, Gene Tierney, Jon Hall, Gloria Jean, Betty Field and Ellen Drew.

In the castings thus far announced, little, if any, "solo" starring vehicles are found, the respective studios following Hollywood's old custom of attracting fan attention to newcomers by placing them in casts headed by "surefire" draw names.

Laraine Day, Number One on the list of potential boxoffice draws, has finished two pictures for the new season, "Unholy Partners," and "The Girl on the Hill," both high budget MGM productions. Herbert Marshall and Shirley Temple are featured in the latter; Edward G. Robinson and Edward Arnold top the cast of the former.

No others have been set for her as yet.

Columbia, now releasing "You'll Never Get Rich," in which she is co-starred with Fred Astaire, has set "Eadie Was a Lady," and "The Things They Do in Rio," for Rita Hayworth.

Number Three—Ruth Hussey—has finished one and is working in one at MGM where she is under contract. In work is "H. M. Pulham, Esq.," in which she supports Hedy Lamarr and Robert Young, and released is "Married Bachelor," in which Mr. Young is featured.

Exhibitors will have an opportunity to present Robert Preston, Number Four, in five pictures already finished. They are RKO's "Parachute Battalion" and Paramount's "New York Town," "The Night of January 16th," "Reap the Wild Wind" and "Midnight Angel." Since being tapped by the exhibitors, he was assigned to Paramount's "This Gun for Hire."

Seven for Reagan

Ronald Reagan has finished "Nine Lives Are Not Enough" and "International Squadron" for Warners' new schedule and is currently working in "Kings Row" there. Announced for him are "Background to Danger," "50,000 Fliers," "Iron Cavalry" and "Tugboat Annie in Drydock."

Having finished "Weekend in Havana" and "Sun Valley Serenade," John Payne is working opposite Claudette Colbert in 20th Century-Fox' "Remember the Day." He is scheduled for "Song of the Islands" next.

Warners has no immediate castings for Jeffrey Lynn, Number Seven on the list. His new season pictures completed are "Law of the Tropics," opposite Constance Bennett, and "The Black Widow," formerly titled "The Body Disappears."

The distinction of appearing two groups of series films goes to Ann Rutherford, of MGM. The "Polly Benedict" of the "Judge Hardy Family" group will continue as the lead in the "Keeping Company" series, second of which will be "Keeping Married." She appears with Frank Morgan and John Shelton in the "Keeping Company" group. In addition she was loaned to Universal for "Badlands of Dakota," now in release.

Dennis Morgan is being "fattened" at Warners, currently engaged in having him support James Cagney in "Captains of the Clouds." Also set for him are "Carnival in Rio," "Iceland Patrol" and "The Desert Song." However, the last named may not be made this season.

Having finished "Glamour Boy" at Paramount, Jackie Cooper next goes to RKO for William Dieterle's "Syncopation." No other roles have been definitely set for him as yet.

Louis Hayward heads the next group of 15. He appears in one of the top roles in Columbia's "Ladies in Retirement," and United Artists Producer Edward Small has an option on his services for a picture which must be made in the next six months.

Working on a contract split between Paramount and Columbia, William Holden has finished "The Remarkable Andrew" for the former and "Texas" for the latter. Currently working in Paramount's "The Fleet's In," he next does Columbia's "The Thing They Do in Rio."

Comedian Eddie Bracken has finished Paramount's "Sweater Girl," is working in "The Fleet's In," and has "Hairbreadth Harrington" set for him next.

Odd circumstances surround Stirling Hayden, who ranks 12th in the list of exhibitors' preferences. Making an auspicious film debut in Paramount's "Virginia," Hayden finished "Bahama Passage" opposite Madeleine Carroll, and left Hollywood. He doesn't like to make pictures, he wants to sail his boat, so Paramount gave him an indefinite leave of absence.

Kathryn Grayson, MGM's new find, is now working in "The Vanishing Virginian," with Frank Morgan, and may get a featured role in "Rio Rita," which will star Abbott and Costello.

Groomed for several years at RKO, Lucille Ball, awarded 16th place by exhibitors in their poll, is featured with Charlie McCarthy and Edgar Bergen and Fibber McGee and Molly in "Look Who's Laughing," about to be released, and is now working in RKO's "Valley of the Sun." No other roles are scheduled thus far for the girl.

Said to be a protege of Louis B. Mayer at MGM, John Carroll is being given an extensive campaign. He appears in "Lady Be Good," already released, and may have a featured role next in "Pierre of the Plains," from the old Broadway success.

Under contract to 20th Century-Fox, Nancy Kelly has been loaned to Paramount for "Fly By Night," which is awaiting release. No roles have been set for her on her home lot.

Not seen on the screen for some time is Geraldine Fitzgerald. Warners, which has her under contract, has her scheduled for the feminine lead of "Captain Horatio Hornblower," in which Errol Flynn may have the title role, and "One Hour of Glory."

Little Bonita Granville, now grown up to be quite a young lady, has completed roles in "Down in San Diego," in MGM's first consent decree block, and "H. M. Pulham, Esq.," currently before the cameras there. She is set to play opposite Jackie Cooper in RKO's "Syncopation," and is scheduled for three more at RKO during the new year.

Gene Tierney Busy

One of Hollywood's busiest actresses, Gene Tierney, has completed roles in "Belle Starr," in which she plays the woman outlaw, for 20th Century-Fox, and in "Sundown," for which she was loaned to Walter Wanger, United Artists producer. Currently working in Arnold Pressburger's "The Shanghai Gesture," for United Artists release, she next goes into "Son of Fury," opposite Tyrone Power, at 20th Century-Fox. Also scheduled for her is "Hello, Frisco, Hello," at the latter studio.

Nominally under contract to Samuel Goldwyn, who gave him his first screen role in the well remembered "The Hurricane," Jon Hall was loaned to Paramount for "Aloma of the South Seas," opposite Dorothy Lamour, which is now in release. He may be loaned to RKO for "Out of Gas."

Little Gloria Jean next will be seen in Universal's "Never Give a Sucker an Even Break," the W. C. Field's opus awaiting release. No other roles are scheduled.

One of the casting plums of the year, the role of "Cassandra" in "Kings Row," is the lot of Betty Field, borrowed from Paramount by Warners. Nothing has been set for her on her home lot thus far.

Paramount's Ellen Drew has finished her role in "The Remarkable Andrew," and awaits the starting date of "The Silver Queen," which Harry Sherman will produce, and "Prison Widows."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Why They Click

Any of you showmen who were wondering a while back why those aviation pictures from the Pine-Thomas sector of the Paramount program clicked at your box office beyond expectancy can stop wondering.

If you deduced that they clicked because they were aviation pictures jumping the gun at start of a cycle of aviation pictures produced for a public suddenly sensitive to the spell of whirring propellers, you were on the right track.

You couldn't be expected to deduce that it was because they were aviation pictures that the Messrs. Pine and Thomas happened to produce them or, for that matter, to set up the Pine-Thomas Productions organization now committed to produce six, maybe seven, pictures for Paramount's 1941-42 schedule.

It didn't just happen.

It did happen that Bill Pine and Bill Thomas, originally and therefore forever exploitation men, were ensconced by coincidence in adjacent offices of adjacent studios —Paramount and RKO—and that they lunched together regularly at the likewise adjacent Lucey's cafe, compared notes on the present status of a show business in which both had participated the hard way, as exploiteers and theatre publicists, for long and to considerable profit.

William H. Pine had learned show business in that cradle of showmanship, the Balaban and Katz theatre organization, coming West when Sam Katz did and establishing under the Katz regime the advertising-exploitation department which was an addition to and is now a fixture of the Paramount studio.

William C. Thomas had learned show business under the Pantages banner, specifically the Hollywood Pantages, and joined the Pine setup on the day of its inception.

Mr. Pine had moved on through all the Paramount public-relations jobs to become right hand man to Cecil B. DeMille, and Mr. Thomas had made some films for the company, in the Harold Hurley division, before returning to publicity responsibilities in behalf of RKO.

In common with exploitation men down the years, not to mention exhibitors, newspaper men and plain citizens, the Messrs. Pine and Thomas told each other between salad and coffee each day that they could make better pictures than were being made.

Finally they asked each other why they didn't do it. Getting no answer, they proceeded to figure out what kind of pictures they would make if they did. Gasoline station, magazine ads, cigarette broadsides and dime stores were flaunting pictures of aviators and planes all over the national scene. So why not make some aviation pictures?

Getting no answer to that one either, they took the question to Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of Paramount studios, and he mentioned something about overhead, cost of planes, difficulty of obtaining cooperation, several practical matters.

So they asked him if he'd distribute them if they made them on their own and he said yes if they were good enough, so they did and they were and Pine-Thomas Productions was on its way.

Pine-Thomas Productions is quartered now in its own building on the Fine Arts Studio lot and there's no more question about financing. They get it direct from Paramount. Nor is the enterprise confined to the production of aviation pictures. Apart from whatever budgetary boundaries may exist, the sky and the horizon are the limits of the Pine-Thomas undertakings—sky, horizon and their own professional predilection for topical subjects.

The office setup of the Pine-Thomas project is typical of exploitation men who've been through the mill and back. On a horseshoe floor plan are laid out the offices of the men and their associates, Maxwell Shane, top scripter, Doc Merman, production manager, the director on the job, the assistant director, and in the center the clerical staff. They've got inter-office 'phones but don't need them. They could yell their inter-communications, but they don't need to because they gather daily for dinner in the Pine sanctum and nobody's business is a secret from anybody who has a reason for knowing it. Not that the quarters are cramped, although the whole of the layout could be duplicated in at least one Hollywood executive chamber without crowding the occupant.

SOME SAD NEWS FOR THE JELLO TRADE

If the Jello trade believes everything it reads in the papers there's grief to be found in this week's announcement that—

"Jack Benny will do a complete about-face in his new motion picture. As Ian Tura in Ernst Lubitsch's melodramatic comedy, 'To Be or Not to Be,' Benny plays for the first time on the screen a straight comedy-dramatic role entirely without the slapstick scenes, the farcical asides and the burlesques that have featured his previous pictures" —and if they go for that one to the extent of writing a million letters of protest, Alexander Korda's Jerry Dale will dream up another tid-bit to keep them responsive until the picture jells.

EXECUTIVES END TALE OF BIOFF PAY-OFF; DEFENSE MAKES READY

Scenes of Action Shift to New Hotel and Include Divers Prospective Moves and Witness Arrangements

Squat, stout and sleek Willie Bioff, executive maker of labor executives, sat in Federal court in New York's Foley Square again this week to hear motion picture executives tell how they by hand, yielded bales of currency—now it seems about three-quarters of a million dollars—to this masterful and nonchalant personage from Chicago.

Just incidentally, or so far incidentally, Chicago came into the testimony with quotations indicating that Bioff has said that persons there had to have some "presents."

It was in Chicago that Browne and Bioff established their relation, which, as Bioff has been quoted, resulted in his making Browne president of IATSE—a process not yet explained in court in all detail.

By Wednesday afternoon's closing hour, Mathias F. Correa, district attorney, indicated that the story for the United States of America had been told. Technically the government had not yet rested. Should occasion arise the prosecution was still free to continue with evidence when the trial should be resumed Thursday.

To be anticipated at that Thursday session were of course the customary and inevitable defense motions for dismissal on the customary and rather formal contention of no cause of action, against Bioff and George Browne, president of the IATSE, charged with extortion.

And after that it was to be expected that the defense would be getting underway. There had been no very commital indication of the line of defense beyond occasional glimpses in cross-examination of a possible design to admit taking all the money and explain the "contributions" on a very different pattern of understandings and motivations, in labor matters.

Prepare for New Witnesses

While the government's case was approaching a close-down at the courthouse, the forces of the defense were getting into alignment with arrivals by train and plane of figures in the labor organizations interested and sundry persons, official and unofficial, from Hollywood, St. Louis and Chicago, who may be witnesses, if the defense script develops that way. There were prospects of dramatic intricacies in narration ahead.

Mr. Correa, as has been recited, had the prosecution's story of extortion broadly sketched in and then filled to considerable detail with the testimony of Nicholas M. Schenck, and David Bernstein of Loew's, and Louis B. Mayer of MGM, Hollywood. That was the basic account of a demand for $2,000,000 as the price of labor peace, and the ultimate payment of various sums, which in the indictment, added up to $550,000 and now appear to total much more. That covered the case for Loew's.

With the conclusion of this last Wednesday session the tale had been told for 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation by William C. Michel, executive vice president, for Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., by Harry M. Warner and Major Albert Warner, and for Paramount Pictures, Inc., by Austin C. Keough, vice president and secretary.

The tales of procedure and dealing, between the executives and the defendants followed the pattern traced by the prior testimonies, except that George Browne faded from the visible scene and that Bioff was indicated as moving with more clerity, assurance and expedition as things went on. The scene changed slightly, in such details as moving the appointments from the Waldorf-Astoria to the more conveniently located Warwick in Sixth avenue up above the Times Square district. Also, in time some of the money seems to have been delivered by clerks and messenger boys, by special arrangement.

The interior accounting arrangements of the motion picture companies with these very special entries to handle on the books pursued the same order of devices the witnesses told about last week—"enhanced" expense accounts, entries for the entertainment of the press, cigarettes for Sing Sing and such incidental miscellany.

It was to be recalled that the testimony of Louis B. Mayer developed an interesting phase of the processes of payment in his account of arrangements by which one Norman Thor Nelson, brother-in-law of Bioff, was set up as an agent in the sale of DuPont film from Smith & Aller to the studio at a special commission of seven percent. John Wesley Smith, of Smith & Aller, had confirmed the payments to Nelson, and later to Harry Beatty, of IATSE, who replaced Nelson as sub-agent at the instance of Bioff. Nelson himself told how he had gone to Hollywood and delivered the commission, less a modest salary, to Bioff.

When the trial resumed on Thursday morning, October 16th, Nelson again took the stand to identify income tax reports filed by him under the instructions of Bioff. In preparing these reports he had been warned by the defendant to "keep this to yourself," Nelson said.

Nelson also told of an occasion when Bioff handed his mother-in-law $20,000 in cash at Kansas City during the summer of 1936 with instructions that Mrs. Nelson was to pay off obligations on the defendant's home.

In 1939, after serving for two years as Bioff's agent with Smith and Aller and after collecting $77,474 in commissions, Nelson said Bioff called him on the carpet and in the presence of Browne, said: "You're all through so stay away from here." The witness could give no explanation for his discharge since, he said, Bioff didn't give any reason "and I could never figure out why he acted that way."

A California doctor, W. Drew Chipman, who had flown from the coast at the behest of the government for a five minute session on the stand told the court that Harry W. Beatty, Nelson's successor as sub-agent with Smith and Aller, was too ill to answer a subpoena.

Seek Browne-Beatty Link

In the absence of Beatty the government sought to link him with Browne and Bioff through other means. Frank C. Olsen, secretary of the Chicago Theatrical Protective Union, affiliated with the IATSE, identified Beatty as a member of his union since March, 1902. Browne was also a member, he said, with a card issued August 16, 1915.

Florence Rose who identified herself as a bookkeeper for the main office of the IATSE for the past 17 years followed Olsen to the stand to say that Beatty had been a representative of the IATSE from August 4, 1936 to February 10, 1939. She added that Beatty, as did all other representatives, had received $110 weekly as salary.

Testimony on how 20th Century-Fox made its alleged payments to Bioff was given by Hugh J. Strong, a former Newark, N. J. detective, and personnel supervisor at 20th Century-Fox and personal aide to Sidney R. Kent since 1936. Mr. Strong and W. C. Michel, executive vice-president of the company, told of its payments, in the absence of Mr. Kent, who is too ill to testify.

Dr. Harry Gold, heart specialist, stated that Mr. Kent had suffered at least three heart attacks, the last just ten days previous, since 1939 and that he had never been entirely well since his first atack. Even depositions taken at Mr. Kent's bedside were out of the question.

Mr. Strong related how he had accompanied Mr. Kent to the Hotel Warwick. The witness fixed the time as March or April, 1937.

"When we reached the hotel, Mr. Kent picked up the telephone in the lobby and asked for Willie Bioff," Mr. Strong said. "A bellboy came down and took a package from Mr. Kent. The package contained money." He said he had seen Mr. Kent fill it with $100 bills.

Another trip, this time alone, to the Hotel Astor was made in September or October, 1937, the witness continued. "Mr. Kent called me to his office," Mr. Strong related, "and told me to take an envelope containing money to Bioff. I called the room number and asked for Willie Bioff. He told me to come up to

BROWNE-BIOFF TRIAL PROVOKES SUITS

Three legal echoes of the Browne-Bioff extortion trial in New York Federal Court came this week as stockholders' suits in New York Supreme Court, filed Monday and Wednesday, naming officers and directors of Twentieth Century-Fox and Loew's, and the two defendants.

Helen Solomon, holder of 200 shares of Fox common, filed the Monday case through David Bernstein, 535 Fifth Avenue, New York, charging directors and officers of Fox with wasting company funds by "unlawfully paying for illegal and improper purposes".

The suits filed Wednesday were by Jerome Stein, against Fox, its officers and directors, and also against Browne and Bioff, charging that an unspecified amount was paid "not for corporate purposes", and asking the court to direct the defendants to give an accounting; and by Justus I. Landauer, against Loew's, officers and directors, and also against the two men, seeking repayment to the company of $500,000 because assertedly the money paid to the union leaders was extorted and entered upon the books falsely.

Mr. Stein did not state his holdings; Justus Landauer owns 80 shares of Loew's common.

Lawyers for Mr. Stein are Koenig & Bachner, 70 Pine Street, New York; for Mr. Landauer, Abraham N. Geller, 295 Madison Avenue, same city.

his room. I handed the envelope with the $100 bills to him. He opened it, saw that everything was alright and then I left." Mr. Strong was not cross-examined.

Mr. Michel, who followed Mr. Strong to the stand, said that on about April 23, 1936 Mr. Kent told him to "raise some cash." He said he secured $90,000 from 1936 to 1940 under the instructions of Mr. Kent. According to Mr. Michel, the Twentieth Century-Fox president gave him the orders on April 23rd or 25th, 1936. The method used was to put through executive expense vouchers totalling $93,392 of which $90,000 was turned over to Mr. Kent by the witness. He was not allowed to tell how the money was used.

It was the practice of Mr. Kent during 1936 to keep large sums of cash in a vault located in his office, the witness said. In a brief cross-examination by George Breslin, attorney for Bioff, Mr. Michel revealed that at times Mr. Kent would keep as much as $50,000 to $75,000 in cash in his vault.

Thursday afternoon the government called Major Albert Warner, vice-president and treasurer of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to begin description of the payments made by his company.

Judge Knox overruled defense counsel's objection to a request by Mr. Correa that Mr. Warner tell how many persons held stock in Warner Brothers Pictures Corporation. The district attorney said the question was designed to show how many persons had been victimized by the alleged conspiracy. Mr. Warner replied that approximately 35,000 persons held stock in the company.

Cites $100,000 from Warners

Major Warner, on Thursday, had time only to outline the general operations of his company and report that he attended the basic studio labor pact meetings in 1936.

Major Warner returned to the stand Monday to tell for the government, with his brother Harry M. Warner, how the defendants took $100,000 from Warner Brothers Pictures Corporation.

About ten days after the basic pact meetings of April, 1936, Major Warner related, he had a conversation with Nicholas M. Schenck in reference to the defendants' demands. He testified that Mr. Schenck had told him "we are up against a pretty tough proposition." Mr. Schenck advised him of the demands made by Bioff and Browne, the witness said, and warned him that if he didn't pay he too "would be up against it."

"When I said that I would first have to speak to my brother Harry who was then in Europe," Major Warner continued, "he said 'I took the responsibility for my company and you'll have to take it for yours.'"

Several days later Bioff came to his office, Mr. Warner said, and declared: "You know what I'm here for, don't you?"

"I told him that I had spoken to Nick Schenck," the witness said, "and that he had informed me that we had to pay $50,000 or take the consequences." Major Warner described how he protested that he did not have that much cash available and had asked for time "to do a little thinking." When Bioff grew insistent, he said, he offered a first payment of $10,000. To this, Bioff countered: "By the time I get through splitting up $10,000 with the boys, it will be peanuts," Major Warner said.

At another meeting several days later which was attended by Sam Carlisle, comptroller and assistant treasurer of the company, Bioff refused to accept a check, the witness said. Both he and Mr. Carlisle argued the difficulty of raising sufficient currency to meet the demand, he added. Major Warner then told of a plan to raise the money by expense vouchers.

Bioff received his first payment of $10,000 towards the end of May, 1936, Major Warner said. The witness said he obtained an envelope of currency from Mr. Carlisle and left it with his secretary, Miss E. Forman, with directions to turn it over to Bioff. It was in this fashion that Bioff was paid sums of $10,000 again in August and December, 1936, he said. In February, 1937, Mr. Carlisle under his instructions turned over $20,000 to the defendant, Major Warner testified.

In April 1937, Bioff paid him another visit and asked for more money, Major Warner continued. He said he obtained $15,000 from Mr. Carlisle and gave it to Bioff.

Payments totaled $80,000 after Bioff collected an installment of $15,000 in May or June of 1937, Mr. Warner said. Browne accompanied Bioff on one of his visits, the witness testified.

Asked by Mr. Correa why he had paid, Major Warner answered: "I was afraid of what they would do. You see, they are pretty powerful people and they could have pulled the men from our theatres and paralyzed our business. We were in very bad financial straits at that time. We had just gone through four years of a depression and we had lost $30,000,000."

Mr. Warner said that he had not told his brother Harry of the payments immediately because Harry had had "trouble enough running the company and keeping it out of bankruptcy." Several months after the first payment he said he had to ask Harry on the Coast for money to meet new demands.

Monday afternoon Mr. Breslin sought to prove that Major Warner had established a friendly relationship with Bioff. The witness insisted that he had no social contacts with the defendant.

Harry M. Warner, president of the company, followed his brother Albert to the stand, Monday, to account for the payment of a balance of $20,000 to Bioff.

After his telephone conversation with Major Warner in which he was told of the situation, Harry Warner said, he had a voucher cashed for $7,500 at the studio, and sent it to Mr. Carlisle.

Direct negotiations with Bioff started in November, 1937, when Bioff came to the Burbank studio office, Mr. Warner related.

"He told me of the one day strike at the Columbia studio the previous week and asked me whether I knew about it. I said yes. Then he said that there was still $20,000 due him. I told him I had no money to give to him. He said, 'You know its not all mine. I have to give away a greater part to some people in Chicago.'"

"Chicken Feed" for Christmas

Mr. Warner said that in December, 1937, Bioff complained that "the boys need the money for Christmas presents and that he had to have it." Mr. Warner said that he considered the situation serious and so obtained $7,500. This sum was handed to Bioff in front of the studio building.

"He looked at it and said, 'That's chicken feed, but it'll help for Christmas presents,'" Mr. Warner said.

A further demand was made on Warner Brothers, the president said, a day after the New Year.

"Don't ever ask for anymore because you won't get it. I don't want anymore of that stuff," Mr. Warner testified he told Bioff. It was the last payment made by the company and brought the total to $100,000, the witness testified.

"First, I was afraid they might close the business and second, I was afraid of bodily harm," the witness answered when asked why he paid.

Mr. Warner was questioned by Mr. Breslin on his social relations with Bioff.

The witness admitted only one social visit by the Bioffs to the Warner ranch when the defendant and his wife were invited to see a film.

The prosecutor asked why Mr. Warner had treated Bioff as he did. "I considered Mr. Bioff as a man that shook down our company for $100,000. But on the other hand, I realized the power which he wielded and considered it a good policy to preserve a surface friendliness rather than make him an enemy," he replied.

"Did you at the time you knew Mr. Bioff take any precautions against bodily harm?" Mr. Correa asked. "Yes sir, I did," he was answered. "When I refused to give the $20,000 after the Columbia strike I was fearful of my personal safety. I went to Blaine Mathews, head of studio police. He assigned two men to follow my car for a couple of weeks to see what would happen."

Thomas J. Martin, an auditor for Warner Brothers, supplemented the testimony given by Major Warner. Mr. Martin told of receiving instructions from Mr. Carlisle to obtain $10,000 in currency in May, 1936. The money was secured from the company cashier through

CANADA "TELLS-OFF" AFM HEAD PETRILLO

Major Gladstone Murray, general manager of Canadian Broadcasting, declared in Ottawa, Ont., Wednesday that he had "told-off" James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, and warned him that "Canadian music affairs are to be settled on a strictly Canadian basis without interference or pressure from any other organization outside the Dominion"; that Pettrillo's interference in Canadian radio affairs would not be tolerated.

The union is reported to have interfered with Canadian airforce bands, not only in attempting to keep airmen off the air, but charging the broadcasting corporation $12,000 for permission to record some programs for troops overseas.

In New York, meanwhile, Mr. Petrillo was ordered to testify before trial on Friday of this week in connection with the suit of the American Guild of Variety Artists to restrain him from barring AGMA members from working in films, on the stage or in radio. The AFM chief was to be questioned by AGMA on his jurisdictional powers and alleged threats by him to prevent American Federation musicians from working with AGMA instrumentalists.

CIO AIMS TO ORGANIZE N.Y. 'WHITE COLLARITES'

All Film Offices Are the Real Objective, Head of Office Workers Tells CIO Local

The CIO will organize all "white collar" workers in the motion picture industry, according to the president, Lewis Merrill, of the CIO's union for that category, the United Office and Professional Workers of America.

This objective was made known in the course of Mr. Merrill's speech last Friday evening, October 17th, at New York's Fraternal Clubhouse. Mr. Merrill, in accompanying ceremonies, had presented a charter to the CIO's first screen union in the East, Local No. 109, the Screen Office and Professional Workers Guild.

Thus, further, progresses the CIO's "invasion" of the film industry, an American Federation of Labor domain until now. Local 109 now comprises the Screen Readers Guild, consisting of union employees of the story reading departments of the majors' New York home offices; and employees' guilds in the Loew and Columbia offices.

The Screen Publicists' Guild, comprising advertising and publicity workers in those offices, has been importuned to join this CIO union by its officers.

The Local No. 109 charter was accepted Friday night by David Golden, the local's temporary chairman. Several hundred persons were reported present. Mr. Golden resigned from Fox's story department last week, to pursue his union course.

While "white collar" workers in majors' home offices thus were being made the objective, already partly attained, of the CIO, the office workers in the Hollywood studios appeared lost to that union; for, last week, the Screen Office Employees Guild, recently granted collective bargaining contracts at five studios, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Painters, of the American Federation of Labor, becoming local 1391.

Warner Workers Slated to Vote

Warner home office employees were to vote Thursday, under the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board, on representation by the Warner Brothers Associated Office Employees of Greater New York, which is described as independent.

Officers of this union are Thomas Turkington, president; E. G. Arnold, vice-president; J. H. Newman, treasurer; Florence Richmond, recording secretary; Arthur Allisot, sergeant-at-arms.

Meanwhile, negotiations, for new contracts, between producers and nine studio locals of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, appeared to hinge this week on reaction by union members to producers' counter proposals, taken back to Hollywood last week and this by the locals' business agents. The latter had been conferring in New York offices of Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, with Mr. Casey, Fred Pelton, also a producers' labor agent, and representatives of the studios.

The New York local of the American Federation of Radio Artists has chosen a new executive board. William Adams, Ted de Corsia, Eric Dressler, Betty Garde, Mark Smith and Ned Wever were reelected from the actors' group and Clayton Collyer, House Jameson and Anne Seymour were the new members. With no opposition in the announcers' group, Ben Grauer, Ken Roberts, Sid Walton and Foster Williams were reelected, with Alun Williams the new member. Among singers, Everett Clark, Gordon Cross, Phil Duey, Felix Knight, Evelyn MacGregor, Alex McKee and Walter Preston were all reelected.

Pittsburgh exhibitors and other entertainment entrepreneurs are faced with possible shutdowns as result of a city-wide strike of all AFL unions workers in every business, threatened in protest against inroads on the building and construction field by non-union firms, particularly the Duquesne Light Co.

With unanimous support from the Central Labor Union, headed by president Leo Abernathy of the Billposters Union, Democratic candidate for Allegheny County sheriff, the AFL affiliates' strike would be one of the largest in the nation's history. It would practically suspend the city's business life, halting street car and bus transportation, truck shipments of food, operations of office buildings, numerous defense projects, and other commercial and civic activity, as well as theatres, night clubs, and other amusement centers.

The United Scenic Artists Union, New York, is asking every Broadway legitimate show to employ a "maintenance man" at $90 per week. He would repaint faded scenery. Producers have labeled the job, and the salary, as "preposterous."

In Detroit, negotiations for new projectionists' contracts are virtually over, with the operators asking no increased wages. The unusual attitude is reported part of the projectionists' feeling the other categories of theatre workers, lately taken into the IATSE, should receive higher wages, to which the city's exhibitors have agreed.

Falco, a Fordham University student, is 18, blond, and lives at 162 Ocean avenue, South Beach. The wavy-haired youth wore a tan gabardine suit last night—and he proved to the audience that he can sing quite nicely

ENGINEERS TOLD WAY TO EVADE FIXED FOCUS, INCREASE REALISM

SMPE Convention, Marking 25th Birthday, Brings New Techniques, Plus Denunciation of Industry's Detractors

by GEORGE SCHUTZ

Editor of Better Theatres

Refinements in the technologies of sight and sound for the screen, going deep into the esoteric lore of the electron, all addressed at a bigger and better motion picture art, screen and theatre, occupied the sessions of the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York this week. There were implied forecasts of revolutions in those hidden processes of camera and microphone of which the public never hears, save in terms of enhanced product. And with it all, the organization recognized its arrival at the significant age of 25.

The engineers also heard the Washington Senatorial inquisition denounced and suggestion made for an investigation of the investigators who are investigating to see if an investigation should be had. This came from Sol A. Rosenblatt, film industry lawyer and former administrator of the defunct NRA, and from Newbold Morris, president of the city council of New York.

There was also a suggestion from a later speaker that engineers might help the development of "the new order" by entering the arena of public concerns with their influence and using and advancing scientific methods and principles.

More than 200 picture and sound engineers attended the convention, which began Monday, included a banquet Wednesday evening, and ended Thursday.

Enlarging Action Area

Challenging among the technical papers was one from Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith. consulting engineer of radio and screen, and inventor, who described his "IR" or "increased range" system of photography. This method has been developed to permit actors to move about freely on a set without fear of moving out of camera focus, the system removing the limitations of fixed focus which characterize every lens, and substituting a virtually unlimited range.

"The human eye has this increased range," Dr. Goldsmith explained. "That's why in a theatre we can follow the actors all over the stage, from the footlights to the backdrop, without having them move out of the focal range of our eyes. The motion picture has been limited in this respect since its earliest days, for directors have been forced to keep their actors within the narrow focal range of the camera. Much has been lost in creating the illusion of true, flowing motion. Instead, we have had to substitute a succession of glimpses of the action."

Dr. Goldsmith's system was described as automatically compensating for the fixed focus of the camera lens by lighting, first the foreground, then the middle distance, and then the background of each scene each time a single exposure of the motion picture film is made. At the same time, the camera focus is kept in step with the lighting by means of a series of compensating plates revolving behind the lens. Thus, whichever part of the set is being photographed is in perfect focus.

"The action of the system is so rapid that the illumination may be divided into four or even more areas if necessary, although in many cases only two areas may be required," the inventor said. "For each complete single exposure of the moving film, the entire set has been lighted by stages, as it were."

Lens Coating Wins Award

A new type of reflector which, when installed in a motion picture sound recorder, permits more accurate monitoring of the sound being recorded, and therefore contributes substantially to improved sound reproduction in the theatre, was described by Glenn L. Dimmick, sound research engineer of the RCA Laboratories in Indianapolis. He explained that scientists have long known that certain crystals transmit light of one color and reflect light of another color, and that some thin metallic films also exhibit the same phenomena. By evaporating alternate layers of different types of film on glass, he said, it is possible to produce a surface having pre-determined transmission and reflection characteristics, while absorbing no appreciable amount of light.

When this new reflector is employed in sound recorders, he pointed out, nearly all the light is transmitted to the sound film for recording, while certain portions of the light spectrum are reflected to a photo-cell for monitoring purposes. With a more accurate means of determining exactly what sound is being recorded at the instant it takes its place on the sound track, the sound engineers are better able to record exactly the quality, volume and tone of sound which they want, and better records result.

Mr. Dimmick received the Society's Progress Medal given for outstanding contributions to the science of motion pictures. He is the second RCA engineer to win the medal. The first was Dr. E. W. Kellogg, in 1937.

Following a "get-together" luncheon on Monday, Lt. Col. M. E. Gillette, in charge of the Training Film Production Laboratory of the U. S. Signal Corps, at Fort Monmouth, N. J., told of the uses of motion pictures in Army training. He said much valuable time is being saved in the rearmament program by the more graphic way in which many of the subjects which trainees are required to learn may be presented on film. Similar testimony was given by Floyde E. Brooker, of the U. S. Office of Education at Washington, who spoke on "Film Production for Education."

Calls Probe a "Putsch"

At the luncheon, Newbold Morris pointed up the interrelation of freedom of speech on screen and in the press. He called the Washington inquiry "ill-considered" and said such investigations might destroy democracy. Mr. Rosenblatt termed the inquiry "the first Munich putsch against the freedom of expression in the United States" and asked an investigation of the investigators.

Other speakers at that luncheon were Francis Harmon, executive assistant to Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers of America; and Claude Lee, director of public relations for Paramount.

Mr. Harmon outlined the co-operation the industry gives the War Department, for production of army training films, through the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Mr. Lee genuflected towards the engineers of the industry—men, he asserted, who have allowed the stars, writers and directors to take the bows for the industry's achievements. He contrasted the store shows and arcades of early days with the picture palaces of the present. Chiding the engineers for having failed to explain their accomplishments to the public, he said, "When we convey this understanding to the public, we will inspire a more enduring respect, a fuller appreciation of our problems and a greater confidence in our motives."

A lightsome contribution to the program came at the opening session from Barry Buchanan, stage producer, professor of dramatics, writer and lexicographer, currently engaged in preparing a dictionary of show lingo. He told how the studio world has come by such words as "gobo," "grips" and "gimmicks." He indicated that the parlance of the motion picture is the linguistic heir of the circus, stage and carnival. His great contribution was his explanation that the word "ham," denoting the over-acting actor, came from that ancient day before cold cream when the players used a rind from the posterior of a pig in lieu of modern foundation creams for make-up.

Speaking at the same session, Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, presented to the engineers a suggestion that "the customers are part of the machinery of the machine age, and they seem to need some adjustments under the new order." He urged that the methods of science and the laboratory might be carried out into social practise and exploration. (See editorial page of this issue)

Mr. Ramsaye's expression brought a second from the floor in remarks from Captain John G. Bradley of the National Archives, Washington, who urged the importance, in these trying days, of "straight line thinking," rather than wishful thinking.

Meaning of Fine-Grain Film

At Wednesday's session on fine-grain film problems, V. C. Shaner, of the Eastman Kodak Laboratories, Hollywood, outlined the benefits of the new type of fine grain film, recently introduced for general use of the motion picture industry after several years of application to special needs of the art. Pointing out that motion picture film is made up of clumps of silver in a chemical solution, he said that the finer the grains of silver, the better the picture and the clearer the sound.

"It's something like the screening method used to make newspaper and magazine pictures," he explained. "The finer the dots which go to make up the picture on the paper, the clearer the picture. With motion picture film, the silver grains become the dots, so that the finer the grains, the sharper the picture."

Mr. Shaner revealed that the new type film has been adopted by the Paramount studios to the exclusion of older types, and that 50,000,000 feet have been consumed in release print manufacture. Meanwhile, research looking to the production of still finer grained film is already underway, he said.

Other contributions to the fine-grain film symposium were C. R. Daily, of Paramount Pictures, Hollywood, who spoke on "Production and Release Applications of Fine-Grain Films for Variable-Density Sound-Recording," and J. R. Wilkinson and F. L. Eich, also of Paramount, who presented a paper entitled "Laboratory Modification and Procedure in Connection with Fine-Grain Printing." Another Paramount engineer, L. L. Ryder, told of recent advances in equipment and processes which are "Streamlining the Sound Plant" of modern studios.

At the session on motion picture sound developments, two discussions were devoted to recent improvement in control tracks to control the reproduction of sound in theatres. Sound may thus be controlled in volume automatically, adding appreciably to the realism and entertainment value of movies. Such a control track made possible the RCA Fantasound system used in the Disney-Stokowski "Fantasia," it was said.

J. G. Frayne and F. P. Hernfeld of Electrical Research Products, Hollywood, described the control tracks now available on standard motion picture film, located between the picture and the sound tract, with no special processing required during recording, and the system fully automatic in the theatre.

R. R. Scoville and W. L. Bell, of the same laboratories, discussed the use of control tracks and other devices in reducing the amount of extraneous noise in film recording. W. A. Posner, of Sound-Film Enterprises, New York, told of advances in the splicing of film so as to eliminate noise when the spliced area passes through the reproducer.

A new type of light valve for use in variable density recording was discussed by W. J. Albersheim and L. F. Brown of Electrical Research Products, New York.

Robert Russell, of the Army Training Film Production Laboratory, Fort Monmouth, N. J., proposed a "dynamic screen," to cover the entire front wall of a theatre, eliminating the fixed frame of the conventional theatre image.

Color in Television

Improvement in the already remarkably realistic images which are being flashed through the air by television has been achieved by the introduction of color into television, according to Dr. Peter C. Goldmark, chief television engineer of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Dr. Goldmark said that color television images show small objects to be more easily perceptible than in black and white images, and that outlines in general seem to be more clearly defined, and that a certain perception of depth is introduced.

Dr. Goldmark said that initial experimentation with color television showed such possibilities that extensive investigation into that field has been undertaken with the objective of producing a practical color television system. On June 1, CBS inaugurated daily color television transmissions in field testing the new development. The three primary colors employed are red, blue and green.

Numerous advantages which accrue to television studios when portable camera and other pick-up equipment is moved indoors for a sort of semi-permanent installation, was told to the engineers by four engineers of the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, R. L. Campbell, R. E. Kessler, R. E. Rutherford and K. V. Landsberg.

Seat Preference Survey

Dr. Goldsmith, chairman of the Theatre Engineering Committee, reported the results of a recent study by the committee of seating area preferences. Eleven checkers were used at the Surrey theatre in the Bronx, New York City. The checkers entered at 6:30 p.m. and stayed until 9 o'clock, with each man assigned a portion of the auditorium to watch. As each person entered the theatre, it was carefully noted where he sat.

They discovered that the most popular area of the theatre was a section not less than four times the width of the screen from the front, nor more than eight times the width of the screen from the front. The front seats were taken last, being occupied only after the side seats located at a sharp angle from the screen had been filled.

Film Preservation Report

Fear was expressed by the Committee on Preservation of Film, that shortage of raw stock due to the defense program might lead to the use of reclaimed film. The committee, headed by John G. Bradley, director of The National Archives in Washington, expressed belief, based on experience following the first World war, that reclaimed film is too perishable for the needs of the national film library.

The Bradley group heard reports on most of the 12-point program on film preservation which has guided it since 1936. One of these dealt with film storage of all kinds, in projection rooms as well as vaults, and declared not only that all nitrocellulose film should be vented to the outside air, but that instead of the 14 square inches of vent area allowed by insurance underwriters, this area should not be less than 20 square inches.

As to the life of nitrocellulose film under varied atmospheric conditions, it has been definitely determined that relative humidity as high as 50 per cent at a temperature of about 90 degrees, starts film deteriorating in only seven days. It was also stated that camphor and similar "restoratives" have no appreciable effect in retarding the loss of film flexibility when placed in containers.

It was also announced that The National Archives has begun to transfer subjects to acetate stock to relieve the storage problem, which has become acute with the increase in the number of films selected for preservation.

Honored by Society

The SMPE Journal Award was carried off jointly by J. G. Frayne and V. Pagliarulo, of the Electrical Research Products, Inc., of Hollywood. The award, given for the best paper published in the SMPE Journal during the year, was made, as were all others, at the banquet. The winning technical discussion, printed in the June, 1940, issue, was "The Effects of Ultraviolet Light on Variable-Density Recording and Printing."

The citation of Mr. Dimmick's engineering accomplishments was read by Otto S. Schairer, vice president of the Radio Corporation of America in charge of RCA Laboratories.

W. C. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, convention vice president for many years, received a testimonial certificate, reading: "In recognition of his long and faithful service as a member of the Society since 1916, as a member of the Board of Governors since 1929, and as Convention vice president since 1933, the Board of Governors of the Society, by unanimous action, present this certificate to William C. Kunzmann as a testimonial of their appreciation and esteem."

The newly-elected members of the Board of Governors were introduced to the delegates by Emery Huse, president of the Society. They are Frank E. Carlson, General Electric Company, Cleveland; J. A. Maurer, J. A. Maurer, Inc., New York; and E. M. Honon, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

Mr. Huse briefly reviewed the history of the Society at the banquet, and introduced the remaining members of the original 26 who founded it, in New York, in October, 1916, following incorporation in Washington, D. C., in July of that year. The organization now has 1,500 members.

The late Edwin S. Porter, associate of Thomas A. Edison, and credited with the first moving picture story, "The Great Train Robbery," was added to the Society's honor roll of deceased picture pioneers.

Herbert Griffin, vice president of the International Projector Corporation, and executive vice president of the Society, was chairman of the technical committee at the convention's first session. In opening the meeting, he said, "This exchange of ideas—co-ordinating, planning, establishing standards, and encouraging men to do better work—is the great accomplishment of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers during the past twenty-five years and is the real purpose of the Society."

Among the reports and papers read at the technical sessions were the following:

"A New Electrostatic Air Cleaner and Its Application to the Motion Picture Industry," Henry Glitterman, Westinghouse, New York; "A Precision Direct-Reading Densitometer," M. H. Sweet, Agfa Ansco, Binghamton, N. Y.; "Iodine Analysis in an MQ Developer," R. M. Evans, W. T. Hansom, Jr., and P. K. Glasoe, Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester; "Synthetic Aged Developer by Analysis," by the same authors; "Effect of Composition of Processing Solutions on Hypo Removal from Motion Picture Films," by J. I. Crabtree, G. T. Eaton and L. E. Muehler, Eastman Kodak; report on safety devices by W. Scanlon, Larry Strong, Inc., Chicago; a talk on new arc lamps by H. D. Behr, New York; paper on a new device for assuring smooth film motion in the projector by W. Hotine, Rotovex Corporation, Newark.

E. L. Boecking and L. W. Davee of the Century Projector Corporation, New York, told of new developments in projection mechanism design. Color quality on the screen was the subject of a technical paper by M. R. Null, W. W. Lozier and D. B. Joy, of the National Carbon Company, Fosteria, Ohio.

Other papers were "Work Simplification, Essential to Defense," by A. H. Morgensen, of New York; "Some Equipment Problems of the Direct 16-mm. Producer," by L. Thompson, Kansas City; "A Review of the Question of 16-mm. Emulsion Position," by William H. Offenhauser, Jr., Precision Film Laboratories, New York.

Four Officers Re-Elected

Four officers of the Society whose terms expire at the end of the year, were re-elected. They are D. E. Hyndman, engineering vice president; A. S. Dickinson, financial vice president; P. J. Larson, secretary; and George Friedl, Jr., treasurer. Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, past-president and a member of the Board of Governors, was elected chairman of the Atlantic Coast Section.

Officers of the Society whose terms have another year to run are: E. A. Williford, past-president; Mr. Griffin and A. C. Downes, editorial vice president. James Frank, Jr., is chairman of the membership committee.

The convention activities were in charge of committees headed by R. O. Strock, reception and local arrangements; W. C. Kunzmann, registration and information; George Friedl, hotel and transportation; Oscar F. Neu, banquet; Mrs. O. F. Neu and Mrs. R. O. Strock, ladies' reception; H. F. Heidegger, convention projection; and Julius Haber and Howard Gilbert, publicity.

MINNESOTA HAILS MAJORS TO COURT, CHARGES ANTI-DECREE LAW VIOLATION

RKO, Paramount and 20th-Fox Specifically Cited for Selling Small Blocks Contrary to Law Requiring Offering of All Films

Minnesota's anti-consent decree law will again be the subject of a constitutionality test, as a result of charges by the state that some of the distributors are breaking the anti-blocks-of-five law now on the statute books.

On Monday, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, and RKO were cited and their district managers in Minneapolis exchanges were ordered to appear in Ramsey County Court, St. Paul, Wednesday morning.

At that hearing, the three firms pleaded not guilty; and Joseph Findley, St. Paul attorney, speaking for Paramount, said it would fight the law "to a finish." David Shearer, Minneapolis lawyer, represented the other two companies. All waived preliminary examination, and the case was to continue Thursday, with arrangement as requested of the companies' district managers.

The complaints were issued by James F. Lynch, attorney for Ramsey County, and cited deals made by RKO and Paramount with a theatre in White Bear Lake, a suburb, and a deal by Fox with the Gem Theatre, that city.

It was in Ramsey County Court a month ago that Judge Hugo Hanft, after long deliberation, refused the requests of the decree-bound majors, and United Artists for a temporary injunction against the law, and declared it constitutional.

The law compels film companies to offer their entire season's product for sale, allowing a 20 per cent cancellation privilege. In essence, it restores the conditions obtaining before the decree, and represents the official desire of Northwest Allied, chief exhibitor organization of the territory.

Since Judge Hanft's decision, the majors' sales executives in New York have been conferring among themselves, and with attorneys, over future actions. Those actions appeared a week ago, to be well defined: applications to the New York Federal Court, for relief from the decree, so majors could sell in Minnesota; selling of new product in Minnesota, from offices outside of it, if that method were found legal, or, the closing of exchanges in Minneapolis, and absolute refusal to sell in the state.

Take Companies by Surprise

The new court action came as a surprise, apparently, to Northwest Allied, spokesmen of which had been indicating they might attempt to force the majors to sell in the state according to the law.

Fred Strom, executive secretary of the Allied unit, said Monday Mr. Lynch's service of complaints upon the three majors was unexpected by his unit, and that his executive and legislative committees would meet this week.

The Ramsey County attorney's complaints were served upon Ben Blotcky, Paramount district manager; Louis E. Goldhammer, RKO district manager; and J. M. Podoloff, Twentieth Century-Fox district manager.

The new test is considered better than the test afforded by the recent appeal for an injunction. The present case charges criminal violation of the law, a ruling resulting from it is expected to be more decisive than that gained from the injunction petition, Minneapolis industry circles feel.

What the majors will do, in the period during which this test will resolve, was still a question in New York, this week, however.

United Artists, not decree bound, but unable to operate under the Minnesota law because of its individual film selling policy, was the first major to announce its withdrawal from the state. Its Minneapolis exchange was to close Saturday. However, on Tuesday, the New York home oce stated it would remain open on a "week-to-week" basis.

All the other film companies, except Paramount, have stated they will observe the state law. These statements, from their sales executives, presumably mean they will not sell there—because the companies have shown no indication of seeking relief from the decree.

However, none of the others have said they will close their Minneapolis offices.

Paramount, on the other hand, in New York, preparing a petition to the New York Federal Court for relief form the decree, so that it might sell in Minnesota.

The petition was expected to go before Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard this week.

The company added it "firmly believes that the statute" is "unconstitutional and invalid—and it intends to defend vigorously" its attitude, in the criminal proceedings instituted Monday.

What the majors had feared, as a result of the success, thus far, of the Minnesota statute, appeared forthcoming: efforts by exhibitor organizations in other, nearby, states, to obtain similar legislation thwarting the decree.

A sign of this trend came this week from Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, which issued a bulletin, over the signature of Leo Wolcott, president, calling for anti-decree action in the legislatures of the two states.

Mr. Wolcott called the decree a failure. It has increased economic pressure upon the small exhibitor, he said, adding it also has lessened picture quality, and is virtually a "return to enforced block booking."

Of the system of selling an entire season's product, with a 20 per cent cancellation privilege, he remarked: "In view of years of experience, it appears to us this is the only way we'll ever get good pictures; when they must be made good enough, exhibitors will not want to cancel them."

He continued: ". . . It is freely predicted the five-picture selling plan will be dropped in June, 1942 or before. What selling plan will replace it? We recommend that of the new Minnesota law which is based on the plan developed in the Trade Practice Conferences.

"Reports from all over the country state exhibitors are not buying at the prices and terms demanded now, preferring to wait to bargain until they can buy right rather than buy now and go broke quick. This much is true, if exhibitors want to continue buying film in blocks of five or less without cancellation privileges, all they have to do is buy those now being offered at higher prices and terms than paid in previous years. That will fix it, for good! The same thing applies to the many 'clucks' now being offered.

Mr. Wolcott also complained about 'stiff' percentage terms currently obtaining, and noted that a small exhibitor's business comes mainly at weekends.

Reported the first Minesota house to close because of the product shortage was the Everett Dilley theatre at Northfield. Mr. Dilley refused to reopen the theatre after the summer lull, because he could not obtain pictures.

Of this, Mr. Strom, Northwest Allied executive secretary, remarked that another Dilley house in Northfield is operating; and he said no other theatres had closed, admitting however, that if selling does not begin, by the five majors and United Artists, by November 1st, that theatres actually will close.

The state's leading circuit, Minnesota Amusement Company, is reported not affected by inability of the majors to sell there. Being a Paramount affiliate, it is able to obtain product of that company under Section 17 of the consent decree which allows a major to sell to an affiliate in any desired manner; and it has an MGM franchise, and has deals with Universal and Columbia.

UNSIGHTLY BILLBOARDS ORDERED FROM ROADS

Harold L. Ickes, U. S. Secretary of the Interior, has decreed that "unsightly billboards" or those constituting traffic hazards be banished from public lands. At the same time he directed that a fee of 20 cents a square foot a year, with a minimum of $5, be charged for commercial signs considered not unsightly and permitted to be erected on public lands.

More Briefs Filed In Crescent Suit

A 178-page brief by the Department of Justice, and briefs from five defendants, were filed in Nashville Federal Court last week, in the Departments' anti-trust "field" suit against Crescent, its affiliates, and United Artists.

The briefs contain findings of fact and conclusions of law. All defendants are to file briefs by November 15th; and final arguments in the trial are expected to begin December 1st, in that court, before Federal Judge Elmer Davis.

Universal and Columbia have already been dismissed as defendants, upon motions filed in the case during September, when its trial sessions ceased.

Testimony was presented, during the trial, by the Government, that Crescent and affiliates expanded at the expense of independents, and were in collusion with the majors on certain deals affecting those indepedents.

In the Government's "findings of fact," implementing the evidence and testimony it presented during the case's active phase, United Artists is charged with "knowingly aiding" Crescent and its affiliates in suppressing independent theatre competition in three specific locations, and with eliminating competition, generally, by licensing agreements.

Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., is cited as aiding defendant theatre companies to eliminate independent competition in Union City, Tennessee.

United Artists' licensing agreements with defendants, the Government findings state, presumably referring to 73 and 61-situation deals, "fix a flat sum for all of the situations operated by all of said defendants and show on their face that no consideration whatsover was given to the rentals which competing independent theatres could pay for these films."

Crescent asked the court to conclude that after films arrive at the point of delivery, "the showing of the pictures and operation of the theatre is purely a local matter," and in no

"MIRROR" PICKS UP STAR POLL WHERE "NEWS" QUIT

Mirror Tabloid Starts Public Ballot for Favorite After News Found Stuffed Ballot Boxes

Tabloid newspaper polling of the public's motion picture talent preferences has been resumed in New York, with the Daily Mirror picking up where the Daily News left off some time ago when it discovered that its "King and Queen" ballot boxes had been "stuffed" in behalf of a topnotch player.

Errol Flynn and Bette Davis were voted winners in public film popularity poll conducted by the New York Sunday Mirror, with Clark Gable and Deanna Durbin second in their respective fields. "Gone With the Wind" was the Mirror readers' choice for first film place and "I Wanted Wings" was second for the 1940-41 film season.

The two star winners will each receive the newspaper's "Motion Picture Medal of Merit" at a presentation ceremony now being arranged and which will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast hookup. Two bronze placques will also be awarded to David O. Selznick and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, respectively producer and distributor of "Gone With the Wind," and to Paramount Pictures for "I Wanted Wings." The Sunday Mirror has an approximate circulation of 1,500,000 copies.

Vote on 262 Stars

Readers sent ballots in support of 262 actors and actresses; a total of 195 films were nominated for the "best pictures."

In the three years previous the New York Daily News and its affiliated syndicate with a circulation totaling approximately 22,000,000, conducted the "Movie King and Queen" popularity poll. However, this tabulation was discontinued in 1940 because counterfeit and fraudulent balloting was uncovered.

These "fake" ballots originated in several key cities, the Daily News told MOTION PICTURE HERALD (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, January 18th, 1941, page 16) and all bore the name of a particular star high in the "King and Queen" popularity listing. A majority of the "planted" votes originated in Chicago it was said at that time, and were numerous enough to affect the poll's outcome.

Following this revelation, Captain Joseph M. Patterson, publisher of the News, ordered discontinuance of the annual poll, which had started in 1937.

Voters Warned

Kenneth McCaleb, film critic of the Sunday Mirror, explained that if more than one member of a family wished to cast a ballot in the Mirror poll a facsimile could be made. However, he pointed out, all ballots had to have the name and address of the voter to be valid. Mr. McCaleb also prewarned the voters: "No stuffing the ballot boxes for your favorites!"

In the Mirror's tabulation Errol Flynn led the poll with 16,714 points, 937 points ahead of Clark Gable. Bette Davis was voted the leading actress with 6,465 points ahead of her nearest competitor, polling 22,010 points to the 15,545 scored by Deanna Durbin.

The voting for the first 12 actors and the 12 actresses in each division with the number of points received were tabulated as follows:

Columbia Transmitter Opened on Long Island

The new WABC, key station of the Columbia Broadcasting System on "Columbia Island" in Long Island Sound off New Rochelle, went into action Saturday morning at 10 A.M. with broadcasts from London, Hollywood and New York.

On a cue from New York, Hollywood went on the air with radio presentation from Bob Burns, Orson Welles, Louella Parsons and others. Alexander Woolcott was heard from London by short wave and in New York Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, Robert L. Ripley and others spoke.

way is an interference in interstate commerce, or a monopolization of the distribution of films.

The Government brief asked the following relief, specifically, in addition "to such dissolution and general injunction as to all of the exhibitor and distributor defendants against further violation of the act, is necessary to make individual theatre competition possible against the theatres in the Sudekum circuit" outside of Nashville, Tenn., which was excluded in the pleadings:

1. Invalidation of the existing franchises.
2. Invalidation of the existing agreements not to compete in the future.

Payments to Bioff Told of in Trial

vouchers for cash, the witness said. He said he witnessed a payment to Bioff in Mr. Carlisle's office.

The auditor identified the stack of vouchers which he had testified were used to raise money for the defendants. He identified slips for entertainment, travel and exploitation expenses in sums ranging from $200 to $19,827.

"Christmas gifts for the press," "special gifts for feminine critics," "advertising and promotion disbursements," "and press reception at Chicago convention" were among the entries described by Mr. Martin.

Two thousand dollars out of a special $2500 check to buy Christmas cigarettes for Sing Sing prisoners was also used to cover payments to the Bioff fund, he said. Exploitation expenses for the film "Goldiggers of 1937" likewise were utilized he said.

On cross-examination Mr. Martin estimated that between 200 and 300 vouchers crossed his desk each month. The witness also said that Warner Brothers in 1936 maintained a safe deposit box in the Manufacturers Trust Company with a maximum of $50,000 in cash stored at times.

Austin C. Keough Testifies

Austin C. Keough, general counsel, vice-president and a director of Paramount pictures then took the stand to testify for the fourth of the film companies which the government charges were victimized.

The witness said that he had attended the 1936 labor pact meetings.

"Shortly after the last session of the meeting I received a telephone call from a man who said he was Mr. Bioff. He said he was at the Warwick Hotel, gave me the room number, and suggested that I come over to see him. I asked him what it was about and he said he would tell me when he saw me," Mr. Keough said.

"I met Mr. Bioff in his room. He asked me if anyone had talked to me about any arrangement. I said no. He told me that a two year deal whereby each of the larger companies were to pay $50,000 yearly and the smaller companies less, had been made. He said his people had been out of the studios for a long time and had considerable expense which they must now make up. He told me I could check on that with Mr. Sydney Kent or Mr. Nicholas Schenck. Our meeting then ended."

Mr. Keough said that immediately after his talk with Bioff he phoned Mr. Kent at his office and then went to speak to him personally.

Mr. Keough said that following the talks with the 20th Century-Fox executive Bioff again summoned him to the Warwick.

"He asked me whether I had spoken to my people in Paramount. I told him I had. I said we would make the payment, but that I didn't know when the money would be available. Bioff said he didn't need it all in one payment, but that he must have some money right away and it must be in cash.

Mr. Keough said that a few days before May 28, 1936 he again saw Bioff. The defendant told him that he must have a payment on account right away, Keough said. He replied that he did not know when he could have it ready.

Mr. Keough then said he raised $7,500, obtaining $4,000 from Y. Frank Freeman, head of the Paramount studios, who obtained the money from the Paramount Theatre Service Company. Mr. Keough said he could not remember the sources of the other $3,500.

The $4000 was charged to expense vouchers to be accounted for later, he explained.

Mr. Keough said that on May 28, 1936, he called Arthur Israel, Jr., attorney at Paramount and instructed him to go to Chicago with a package containing money and to deliver it to Bioff at the Bismark Hotel.

Continuing, Mr. Keough said he again had a demand for money from Bioff at New York on September 6, 1936.

He arranged with Walter Cokell, treasurer of Paramount, he said, to supply $20,000 through a petty cash voucher marked "disbursements for production." On September 15th, Mr. Keough said, he handed the money to Bioff at the Hotel Warwick. Bioff told him that he was going to the coast to establish headquarters there.

Later in 1936, Mr. Keough said, he informed Harry Herzbrun, studio attorney for Paramount of the arrangement and of paying $27,500 out of a total of $100,000 to Bioff. He instructed Herzbrun to arrange to pay the balance in installments and said the remainder of the first year's $50,000 should be paid in cash quickly, and confidentially.

Mr. Keough said he informed Mr. Cokell and George Bagnall, assistant treasurer, that Mr. Herzbrun was to make the payments to Bioff. On the same day he introduced Bioff to Mr. Herzbrun.

In August 1937, he said, Mr. Herzbrun asked that $12,500 be sent to him. This was done.

In the later part of January 1938, Bioff was in New York and asked for money, Mr. Keough said. He arranged to obtain $10,000 through a petty cash voucher. This was delivered by Mr. Keough, who told Bioff that this was the last payment of the $100,000 due from Paramount. Bioff, he said, replied "Yes, that's right."

Asked why he had made the payments, Mr. Keough said "I regarded the making of these payments to Mr. Bioff and to such others as were associated with him as necessary to preserve my company against possible and very probable financial disaster."

Mr. Herzbrun, formerly employed by Paramount but now in independent practice in Los Angeles verified the instructions from Mr. Keough. He said that Mr. Keough ordered him to pay the difference between $100,000 and the $27,500 already paid by Mr. Keough.

Mr. Herzbrun said he obtained a Paramount check for $50,000. This check he took to a Hollywood bank, accompanied by A. C. Martin, studio comptroller, cashed it and opened a joint safe deposit box in which they put $27,500. The other $22,500, on January 23, 1937, Mr. Herzbrun said, he paid to Bioff at the IATSE office in Hollywood.

Charges Bioff Demanded Still More

On May 10, 1937, Mr. Herzbrun said he took another $20,000 and gave it to Bioff. When Bioff demanded a further $20,000, Mr. Herzbrun, who had only $7,500 in the bank obtained the additional $12,500 from Mr. Keough and gave it all to Bioff at his home.

Mr. Martin, corroborating the payments said the $50,000 check issued by George L. Bagnall bore the notation "This covers option on real estate property which we have taken and which for obvious reasons I do not wish to disclose on this check."

Arthur Israel, Jr., home office attorney, described his trip to Chicago with money given him by Keough. He said he paid it to Bioff at his hotel room.

With Mr. Israel's testimony, Mr. Correa rested. Motions to dismiss were to be heard Thursday and the defense is to start Friday morning.

Convicted IATSE Officers Appeal

John P. Nick, ousted 'czar' of the IATSE motion picture operators' union, Local 143, in St. Louis, and Clyde A. Weston, former business agent, have appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court for a review of their convictions on racketeering charges. Writs of certiorari and transcripts of the District Court trial have been filed at Washington.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals recently sustained sentences of five years in prison and fines of $10,000 imposed on the pair.

Fox, Sentenced To Jail, Appeals

After supplying the bulk of evidence for the U. S. Government's bribery suits against retired U. S. Judge J. Warren Davis, Philadelphia, and Morgan S. Kaufman, Scranton lawyer—two suits ending in jury disagreements—62-year-old William Fox, once a movie magnate, was sentenced, Tuesday, in Philadelphia Federal Court, to one year and one day in the Federal penitentiary, and fined $3,000.

The sentence was for "conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the Government," to which Fox had originally pleaded guilty, and concerned Mr. Fox's unsecured "loans" of $27,500 to the judge while the latter sat in the U. S. Circuit Court in that city, in Fox bankruptcy litigation. Mr. Kaufman was the alleged intermediary.

The cases against Davis and Kaufman will not be tried again; they go free. Judge Guy K. Bard, who sentenced Mr. Fox, said he realized the latter's assistance to the Government, but his case was "so serious" he felt compelled to sentence him as he did.

Mr. Fox's attempt on Tuesday to plead not guilty and obtain a jury trial, was rejected.

Mr. Fox, allowed free on $15,000 bail, will appeal to the Federal Circuit Court.

Transatlantic 'Phone Call for Exploitation

Reported as the first personal transatlantic telephone call since the declaration of war was the highlight of the showmanship promotion arranged by Fanchon and Marco's Les Kaufman, for "A Yank in the R.A.F.," at the Fox Theatre, St. Louis. After a four-day search, a St. Louis father was located whose son is serving in the R.A.F. It was arranged to put through a call from the theatre stage to the lad overseas. Advertised well in advance, the call, placed at 8.30 on Saturday night ahead of the opening, brought a capacity audience.

Monogram Pays Off Pathe Obligation

Monogram Pictures has paid off in full its $110,000 obligation to Pathe Laboratories, W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, disclosed in Hollywood last week. The due date was in December, he said. The company has signed Tom Keene for a group of four outdoor action pictures for 1941-42. The first will be "Lone Star Law," with Robert Tansey producing and directing.

Test Blue Laws

Francis White, city alderman in Asheboro, N. C., and operator of two theatres there, said he would appeal a conviction for violation of the "blue law" which bans the showing of Sunday films, because of requests from a large number of patrons.

Nelson on Leave

Chauncey B. Nelson, personnel director of Fanchon and Marco, Inc., in St. Louis, has taken a leave of absence to become director of the Berkeley Hall "prep" school in Beverly Hills, Cal.

Revision of FCC Operations Put Off Until January

Congressional revamping of the Communications Act of 1934 will be deferred until this winter, it was decided last week by the House Interstate Commerce Committee, at Washington.

With the issue revived by the recently announced network regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, the House committee met to determine what action should be taken with respect to measures which have been introduced to "streamline" the FCC basic law and more clearly define the authority of the commission.

It was decided to defer consideration of the legislation until January, when Congress embarks on its new session, with the probability that hearings will be called sometime after January 15th at which the whole situation will be thoroughly explored.

The delay will give time for the new regulations to "shake down" and for the lower courts, at least, to decide on the legal actions to be taken by National and Columbia broadcasting systems to enjoin enforcement of the rules. Since less than two months of the current session of Congress remains, it was pointed out, it would be impossible to make much headway with new communications' legislation before the year-end recess and adjournment.

Legislation for modernization of the 1934 law is pending in both House and Senate and is expected to be one of the major matters to come up for debate next year.

Mutual Defends FCC

Meanwhile, Mutual Broadcasting, in a 20-page statement, entitled "Mutual's Second White Paper," released Monday, defended the FCC's network monopoly regulations. Fred Weber, MBS general manager, warned network affiliated stations to refrain "from any commitments which will bind them to a course of action inconsistent with the regulations after November 15th (the effective date), including the exercise by networks of their existing 28-day options."

Press Chiefs Testify

Appearing at FCC hearings on press-radio relationships in Washington last Thursday, were Herbert Moore, president of Transradio News Service and Joseph V. Connolly, president of King Features, of which International News Service is a subsidiary. Both Mr. Moore and Mr. Connolly attested the importance of radio in the dissemination of news.

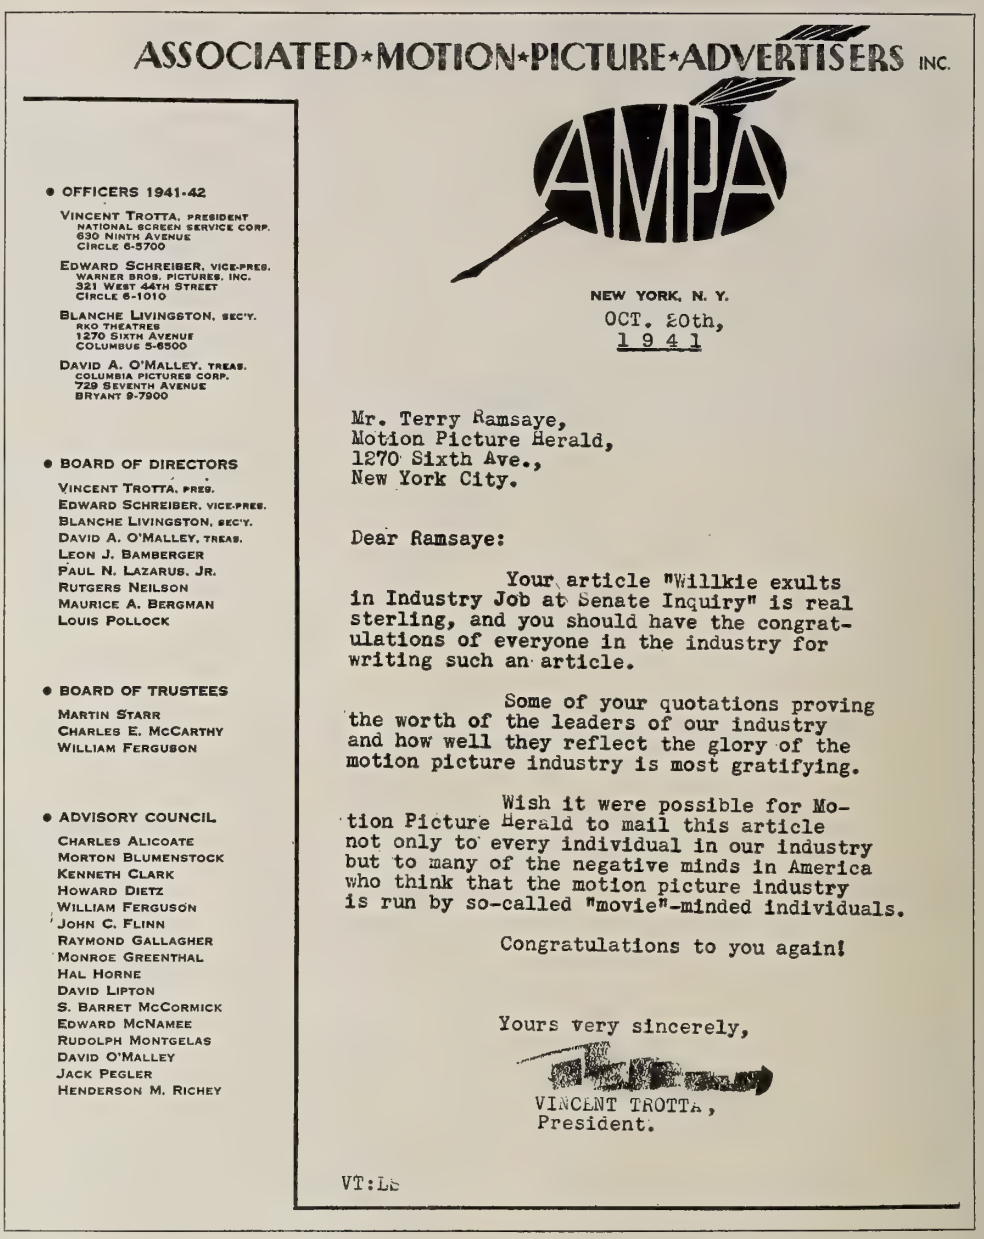
Mr. Connolly reported that sales of news to radio stations had risen rapidly as newspaper publishers' objections to such sales "diminished and disappeared."

Mr. Moore told the commission that originally newspaper and press associations not only opposed, but did all in their power to prevent, the development of radio news services.

The Transradio president declared that in 1934, when his company was organized, and for several years thereafter, "all manner of hindrances" were placed in his way, ranking from efforts to exclude his reporters from news sources to pressure brought to bear on foreign news services to prevent their making agreements with him.

Mr. Moore further said that the feud between radio and press control of news finally was settled in 1937, in litigation, and with adoption of an "open-door policy" in the matter of news servicing to radio stations.

Mr. Connolly testified that the majority of newspaper publishers now believe that supplying news to radio stations promotes rather than retards circulation growth. He, too, pointed out, however, that the present attitude of publishers is the reverse of opinion in 1935, when International News began supplying news to stations.



He further pointed out that action of the Associated Press in making its news the property of member publishers, available to radio stations "has practically dismissed any objections by newspapers to use of news on radio."

Moneyhun Becomes Botsford's Advertising Aide at Fox

Frank Moneyhun, with Twentieth Century-Fox's home office advertising department since January, 1939, has been named executive assistant to A. M. Botsford, director of advertising and publicity.

Mr. Moneyhun had been handling pressbooks and cooperative, and national advertising.

He has been in the industry since 1922, at which time he was assistant advertising manager of the Orpheum Circuit. Mr. Moneyhun remained in that post until 1929, then joining Paramount-Publix, working in Miami, Atlanta, and Buffalo. In 1933, he was associated with the Katz & Dalle circuit, Indianapolis; after five years there, he went to Fox.

Dear Ramsaye:

Your article "Willkie exults in Industry Job at Senate Inquiry" is real sterling, and you should have the congratulations of everyone in the industry for writing such an article.

Some of your quotations proving the worth of the leaders of our industry and how well they reflect the glory of the motion picture industry is most gratifying.

Wish it were possible for Motion Picture Herald to mail this article not only to every individual in our industry but to many of the negative minds in America who think that the motion picture industry is run by so-called "movie"-minded individuals.

Congratulations to you again!

NEW SPURT IN STAGE BOOKINGS AND NAME BANDS AT FILM THEATRES

Combination House Policies Still on the Increase, Despite Shortage of Talent and Resultant Skyrocketing of Booking Costs

Booking of stage shows into film theatres, both by major circuits and independents, continues at the pace set earlier in the season, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on October 4th, with "live-talent" presentations in motion picture houses increased this year over last by as much as 30 per cent.

RKO still has the lead over Paramount, Loew's and Warners' in extending shows to their film houses.

Two major snags for all circuit and independent bookers, however, are presenting difficulties, it is understood. First, there's a scarcity of good talent, and, as a result, competitive bidding for popular stage personalities in demand is expected to skyrocket salaries. Another problem is that local musicians in some situations, are demanding a wage increase as much as 15 per cent. It is felt that if vaudeville stages a "come-back" this season, musician's unions will be the first stumbling block in the way of achieving the maximum from the return of talent to film theatres.

Name-bands seem to be the top-billing in many houses. Some estimate that this year at least $5,000,000 will be paid out to orchestras by motion picture houses. Last year, approximately $4,000,000 was spent on name-bands. In addition, the playing time for bands this year is being increased. In 1940, there were about 20 weeks for orchestras getting from $3,500 per week to as much as $10,000. It is expected that this year, bands will get upwards of 30 weeks of playing time, almost as much as the 40-week routes of those "good old days" in vaudeville.

Name Bands Lead

In Philadelphia vaudeville accounted for a box office gross of more than $1,000,000 at Warner's Earle Theatre during 1940-1941. The only house in the central city district offering a film-stage policy, stage shows were returned to the Earle on Sept. 27th, 1940, after an impasse of more than a year with the local musicians' union. For the 52-week period ended Sept. 25th, 1941, the house grossed a total of $1,088,600.

The best grosses were registered by the name dance bands, their box-office appeal overshadowing by far the personal appearances of Hollywood luminaries. The season's best gross was garnered by Glenn Miller's orchestra for the season's final week, ended Sept. 25th grossing a near-record, $34,000 with "The Pittsburgh Kid" on the screen. The January 24th week was the only other week that brought in a gross over $30,000, combination of Erskine Hawkins and the "Four Ink Spots," with "Trail of the Vigilantes" on the screen, accounting for $32,500. The season's lowest mark was registered for the April 18th week, combination of Abe Lyman's orchestra with movieland's Alan Mowbray with "A Girl, A Guy and a Gob" on the screen drawing only $14,000, which is the house average on straight pictures.

During the coming season, emphasis on the Philadelphia stage bookings will continue to be entirely on name bands. Booked in for the remainder of the year are Sammy Kaye, Charlie Barnet, Tommy Dorsey, Kay Kyser, Jimmy Dorsey, Erskine Hawkins-Four Ink Spots, Ted Lewis, Artis Shaw and Woody Herman.

For the first time in 10 years, Columbus, Ohio's capital city, sees vaudeville return to the local boards every week. RKO's Palace inaugurated a policy of presenting stage bills with Harry Howard's "Beachcombers of 1942." The Palace, in recent years, offered spot bookings of top bands and touring units occasionally. The house heretofore has been playing double features in the afternoon and continuing with one of the features on a single bill in the evening.

Following a two-week shutdown, the Capitol in Atlanta, re-opened this week with a film-stage show policy. In Worcester, Mass., steady vaudeville has returned with stage bills offered at the Plymouth on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Second-run pictures also are shown on the same bill. The Plymouth nearly dropped stage entertainment when the management and the musician's union couldn't agree on how many performances a day the pit-band should play without extra pay. A compromise was reached, however, and the theatre assembled a stage show headed by Joe Venuti. Louis Prima's orchestra and Ted Lewis already have played the Plymouth, with Charlie Barnet and Tony Pastor's orchestra coming in October 27th and November 3rd.

Weekend Shows Set

At the Astor Theatre, Reading, Pa., vaudeville returned on October 3rd, with a stage show policy on Fridays and Saturdays. The house featured shows on week-ends last season when it was operated, on a lease, by the Warner circuit. It has since reverted back to its original owner, H. J. Schad.

Fabian's 3,700-seat Palace Theatre in Albany will continue its recently inaugurated policy of one vaudeville feature each month in conjunction with films.

The Palace played to good boxoffice with Glenn Miller and his orchestra earlier this month, following with the booking by division manager Louis R. Golding, of 20th Century-Fox's "Sun Valley Serenade," featuring the unit. The next vaudeville feature is a full week stage show headed by Bill Robinson, booked for the week of November 18th.

The Palace booked one of the longest stage acts of its film-house career. During the week of October 7th, the Andrews Sisters appeared with Joe Venuti's orchestra, with Carroll and Home and Spencer and Forman appearing on the bill. Jimmy Dorsey's band is due at the Palace later in the season.

Double Features Dropped

This week the Oriental, in Chicago, resumed its former combination policy of stage shows and pictures, dropped in the spring in favor of double features. Decision to change from doubles, which have been profitable, it is reported, was expedited by the cancelling of stage presentations at the State-Lake, a Balaban and Katz house, for an indefinite run of "Sergeant York." The Chicago theatre is the only other house in the downtown district using stage shows.

Admission prices at the Oriental, now 25 and 40 cents will be increased on week-ends to 35 and 50 cents. Stage attractions will be booked by Charles Hogan, who also books talent for the Warner housse in the Chicago territory. Ray Lange will conduct the pit orchestra.

Nate Platt, chief talent booker and production manager of Balaban and Katz, reported that following the run of "York" at the State-Lake, there is a possibility that stage shows will not be resumed, and that a straight picture policy may be adopted for the theatre.

Meanwhle, a stage unit, "Hollywood Sweater Girls Revue," is playing the Great States circuit in Chicago and other mid-west theatres. The revue features Cecilia Parker, Peggy Moran, Dick Baldwin, June Preisser and Mary Healy, screen personalities.

In Rochester, RKO's Temple, tested public reaction to stage shows this week with "Fats" Waller's band unit and pictures at 50 cents, for four days starting October 23rd. Regular house price is 28 cents. Two weeks later, "Life With Father," the Broadway show, comes into the Temple for four days at "legit" prices of $2.75 top. Manager Louis Mayer of the Temple, said he will book as many stage shows as possible, if the Waller unit is successful.

The Egyptian theatre in Boston, operated by Mullin and Pinanski, added stage shows to films last week. In Indianapolis, however, the Lyric ended its vaudeville show policy recently. The 2,000-seat house is operated by Greater Indianapolis Amusement Company.

The Rex theatre in Spokane, Wash., two weeks ago, changed its house policy by adding a burlesque stage show to film bills. This increased the admission prices but also doubled the box-office receipts. George Featherstone and Jack Birland operate the Rex.

Reports from the field indicate that legitimate stage play activity this year is continuing at a good pace.

Anita Louise, screen actress, will begin a 10-week tour with "Mr. and Mrs. North," in Baltimore, with Detroit and Chicago bookings set to follow. Owen Davis, Jr., will be her leading man. The length of the company's road tour will depend partly on release date of the screen version of the Broadway play, Miss Louise reported.

One of the most complete drama seasons in recent years has been slated this autumn and winter for the Lyceum theatre in Minneapolis, the season opening with "Meet the People" on October 19th.

Stars to Perform

Other road show attractions at the Lyceum will include the Jooss ballet: "The Doctor's Dilemma,"; "Boys and Girls Together," a Veloz and Yolanda dance show; "Hold Onto Your Hat," "My Sister Eileen," "There Shall Be No Night," the Robert Sherwood play; "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Life With Father," "The Corn Is Green" and "Macbeth."

Among the stars of these shows will be: Katherine Cornell, Ed Wynn, Al Jolson, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine, Ethel Barrymore, Maurice Evans and Flora Robson. Leo Murray, manager of the Lyceum, is reported to be negotiating for additional road show offerings.

Meanwhile, the new William Saroyan play, "Jim Dandy," had its world premiere on October 16th at the University theatre of the University of Minnesota. The play was released by author Saroyan to the National Theatre conference of which the University is a member.

In Providence, R. I., a new stock theatre company, to be known as the American Drama, Inc., will open at the Playhouse on or about November 3rd. The venture will be under the auspices of Associated Theatres and James H. Doyle. In recent years, Associated operated the Playhouse for infrequent road show and screen attractions. Mr. Doyle was at one time connected with the old Albee Stock Company.

Abe Spitz, president of Associated, and Mr. Doyle, were in New York last week, engaging players and booking legitimate stage shows. When the stock company opens, Providence will have more stage entertainment than in many years, and all dowtown houses will be in operation in that city, an unusual circumstance for the big factory town.

Fay's theatre in Providence, resumed its vaudeville-film policy last week by bringing in Duke Daly to handle the orchestra.

ALLIED, IN PITTSBURGH, MOVES TO UNITE ALL OF INDUSTRY'S FACTIONS

Connecticut Allied Branch Meets to Reconsider Unity Proposal; H. M. Richey Addresses Pittsburgh Meeting

The fate of Allied's industry "liaison committee"—which is to cooperate with other sectors of the film industry to promote unity, and a joint committee to combat troubles in the industry and from without, was decided Wednesday by National Allied States Association's board of directors, in Pittsburgh, on the second day of the annual convention of Allied of Western Pennsylvania, with which the directors met concurrently.

All 15 regional Allied groups have approved the proposal to confer with representatives of other branches to form a national committee to confer on industry problems. A vote on a resolution to form a permanent organization for this purpose was passed 12 to 3.

H. A. Cole, Roy E. Harrold, Jack Kirsch, Sidney E. Samuelson and Martin G. Smith, Allied leaders, were appointed to the committee which will communicate with leaders of other branches of the industry on the joint conference plan. Taxation, the good name of the industry, institutional advertising, competitive amusements, protection of priority status, a distribution system to replace the consent decree "when it lapses" and a means of peacably adjusting differences between the several branches of the industry were among the proposed topics set for "unity" discussions.

The "liaison committee" proposal was first rejected at the national Allied convention at Philadelphia, in September. The officers resigned; but the Allied board refused the resignations, and, disregarding the convention vote as unrepresentative, mailed "plebescite" ballots on the committee plan, to individual units.

As the board met Wednesday morning in Pittsburgh, it had the statement from Colonel Henry Albert Cole, of Texas, national President; that the Texas unit, of which he is also head, and which was the last to vote, had also approved the plan. Meanwhile, Connecticut Allied, the only unit to reject the plan by the mail poll, met on Tuesday to reconsider its decision. Still not approving the plan, it decided, however, to follow the national organization's course.

Richey Backs Unity Plan

"Unity" in the industry, and, inferentially, the plan for the contact committee, was backed by Henderson M. Richey, director of public relations for MGM and a guest speaker at Tuesday afternoon's Pittsburgh convention open meeting. The meeting was preceded by registration, and luncheon in the blue room of the Hotel Roosevelt, Pittsburgh, site of the convention.

First, and chief, speaker at Tuesday's session was Abram F. Myers, national general counsel, who asserted three "issues" face exhibitors: "Shall we unite all trade organizations on a common front for solving problems arising from the consent decree; should the influence of organizations such as Allied be exerted towards conferring with the distributors on new selling methods; taxation."

Retiring president Fred Beedle attacked the consent decree, suggested revision of the national and local Allied constitutions, and assailed exhibitor apathy.

He also attributed the increase in rentals to the decree. He asserted: "We started out in the Fall of 1940 with the decree on our minds, and I think we all agree that we are finishing the Fall of 1941 with the decree on our backs, in our hairs, and standing by the boxoffice."

In suggesting revision of unit laws, he also suggested that all delegates at a national convention be allowed to vote.

Fred Herrington, executive secretary, assailed labor "racketeers." He reviewed the Harrisburg (state capital) legislative situation, noting three laws died, which would have hurt the industry: the three-man committee on theatre construction measures, the two men in a booth bill, and the children under 15 Sunday ban.

Thornton Kelly, field organizer, explained the National Screen Service cooperative short subject advertising plan, accepted by the New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania units. The first reel, a travelogue for the Champion spark plug company, is being shown, he said.

M. A. Rosenberg, a past president, and the convention chairman, commented the Western Pennsylvania board had rejected the plan because it didn't want to disclose boxoffice reports to NSS, and didn't want to put advertising on theatre screens. He promised reconsideration by the directors, however, if members wished.

Before the convention, speculation centered, not so much around the whole proposal for a "liaison committee," but about its third paragraph, which indicates Allied will enter an intra-industry joint committee. This paragraph has been assailed because regional leaders of Allied, such as Nate Yamins, of Fall River, active in opposition at the convention, believe such a joint committee would patently be dominated by the distributors' vote combined with the votes of their affiliates.

Myers Writes Yamins

In a letter to Abram F. Myers, Allied general counsel, Mr. Yamins said:

"I tried to make it clear, that not the intent but the effect of the resolution would be to emasculate the independence of Allied and result in making Allied into another MPTOA as was done in Toronto. I tried to make the point clear that the liaison committee was the entering wedge and the rest would follow."

He also added he had not, at the convention, meant to impugn the integrity of good faith of Allied's leaders.

Mr. Myers replied he knew Mr. Yamins' statements had not been maliciously intended; and he defended the legality of the special board meeting immediately following the convention, contending also that "by this action, Allied was extricated from a predicament which I believe would have proved fatal."

Mr. Yamins had stated, in the controversies following the convention, that the board cannot meet without due notice to all members.

The New England unit, of which Mr. Yamins is chairman of the executive committee, and which rejected the third paragraph, recalled this week in press release, that its unanimous vote of confidence in the national officers and board was prompted by Mr. Yamins. The release was issued as a "clarification" of the Fall River exhibitor's "attitude" toward the national leadership.

Henderson M. Richey, exhibitor relations director for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, speaking at the Allied of Western Pennsylvania meeting in Pittsburgh Tuesday issued a warning against too little talk and not enough action on industry unity proposals.

Declaring that unity can be like the weather, something about which everybody talks but nobody does anything, Mr. Richey observed that most exhibitors have indicated that they feel the time is at hand for an effective inter-industry organization.

In an examination of the first months of arbitration Mr. Richey reported that MGM has reached the conviction that the system of settling exhibitor-distributor disputes now in effect under the consent decree has been a constructive force. He said that the company would continue to assist in maintaining it.

"We don't believe that it is incumbent upon our managers to defend clearance cases, particularly if there is a question of doubt.

"All of our field men have been instructed to attempt to settle any differences that may arise without making it necessary for the exhibitor to resort to arbitration. Yet, arbitration is the only answer, we enter the arbitration without hard feelings hoping that it can be made a friendly forum where differences of opinion may be resolved speedily at a minimum of expense by a neutral arbitrator."

Mr. Richey also told the exhibitors that there is an increasing, and countrywide, attention being paid to motion picture merchandising. Selling to the public, he said, is the best answer to boxoffice troubles. Theatre owners, he said, are spending less time arguing over the prices and conditions of new product and more time selling to the public.

Better merchandising of motion pictures is the industry's most important problem, next to unity, he asserted.

Metro will sponsor a series of regional selling clinics, built around the "Show Builder" trailer Mr. Richey revealed, starting at Columbus, Ohio, on November 25th. The sales clinics, he said, have been planned for the benefit of small town and subsequent run exhibitors in search of new ideas in selling and merchandising.

Sell Film: Lee

Exhibitors should not merely sell their shows to the public; they should also sell the industry, Claude Lee, Paramount's director of public relations, told the convention Wednesday, and added:

"As we rise to the current awakening to the need for institutional selling in the motion picture industry, we must never lose sight of the fact that we are setting out on a job that knows no end. We must realize that any effort to enlighten the people to a consciousness of the virtues of this business, is one that must endure as a steady hygiene of doing business."

The Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska will meet "about November 24th," according to Leo Wolcott, president. Mr. Wolcott did not name the site, but it probably will be Des Moines.

In pre-convention bulletin, Mr. Wolcott said the theatre owners should "plan now" to enact laws for the following in legislatures of the two states:

1. For adequate and uniform theatre fire regulations.
2. Place school "activities" funds in the hands of the school boards.
3. For an anti-ASCAP law like Nebraska already has.
4. Minnesota's new law governing film selling.

Mr. Wolcott, remarking upon his unit's approval of the Allied "unity" plan, said it was "the only possible safeguard against the many

Variety Tents Date Banquets, Other Events

The 13th annual banquet commemorating the founding of the Variety Clubs of America will be held at the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh, Sunday night, November 2nd.

Those making reservations are also going to the University of Pennsylvania-Ohio State football game on the preceding day. John H. Harris, National Chief Barker, will be the host at a party following the game.

Bill McGraw, former attorney-general of Texas and recently the toastmaster for the induction dinner of Tent No. 25 in Los Angeles, is among those scheduled to speak at the banquet.

Meanwhile, the Pittsburgh Variety club has elected the following to the board of directors: I. Elmer Ecker, Mort England, Sam Feinberg, William Finkel, Robert Fiske, Mark Goldman, Joseph Hiller, Harry Kalmine, M. N. Shapiro, Tony Stern and Al Weiblinger. Election of officers will be held shortly, C. C. Kellenberg, retiring chief barker, has announced.

Other Variety Activities

The 11th annual charity ball of the Variety Club of Kansas City will be held at the Pla-mor hotel, Friday, November 21st. Jerry Zigmond is chief barker of the club. General chairman for the ball is Earl Jamison. Sam Abend is treasurer of the general committee in charge of tickets. Arthur Cole is chairman for table reservations, assisted by Jim Lewis.

The opening night of the Kansas City engagement of "Ice-Capades," which arrived at the Pla-Mor on Tuesday night, October 21st, was sponsored by the Variety Club of that city.

The next attraction of the Variety Club of Texas, is the second Annual Hallowe'en Costume Party, which will be held on the Roof Garden of the Adolphus Hotel, Dallas, Hallowe'en night, Friday, October 31st.

The proceeds from the affair will go to the Variety's charity fund.

Los Angeles' Variety Club No. 25, newest of the nationally established Tents, is getting off to a $75,000 start.

Making a complete policy reversal, Charles P. Skouras, president of Fox West Coast, announced to the club in Los Angeles that FWC screens will be opened for commercial advertising. Estimated proceeds of $75,000 are to be given to Tent. No. 25.

The FWC opposed commercial advertising consistently on the basis that it fooled people who were seeking entertainment.

The Los Angeles Tent's new clubrooms will be opened early next month. The Tent membership embraces distribution, exhibition and production as no other tent does.

Variety Sponsors Dance

The Columbus, Ohio, Variety Club will sponsor an RCA-Victor Dance Caravan at the Columbus Auditorium, November 11th and 12th, at which the orchestras of Tommy Dorsey and Shep Fields will participate. All proceeds will go to the club's charities. Virgil A. Jackson, head of the Columbus Variety, is chairman.

Albany's recently reorganized Variety Club will effect permanent organization with the election of officers at the Hotel Ten Eyck in that city on October 29th.

The club, whose franchise as Tent Nine was recently restored at a meeting addressed by J. H. Balmer, Pittsburgh, national treasurer of Variety Clubs, will be housed in the Ten Eyck on November 12th.

Members of the committee planning for the club's first banquet, November 20th, include J. Meyer Schine, Schine Circuit, Gloversville, and Si Fabian, Fabian Theatre Enterprises, New York.

The Variety Club in Charlotte, N. C., will hold its first annual charity banquet at the Hotel Charlotte on November 8th. Scott Lee is general chairman and Philip Longdon vice-chairman.

The Philadelphia industry was to give double testimonial dinner on Thursday in honor of Fire Marshal Jacob Clinton, in recognition of the things he has done to reduce fire hazards in theatres, and for Louis Krouse, president of the IATSE, Local No. 307. The affair was to be held at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. Ben Golder, attorney for the Warner exchange, was to be toastmaster, Ben Amsterdam, chairman of the arrangements committee, and David Beresin and Jack Beresin, in charge of securing honored guests.

Attendance is expected to reach 1,000 at the testimonial dinner Monday in honor of James P. Clark, sponsored by the Philadelphia Variety Club to mark his elevation to the position of Democratic City Chairman.

The Philadelphia Showmen's Club is sponsoring a vaudeville show for the benefit of the Welfare Fund Committee on November 16th, and a testimonial dinner the following evening for Jack Beresin, head of Berlo Vending. The vaudeville show will be presented at Fay's theatre. Sid Stanley, manager of the theatre, is chairman of the committee.

Twin City Charity Continues

The Twin City Variety Club in Minneapolis has added the establishment of a blood bank to its philanthropic projects, to be started at General Hospital and used primarily in the treatment of children's diseases. The club also sponsors the Minneapolis Milk Fund, has provided radios for the wards in the General Hospital and has provided sun lamps for Lymanhurst Children's Hospital in that city.

Over 100 guests attended the twice-postponed opening of the Baltimore Variety Club's new headquarters last week atop the Stanley theatre building.

Entertainment was provided from the Hippodrome theatres as part of a special opening night program. C. William Hicks is Chief Barker of the tent and other officers and governors include: O. D. Weems, Edward Perotka, Barry Goldman, Joseph Grant, Bernard Seaman, Edwin A. Sherwood, Lauritz Garman, Elmer Nolte, Jr., J. Louis Rome, Frank Durkee and Rodney Collier.

Steve Fitzgerald, manager of the Stratford Theatre, Chicago, has succeeded Al Blasko as president of the Warner Club of Chicago. Mr. Blasko resigned when he was transferred to the Wisconsin division, which is out of the club district.

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, composed of film salesmen working out of local exchanges, accepted nine applicants at their last meeting at the Congress Hotel, making the memebrship 62 out of a possible 65 in that city.

W. E. Weinscheinker, of the Universal exchange, and president of the Reel Fellows Club, has announced that the organization will hold its second annual dinner-dance in the Gold Room of the Congress Hotel on January 23rd, 1942.

The New Haven, Conn., Warner Club has elected C. G. Barrett president for the coming year. Other officers are Russell Clark, vice-president in charge of entertainment; P. Zimmerman, vice-president in charge of welfare and loans; Jeanette Shields, vice-president for membership; Sophie M. Gurian, secretary, and James A. Bracken, treasurer. Angelo Lombardi and Victoria Cusanelli were elected to the board of governors.

unfriendly outside interests who apparently seek to destroy us."

Of taxes, he said the end of Federal taxes "is not yet in sight"; that, instead, "a House committee is at work right now on a 'new 1942 tax bill.'"

He added: "This is becoming very dangerous, and will need the combined efforts of all of us to keep it within reason. . . . The immense fortunes the few have taken out of this industry make all of us the first target of higher taxes."

Arkansas ITO Meeting

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi convention closed Monday night, in Little Rock, with the annual banquet, at which chief speaker was the Attorney General of Arkansas, Jack Holt, who discussed legislation affecting the industry. Other honored speakers at the two-day meeting were R. X. Williams, president; and Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the national MPTOA.

December Ohio Convention?

The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio will hold its annual conclave in late November or in December, according to a committee comprising P. J. Wood, executive secretary, Max Stern, and Leo Kessell.

The date is expected to coincide with the world premiere of "The Male Animal," if Warners decide to hold it in Columbus, in accordance with an invitation extended by the city through the Columbus Variety Club, and presented personally by Virgil A. Jackson, chief barker, on his recent visit to Hollywood.

December 7th Carolina Date

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina will meet for annual convention at Charlotte, N. C., December 7th and 8th.

St. Louis Legislature Kills Proposed Tax

A bill providing for a one per cent license on tax on gross receipts of theatres in St. Louis was killed by the Legislative Committee of the Board of Aldermen last week, by unanimous vote.

The proposal was introduced by Alderman Edward L. Duke, who told reporters he hadn't discussed it with city tax officials nor did he have any idea how much revenue it was designed to yield. The one per cent tax would have been in addition to a flat tax on theatre operations ranging from $25 a month to $150 for 12 months, now in effect.

Paramount Drive Plans Completed

Ninety-eight managers, department heads and executives of Balaban and Katz gathered at a luncheon-meeting at the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, Thursday, October 16th, to inaugurate a nine-week drive for more business in Paramount theatres.

For the drive, which opens October 31st and ends January 3rd, the Balaban and Katz theatres have been divided into five groups, the Loop house, "A" houses, "B" houses, "C" houses and general release theatres. Winners of the drive in each of these groups will be given an all-expense tour to Hollywood.

It is expected that the campaign, arranged by Balaban and Katz executives will be used as a pattern for other Paramount affiliated theatres throughout the country.

The Loop prizes will be formated on effort and expense control, while the outlying classes will be based on the greatest spread between expense and profits over the same period last year.

Speakers at the meeting included J. J. Rubens, Great States Circuit executive; Walter Immerman, general manager of Balaban and Katz; John Balaban, president of the company, and W. K. Hollander, advertising head. Paramount president Barney Balaban called from New York and through loud speaker arrangements his conversation with John Balaban and his message was heard by the assembled guests.

Walter Immerman was made honorary chairman of the drive. Dave Balaban and Harry Lustgarten are chairman and co-chairman and A. J. Platt, Nate Platt, Jack Sampson and Dave Wallerstein were appointed committee members.

During the meeting, miniature golden keys were conferred on Balaban and Katz "Keymen." These, together with the drive's keynote, "Be a Keyman For Y. Frank Freeman" are the keystones of the nine-week drive. Room decorations were replete with cutout golden keys and the key symbol appeared in distributed literature and forms.

James R. Savage and Eddie Seguin, of the Balaban and Katz publicity department, will handle the drive campaign in Chicago.

HERALD PEOPLE

JAMES D. IVERS came to the Herald as a reporter in 1936—now runs the copy desk and is make-up editor. On Wednesday he hides in the nether reaches of the O'Brien Press in Lafayette Street and engages in the business of putting the Herald to bed, trying to remain out of reach except by involved long distance telephone or carrier pigeon.

He is an authority on the pronunciation of Fordham University football players' names, having started his career in journalism at that institution. Before joining the Herald he roamed Westchester for seven years, reporting and later editing for the Yonkers Herald and the Macy newspapers, an experience which he says induced an acute allergy for cocktail lounges and country clubs.

Three Drive-In Theatres Planned

Plans have been made for the construction of three new Drive-In theatres in Rochester, N. Y.; Dayton and Columbus, O., according to an announcement issued by Paul Wintner, president of the National Drive-In Theatres, Incorporated, with headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio.

The growth and operation of other drive-in projects was reported in last week's Motion Picture Herald, page 43.

This company now controls and operates the Buffalo Drive-In theatre in the Town of Cheektowaga near the Buffalo Airport and also the theatre in Maumee, Ohio, in the outskirts of Toledo, Ohio.

As planned by Mr. Wintner, the new theatres together with the ones already in operation will feature a "bleacher" section at the rear of the last ramp to accommodate 1,000 patrons who arrive on bikes, motorcycles and by foot. Each theatre will accommodate 1,200 cars.

The National Drive-In Theatres also plan the first drive-in night clubs to be a part of these Drive-In theatres. Patrons leaving the theatre as well as other motorists will drive directly into the night club, be served with drinks and refreshments while seated in their auto, and when the band strikes up, they can leave the car and partake of dancing on a specially built and patented Carl Heigaard outdoor dance floor. A floor show will be staged also.

Warner, RKO Ask Tax Assessment Reduction

Warner Brothers Pictures and subsidiaries, the Stanley-Mark-Strand Corp., and Intrastate Theatre Corp., have filed five petitions in the New York supreme court against the New York City Tax Commission for the reduction of the 1941-42 assessments. The petitions asked that an assessment of $3,420,000 on the Strand theatre by cut to $2,128,000; the $1,125,000 against the Hollywood theatre be reduced to $525,000; the $1,210,000 against the Warner New York exchange be reduced to $885,000; the $175,000 assessment on the home office building be cut to $150,000, and an assessment on the warehouse of $976,000 be reduced to $641,000.

RKO Radio Pictures in New York have also filed a petition asking that the assessed valuation of 415,000 placed on the Pathe Building, 35 West 45th Street, be reduced to $250,000.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Philadelphia Variety Club is thinking twice before turning over the dais to political figures for its annual banquet on December 11th. The membership and management is still trying to forget the 1939 banquet when the former Mayor Jimmy Walker of New York headed a contingent of political figures at the speakers' table. One of the leading lights at that time was Senator Wheeler. Oddly enough, at that time, the Senator found the film industry most praiseworthy in his speech. As a commentary on the present situation, it was brought to light that the Senator was the only political figure who was paid for his speech-making services at the 1939 banquet dais, where sat, among others, Senator Guffey, of Pennsylvania, former Governor Nice of Maryland and the now Mayor of New York, LaGuardia. For his 1939 remarks complimenting the film industry, the Philadelphia Variety Club paid Senator Wheeler $300 plus expenses.

Theatre Arts magazine for November in an anonymous article entitled, "The Freest Theatre in the Reich," will tell of the existence of a wide circuit of underground, 'illicit' theatres running in German concentration camps.

What with hundreds of renowned poets and dramatists, stage, screen and cabaret actors swelling the list of talent, the prisoners, in their quarters, put on nightly shows which frequently bring the dreaded S.S. storm trooper guards. Leo Peterson, for many years general manager of the Black Hills Amusement Company, in the Dakotas, arrived in New York this week with George Hopkins, the parachutist extraordinary, now under Mr. Peterson's managerial wing. Mr. Hopkins is the young man, recently of the RAF, Chinese and Brazilian Armies who parachuted from a plane to the peak of South Dakota's 1,250-foot, straight-up Devil's Tower a few weeks ago "to prove it could be done." Subsequent difficulty in descending the sheer walls of the pinnacle brought eight days of national news attention and much publicity to the trapped chutist.

Mr. Peterson, a pioneer showman, is guiding the jumper on a personal appearance radio and theatre tour. He explains that the original purpose of the leap was not publicity but to demonstrate that trained parachute battalions can pick their spot and land on it. Furthermore, he said, young Hopkins' eight rescuers, who climbed the mountain, were all paid for their efforts. Few have scaled the big rock.

An old time movie exhibitor in the Dakotas, Mr. Peterson has brought fame to other natives of his home state. Mary McClanahan, currently on the air waves and stage as drummer in the all-girl Phil Spitalny band beat out her first professional drum rolls with the family orchestra that played prologues at Mr. Peterson's Rapid City, South Dakota theatre.

Hopkins, now only 29, has made 2,300 parachute jumps from the air to-date. He has repeatedly shipped to England since the outbreak of World War II, to teach the British how to do it. He made his first jump when only 12 years old. That was when the pilot with whom he was riding in a noisy open cockpit, pointed earthward to show the youngster a big forest fire. Hopkins thought the pilot was telling him to jump, and away went the 12-year-oldster into space. Of course, he had a parachute strapped to his back, but further than that had only the most rudimentary instructions, to pull the rip cord.

He told us he made the drop to the almost-needle-pointed top of the 1,250 Devil's Tower —for which he made a $50 bet only to be stuck atop the place for five days—to prove to some air colleagues that a parchuter can guide his landing on the way down.

A. J. Jeffries, manager of United Artists' exchange up in Toronto, took to the skies the other morning for a sales trip to Ottawa. Unfavorable weather conditions prevailed at Ottawa and the plane winged on to try for a landing at Montreal. There, too, landing was hazardous and the pilot had to hit out for the long eastern hop to Moncton, in New Brunswick before conditions permitted a landing. From there, Mr. Jeffries had to return to Toronto by train, riding 1,300 miles of detour, losing several days. And at that he didn't get to his customer at Ottawa.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS FIGHT CURFEW PLANNED FOR WINTER BOMB SEASON

Government May Close Shows After Dark to Relieve Transport Facilities and Congestion; CEA Tells Members to Protest

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

With the advent of the third Winter of the war, the possibility of a recrudescence of heavy bombing, and the certainty that transport will be restricted, British exhibitors are now facing a virtual threat from the Government of what will amount to a curfew on cinema hours—though probably only in congested and metropolitan areas. The threat is being resisted with considerable force by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association in general and picture theatre owners throughout the country.

Although no specific or direct announcement has been made, it is obvious that the Government through three of its departments, the Ministry of Home Security, the Ministry of War Transport and the Ministry of Labour, has been discussing this question of a Winter curfew for cinemas, shops, restaurants and places of entertainment. Already a hint has been given, probably not accidentally, by the Minister of War Transport, Colonel Llewellin. The hint, though voiced in general terms, indicated that the Government were nursing the idea of closing all such places, at least in business areas, between the hours of 4 p.m. and 6 p.m.—the rush peak hour of travelling. Less overt feelers have been issued in the direction of a complete curfew—or close down—of such places from blackout onwards during the most "vulnerable" months of the year.

Consultation Demanded

Against such action, which is obviously speculative rather than deliberate, it has been difficult for the C.E.A. to take appropriate or forceful action. They have nevertheless jumped into the breach with a demand that no action of this kind, no matter what its shape or intention, be taken unless they are consulted first of all. At the moment of writing a meeting has been arranged between Colonel Llewellin and C.E.A. executives.

All over the country local areas have been dealing with suggested or prospective curfews and adjustment of closing hours, arrangement of programme times to meet with transport needs, etc. In some instances a harmonious solution has been achieved, in others the situation has reached a condition of stalemate.

Reasons behind the Government's step, for it can be taken that the Government intends to take some step or other, are probably twofold. It can never be assumed that this Winter is going to be as calm from the point of view of bombing as have been the last four or five months. The blitz may easily break out again with much dislocation of traffic, etc. Likewise, though it has not been stated officially, enlightened circles are aware that evening transport this late Autumn and Winter is to be cut down to the barest minimum. Economy in the question of coal and petrol has called for drastic action and it is known that buses will be taken off the streets after the peak traffic hours, and that home-going trains will be limited to the barest practicable minimum. The Government, obviously, with these things in mind, is determined to prevent as much congestion as it can on the railway, bus and tram routes.

Exhibitors, who have in general, under difficult circumstances, such as those of last year's blitz, been able to collaborate with the authorities on a co-operative and voluntary basis in solving the problem of transport and circulation during bombing periods, resent the Government's intentions and plans, not only on account of their interferences with trade and what they contend is inefficiency in dealing with a difficult problem, but even more so that discussions have been going on which involve the industry in a manner which can best be described as clandestine.

Transport Is Problem

The Government admit that discussions have been and are still going on, though they have not as yet, it would seem, reached a finalized stage. Chief objective in the Government's admission is the need to economize in transport and get as many people home before six o'clock (coincidentally after the usual hour for the first Alert last year). They suggest, however, that any curfews or adjustment of hours will be confined to the more congested areas, such as London and the larger provincial towns where people are employed, where entertainment centres exist and where people make their way homewards to outlying suburbs.

It is the exhibitor belief, assuming that the Government intends no more than to close cinemas between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m., that a two hour guillotine would be no solution of the problem at all, that it would in fact aggravate conditions considerably, that it would result not only in cutting down business and in some cases close the cinemas, but in some cases would result in such a congestion of traffic in the later hours as would be virtually impossible to deal with.

The Government apparently believe that there should be no temptation between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. which would draw workers away from the primary business of going home to bed. Against this the exhibitors believe that if cinemas were closed between four and six those who had intended to go to the cinemas would merely stay around town until the picture houses were open again, consequently causing congestion in the metropolitan areas and London's West End, where restaurants, cafes, etc., would be packed and then bringing about a worse chaos in the homeward rush when picture houses closed for the night. Such a condition, if bombing were to start again, bringing people on to the streets during a blitz would have the very reverse effect to what the Government intended, might produce conditions of chaos which would be both unpleasant and undesirable.

It is exhibitor experience, too, that picture house audiences will not be guided from the accustomed hours in regard to cinema going, will not have their time of entertainment moved forward or backward. Readjustment of hours of patronage is virtually, they contend, an impossibility.

Probably the Ministry of Transport, which has been discussing the matter with the Ministry of Home Security, under whose aegis comes police administration and safety precautions, and the Ministry of Labour, upon whom rests the onus of persuading employers to stagger hours and let workers home earlier, would not, as a result of conversations with the C.E.A., impose arbitrary conditions. They are more likely to seek their collaboration in achieving some voluntary arrangement whereby cinema hours could be adjusted to suit the abnormal conditions of the forthcoming Winter.

During the first Winter of the war and last year a perfectly harmonious and equitable arrangement was made between exhibitors and the police of London on a purely voluntary basis. That voluntary system obtains and has met with no criticism from press or public and has been consistently praised by the police and Government authorities. Right through the year hours have been staggered or adjusted to suit the challenging hours of the black-out, but it has been done from within the industry itself, with the approval of the police, and not imposed from without.

In London, for instance, for the month of October hours have been agreed upon earlier than those which existed during the Summer months, when there were more light hours of evening than dark ones. For instance on Sundays alone whilst London in general was opening cinemas between 3 p.m. and 8.30 p.m., the West End hours, arranged between the police and the London C.E.A., were 2.30 to 8. Weekday and Sunday hours for the Winter would, in the normal way, be reviewed by joint conversations between the industry and the authorities.

Larger Towns Included

Provincially, as already suggested, any adjustment of cinema hours would apply to the larger towns. Already the matter has come up for discussion locally in such districts as Manchester, Sheffield, Liverpool, Leeds, etc.

In one town, for instance, cinemas have been compelled up to the present to close half an hour before black-out. Recently this clause has been deleted from contracts, although the Justices have expressed the hope that a scheme will be practicable whereby earlier closing will be agreed upon between the cinema and the local authorities.

In Sheffield cinemas will stagger their closing hours during the Winter so that all of them will turn out their patrons from one hour after black-out until 9.45, according to the time of the year. This will continue from the end of October until March 7th.

It can be understood that exhibitors, who already are finding difficulties in continuing trading in many instances, resent further interference with their business, interference which may not only have the reverse effect from that intended by the authorities, but greatly deperciate conditions which are already far from good.

Exhibitors in general are quite ready to do whatever is equitable and proper from the war point of view but will naturally object to being made virtual scapegoats and asked to pay penalties which other sections of the trading community are not compelled to contribute.

BRITISH MANPOWER REPORT REVISED

It is believed in London trade circles that the report on the manpower needs of the film industry will be drastically amended.

Industry representatives on the committee which conducted an exhaustive survey of industry employe needs have indicated their refusal to sign the initial draft, recommending calling up for military service virtually all eligible men. A milder version of the report may be prepared. The committee was to meet again this week when a final report was expected to be completed.

15 Pennsylvania Towns To Vote on Sunday Shows

Fifteen communities in Pennsylvania will conduct a referendum on Sunday movies question at the November 4 elections. The small number of towns bringing the matter to the attention of voters this year is accounted for by the fact that as a result of a change in the rules for the referendum by the State Legislature at its last session, 20 percent of the electorate vote is required to file a petition. Previously, only five per cent of the registered voters were required to file a petition.

East McKeesport, Aspinwall, Perkasie, Ramey, Morgantown Township, Mill Creek Township, Zerbey Township, Milford, Montrose, Benson Borough, Avernon, Scottdale, Suterville and York will vote on the measure this year, none of which have movies on Sunday. A petition had been filed also in Uniontown, but it was rejected by the city commissioners on the charges that many of the required signatures were not of registered voters.

The fight to defeat the Sunday measures will again be waged by Rev. Dr. William B. Forney, executive secretary of the Pennsylvania Lord's Day Alliance.

Extensive promotional and exploitation plans, including network radio tie-ups accompany the current presentations of six new pictures: "Sundown," "Dumbo," "The Chocolate Soldier," "How Green Was My Valley," "Target for Tonight" and "Birth of the Blues."

Walter Wanger's "Sundown," to be released through United Artists, made its bow at a "typical" Hollywood opening last Thursday. Stars, directors, producers, writers and visitors to the film capital turned out at the Four Star Theatre. Top-names took part in a radio broadcast over Mutual network.

"Chocolate" Debut

MGM's new musical, "The Chocolate Soldier" will have its world premiere at the Astor in New York on Tuesday. The film, based on Ferenc Molnar's "The Guardsman," co-stars Nelson Eddy and Rise Stevens, the latter of the Metropolitan Opera, who makes her screen debut in this picture. The same popular priced, continuous-show policy now in effect at the Astor with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," will prevail.

"Dumbo" Bows

Presented under the auspices of the Vocational Service for Juniors, a philanthropic organization, Walt Disney's newest feature cartoon, "Dumbo," opened in New York Thursday, with a host of social and theatrical leaders in attendance. "Dumbo" was dramatized on Bob Emery's Rainbow House program over WOR in New York last Saturday, with a second broadcast scheduled for this Saturday.

"How Green" Opening

Proceeds of the premiere of "How Green Was My Valley," Twentieth Century-Fox, will go to the Navy Relief Society. The picture opens at the Rivoli in New York Tuesday. Naval officials are to attend the debut, which also marks director John Ford's retirement from films to go into Navy service as a Lt. Commander. "How Green" also marks his 25th year as a director.

"Target" at Globe

"Target for Tonight," the R.A.F.'s own film story of one of its recent raids on Germany, had its American premiere last Friday at the Globe Theatre, New York. Warner Bros. is distributing the film in the United States with the cooperation of the Royal Air Force and the Crown Film Unit which produced it.

"Blues" Debut Settled

Following the "tilt" between New Orleans and Memphis for first claim as the birthplace of America's "blues," and for honors to first show Paramount's new "Birth of the Blues," a trio of judges, Buddy De Sylva, Irving Berlin and Betty Jane Rhodes, have "decreed" that the opening should be shared by both Louisiana and Tennessee, on Friday evening, October 31st. The Bing Crosby-Mary Martin musical will open simultaneously at the Malco in Memphis and the Saenger in New Orleans.

Governor Sam H. Jones of Louisiana, sent Roark Bradford, writer, to Hollywood to argue the case for New Orleans, and Harry Martin, representing Tennessee, also appeared before the Hollywood tribunal of three. All of which made exploitation copy for the Paramount picture.

Ambidextrous

The Los Angeles Hearst papers are not accepting advertising on "Citizen Kane", that RKO-Orson Welles picture—because, you'll be remembering, of the intimation in some quarters that the picture story had revelancy to some phases of the career of a very certain publisher. But, ambidextrously, those same papers, the Los Angeles Examiner, morning, and Herald-Express, evening, is taking advertising from the Hawaii theatre on Hollywood boulevard, which seems to be playing "Citizen Kane." The reproduction above is typical of the copy.

Incidentally, "Citizen Kane" opened at the Hawaii theatre on Hollywood boulevard last week, Thursday, to stand-out business, which increased steadily through Friday, when an extra show had to be run to accommodate a patient queue, and paralyzed traffic in the region over the weekend. Al Galston, owner-manager, who predicted "the picture will run here through Christmas", converted an obstacle into an asset when he constructed his advertising campaign in such a manner that the blind ads in the Hearst papers served as novelty teasers, or reminders, redirecting attention of the populace to the big display ads published in the non-Hearst newspapers in Los Angeles and surrounding towns, and to the 356 billboards on which he shouted the news of the picture's opening. Thus, he said, the Hearstian reluctance to name the film in print "operated more for than against the success of the engagement". Parallel psychology funcitioned in the case of publicity stories in the Hearst periodicals which, like the ads, omitted mention of title or star.

Parenthetically, the Hawaii ads scrapped the "It's Terrific" theme used for the film elsewhere and stressed the romance in the narrative.

Six "Winslow" Openings

"Don Winslow of the Navy," Universal's new chapter-play, will have six simultaneous pre-release 'world premieres,' it was announced Tuesday by Bernard Kreisler, company short subjects' manager in New York. The openings will take place on the nationally proclaimed "Navy Day" on Monday, at the Granly Theatre, Norfolk, Va.; Alhambra, Cleveland; Senate, Harrisburg, Pa.; Ambassador, Indianapolis; State, Long Beach, Cal., and Telenews, Los Angeles. Don Terry, who plays the lead in "Winslow," will fly from Hollywood to Norfolk to make a personal appearance.

Paramount Chiefs Meet

Paramount's exploitation chiefs, in special conference at Hollywood's Hotel Ambassador, for five days, this week, discuss merchandising plans for the company's forthcoming productions, "Sullivan's Travels," "The Remarkable Andrew" and "The Great Man's Lady." The keynote was a special cooperation of the distributing company with individual theatre operators.

Following screening of "Louisiana Purchase," which concluded the sessions, Paramount exploiters left Hollywood to return to their home cities. The meetings, under supervision of Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity, were attended by Barney Balaban, Neil Agnew, Leonard Goldenson and Sam Dembow, Jr.

HOLLYWOOD PRODUCERS BUY 50 PROPERTIES FOR FILM PRODUCTION

Highlight of the September purchases was the acquisition of a W. Somerset Maugham novel. Paramount purchased the screen rights to "The Hour Before Dawn," a novel by Mr. Maugham which will be published first as a serial in the Red Book Magazine. Edward H. Griffith will produce and direct the film for the studio with Vera Zorina and Ray Milland in co-starring roles.

What's Your Temperature

The motion picture is a business. It seems well to say this, because so much that we may read, hear, and see tends to an impression that it is a fever.

The United States has been built by business, ever improving business—conducted with sane diligence, working for profits and ultimately successful in just the degree with which it has rendered service with a level-eyed policy of producing and selling on terms that have delivered margins of satisfaction at each step from plant to customer—consistently, continuously.

Republic Pictures Corporation is a business.

This corporation was founded for the sole purpose of making reasonable profits for a long time. To make profits for a long time requires a consistent delivery of satisfaction to the customers. That calls for product that can be counted on, so made that it can be sold at prices consistent with the market, delivered on a policy which recognizes the mutual interests of buyer and seller, on the long pull.

Republic intends always to make money out of its customers, and expects to do that always because the customers have taken profits out of Republic product. Six years of Republic experience show that a great many showmen like to buy profits, that more every year recognize sound, staple product made on performance, even if the field does glitter with gilded promises.

Business is the American way of constructive service of the whole people. It is the American way to pay and get what it pays for.

Republic is a business because it serves, enables the theatre to be a business. There is no substitute for profits

Weekend for Three

(RKO Radio)

Comedy of Marital Errors

Following this year's trend for gay and fanciful comedies with the camera accent on the boudoir, Tay Garnett has produced a film which makes no claim to distinction but which should draw its share of chuckles from a mature audience. Under the directorial guidance of Irving Reis "Weekend for Three" is an innocuous little comedy of a prosperous young husband who becomes so wrapped up in his business he forgets the niceties which flatter the feminine ego. It is upon this theme that the story evolves when the wife uses the foil of jealousy to regain the romance of pre-marital days.

Dennis O'Keefe is cast in the role of the prosperous young husband and Jane Wyatt his wife. Philip Reed is seen as the former beau and current house guest whose nerve-wracking exuberance nearly ruins the marital life of the couple. Edward Everett Horton, after a long absence from the screen, returns as the much-married executive whose outlook on femininity has soured, while Marion Martin, as the gay divorcee who spreads a little sunshine as she passes through life on her way to Reno, handles her small but entertaining share of the comedy competently.

For exhibitors who have found previous films of the type profitable "Weekend for Three" should attract the patrons who enjoy the lighter form of entertainment.

Reviewed in the Radio City Music Hall projection room attended only by the writer, who found many entertaining moments in the offering.—GEORGE SPIRES

ASCAP-Radio Deal Seen Near

The American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, following discussions with the new Independent Broadcasters, Inc., ASCAP announced, last Friday, that the "final hurdle" had been cleared in negotiations for return of its music to the NBC and CBS networks.

"Complete agreement," it was said, had been reached on objections previously presented by the independent broadcasters, many of whom had signified their reluctance to sign the ASCAP contract recently approved by the National Association of Broadcasters and the Independent Radio Network Affiliates. Both the Society and the two major networks have been waiting for approval of the majority of their affiliates before formally closing the air-music contract.

Meanwhile, it is understood that ASCAP is considering new avenues of revenue from music performance rights to help offset decreased radio network returns, with particular glances toward "juke boxes" and television. No increase of rates to theatres is being considered, it was said. Juke boxes could return to the Society $3,000,000 annually on the basis of a license fee of $10 per machine, per year, it was estimated.

Another major "headache" hit the NBC and CBS networks last week when the American Federation of Musicians issued a strike call, halting all music on non-commercial programs of both chains. The strike was quickly settled on Friday, however, two days after James C. Petrillo, AFM president, sent out the order.

McKay Named NBC Press Manager

John McKay, public relations and special events director for station WFIL in Philadelphia, on Friday, October 17th, was named manager of the NBC press division in New York to succeed William Kostka, who resigned a month ago. Earl Mullin, assistant manager, will continue in the same capacity.

Mr. McKay spent the past eight years as publicity director and public relations counsel for various firms. Previously, he was with the San Francisco Bulletin for ten years. He is a law school graduate.

Boston Film Frolic

Nearly 1,000 people attended the annual Motion Picture Frolic at the Hotel Bradford in Boston on Tuesday. Entertainers from various night clubs and Vaughn Munroe's orchestra were part of the evening's gala program. Jack Martin was general chairman of the committee in charge which included Clara Decone, Lorretta Duffy, Alvin Fucillo, Bertha Harris, Elmer Foster, Matthew Moriarty, Michael Hochberg, Samuel Eisenberg and Joe Barrilla.

Archibald to Midlands Post

George Archibald, former joint managing director with Edward T. Carr of United Artists in England, has been appointed Civil Commissioner for the Midlands region. It was first supposed that he would take a post with the RAF.

Reduced Theatre Prices Sought for Naval Men

Reduced admissions for members of the U. S. Merchant Marine, and those of the merchant marines, naval and military forces of nations benefited by the U. S. "lease-lend" bill, are being asked in the House of Representatives by New York Representative Hamilton Fish, as amendment to the new admission provisions of the Federal tax law which became effective October 1st.

The bill would authorize theatres to sell such persons tickets at reduced rates, taxable only on amounts actually paid. The arrangement would thus resemble that obtaining for members of our armed forces and the Civilian Conservation Corps.

During the recent Washington Senate and House committee hearings on the new tax bill, exhibitor leaders reiterated an old contention, that competitive non-theatrical performances, in churches, schools, clubhouses, and elsewhere, should also be taxed. Apparently, Congress agreed for these places were included in the bill.

However, last week came a measure, via Representative Martin J. Kennedy, of New York, proposing to repeal that section of the new tax law, 501 D, which imposes an admission tax on the mediums mentioned.

Admission Taxes Drop But Keep Lead Over 1940

U. S. revenue from Federal ticket taxes fell off between August and September but remained well ahead of the corresponding period last year, it was reported Wednesday by the Internal Revenue Bureau, at Washington.

Collections for September were $6,444,950, a decline of some $890,000 from the August figure of $7,330,284, but an increase of nearly $600,000 over September, 1940's total of $5,851,655.

All but $50,000 of the loss from August to September was centered in the Third New York (Broadway) District, where collections dropped from $1,590,584 to $739,831, the latter figure being under the September, 1940, total of $936,486.

For the first quarter of the current fiscal year national collections from admission taxes totaled $20,536,095 against $11,908,915 a year ago, and for the first nine months of the calendar year they were $59,183,648 against $23,076,747 for the corresponding period in 1940.

Solomon Sues MCA

Sidney Solomon, former owner of the Central Park Casino, New York, has filed suit in Supreme Court against Music Corporation of America for $100,000, claiming that the MCA induced Carmen Cavallaro, orchestra leader, to break an agency representatives' contract which he had with Solomon. The complaint was filed by Rudolph Allen, theatrical attorney. Mr. Solomon, after giving up the Casino, started business as a manager for musical artists and orchestra leaders.

Peninsula Studios Bought

Lester Park, commercial film producer, has purchased the Peninsula Studios in San Mateo, Cal., and plans to modernize and solicit Government film orders.

WHEN LIGHTNING STRUCK THE DISTILLERY

To the Editor of the Herald:

I've just finished reading the article in your October 11 issue of Motion Picture Herald titled "Studios' Tapping of Ready-Made Fame of Air Shows at New High." I think you've got something there.

I read the article with an extra special interest, because it was striking so close to home for me, as Uncle Slub said when lightening struck the distillery. That's why I'm writing you. Me and the Arkansas Traveler . . . we feel sorta left out.

We've had a lot of fun . . . the Arkansas Traveler and I . . . since we first hit radio back there a few years ago. We were with Vallee and Whiteman and around and then we joined Bing Crosby, then Paramount made a picture called "The Arkansas Traveler" and now the Traveler is on the air in his own series for Campbell's Cream of Potato Soup. Not only that, but Paramount's planning another picture to start right away using the character of the "Arkansas Traveler."

But we're not mad. No, Sir! I reckon we're like my Cousin Wafford who walked all the way from Van Buren to St. Louis, about 350 miles, to enlist in the Army. The draft board turned him down. Said he couldn't march because he had flat feet. But he wasn't mad . . . just disappointed.

Yours truly,

BOB BURNS,
Hollywood, Calif.

AN S.O.S. FOR THE 'PRODUCT DIGEST'

To the Editor of the Herald:

Something happened, either in your mailing department or the mail service of the New Deal—for we missed the issue of October 4th.

The 11th came to hand today.

But there are nine missing pages in our Product Digest (pages 296 to 305) because we did not get the Oct. 4th number of the Herald, and this is very bad.

This Digest business is the best idea you folks have ever sprung, and we already find the section extremely useful.

If you cannot mail us the Oct. 4th issue, at least please send us the Digest sheets which were used that week.

Yours truly,

N. W. HUSTON,
Liberty Theatre,
Columbus, Kansas.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Columbia

BLONDIE IN SOCIETY: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, "Daisy"—Best of all "Blondie" series so far. Crowd enjoyed this one immensely. Will do good on a double bill. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 5-8.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

HARMON OF MICHIGAN: Tom Harmon, Anita Louise—No good but will please the high school kids and since it is good football, ought to be played, I think. Played October 3.—Henley and Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

TIME OUT FOR RHYTHM: Ann Miller, Rudy Vallee, Rosemary Lane, Three Stooges—Ran this with "One Night in Lisbon" to a fair-sized crowd. The story and acting in general is not so hot. Some of the specialties are good and the Three Stooges are always enjoyed here. No one said anything but the general attitude was so-so. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 10th.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Marjorie Main, Virginia Weidler—Better than average business but reaction of patrons not so good. Beery very popular here but Miss Main failed to show that she is capable of teaming up with him. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 7-8.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Spencer Tracy, Ingrid Bergman, Lana Turner—We certainly didn't break any house records with this picture, proving conclusively that the buying public don't want a lot of heavy drama and long hair acting as a picture diet. Not worth much to any small town and no one would ever miss it if you didn't run it. The acting is swell, the picture on a par with any previous efforts, but it just won't make any money for you.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Spencer Tracy, Ingrid Bergman, Lana Turner—Very good, but no draw. Did the poorest Sunday-Monday-Tuesday business in two months. Running time, 122 minutes. Played September 28-30.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day, Red Skelton—This was swell entertainment as usual, but I wonder if it will hurt the series from now on as Miss Day is definitely out of the series from now on. We shall see later. Played October 10.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

LADY BE GOOD: Eleanor Powell, Ann Sothern, Robert Young, Lionel Barrymore—The kind of picture you like to stand at the door and have your patrons tell you about. Running time, 110 minutes. Played September 21-23.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland—As good as all the others, but I guess the people are getting tired of them here, as the last two we played have failed to do over average business. Played September 24-25.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

PENALTY, THE: Edward Arnold, Lionel Barrymore, Marsha Hunt, Robert Sterling—This picture pleased those who saw it, but so few came to see it. Business was way below average. Played September 29-30.—Miss Clea Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE VS. DR. KILDARE, THE: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—An excellent production that did better than average business for us. The entire series has been well received here. All members of the cast deserve credit. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 1-2.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

WASHINGTON MELODRAMA: Frank Morgan, Ann Rutherford—Just program, double-bill rating. It would be interesting to learn how double bills could be discontinued if such pictures continue to be made. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 3-4.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Red Skelton, Conrad Veidt, Ann Rutherford—This picture is really funny but what picture isn't that is full of spook stuff and a good comedian? Patrons were loud in their praise of the picture and some came the second night to see it again. Hardly strong enough for Sunday but worth a date on any other night of the week. Not a high allocation in my town.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

FATHER STEPS OUT: Frank Albertson, Jed Prouty, Lorna Gray—Good little comedy feature, a little slow in places, perhaps, but should do with another feature. Trailer on this is very poor. Running time, 63 minutes. Played October 5-8.—James Hoffman, Star Theatre, Hoisington, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall, Lynne Overman—A very beautiful picture and will please nearly all. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 14-16.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall, Lynne Overman—Terrific. Pleased 100 per cent and did grand business. Paramount tops the field for my money. Played September 21-23.—E. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall, Lynne Overman—A very good picture with beautiful color and music. Business above average. Play it. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 8-9.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

FLYING BLIND: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Nils Asther, Marie Wilson—Good action picture. My idea of a swell programer. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 3-4.—E. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

FLYING BLIND: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Nils Asther, Marie Wilson—Good little action picture which pleased the week-end crowd. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 10-11.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—A good picture with excellent airplane scenes but too darn long. Too many of the pictures nowadays are far too long. Length cannot make a picture good. Attendance was far below normal. Most of my crowd had already seen it in their home towns. Veronica Lake's dresses contained plenty of suspenseful moments. Running time, 135 minutes. Played October 9.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE: Mary Martin, Don Ameche, Oscar Levant—Drew fairly well against a night football game but not what we expected by a long, long ways. It seems that the title is misleading, many expecting to see some kind of a service picture, then are soured on the feature and think they don't like it, but the picture is fairly good. Played October 10-11.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll, Patricia Morison—Ran this with "Time Out for Rhythm" to a fair-sized crowd. The audience liked the dialogue in this one as it is very clever. The picture got plenty of laughs. For zany comedy, this has what it takes. Running time, 97 minutes. Played October 10.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Charlie Ruggles, Ellen Drew, Phil Terry—A very good western but business below par.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

POWER DIVE: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Helen Mack—Played this on our Anniversary to satisfactory business, although picture is weak.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Republic

MOUNTAIN MOONLIGHT: Weaver Bros. and Elviry—This series has a following who really like the stars but they are not too numerous. A good picture with a lot of entertainment and plenty of corn, but that seems to be what the fans are looking for. Play it on a week-end or bargain night and you'll do all right.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PUDDIN' HEAD: Judy Canova, Francis Lederer—Really did business. A small town natural.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PUDDIN' HEAD: Judy Canova, Francis Lederer—We ran this on a weekend date to just about average business and it seemed to please the class of patronage that will buy corn. It looks good enough for any day in the week and will make some money because it is not a high-priced feature.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ROOKIES ON PARADE: Bob Crosby, Ruth Terry, Gertrude Niesen—Not so hot! Tried to make a "Buck Privates," but missed the boat. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 1-2.—E. Danielson, Castle Theatre, Mabel, Minn. Rural patronage.

SUNSET IN WYOMING: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Was a good picture and enjoyed by all. Gene Autry will surely bring in the week-end trade. Business good. Played October 3-4.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

FARGO KID, THE: Tim Holt—A fair western that seemed to satisfy.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis, Frances Dee—Although this picture was somewhat old, it did business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BRIDE WORE CRUTCHES, THE: Lynne Roberts, Ted North, Edgar Kennedy—So did the manager wear crutches. No business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

COWBOY AND THE BLONDE, THE: Mary Beth Hughes, George Montgomery—Everybody liked this. Did nice business with it.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN BROADCAST, THE: Alice Faye, Jack Oakie, John Payne, Cesar Romero—Business slightly better than average. Picture fair. Oakie turned in best job of acting we have any recollection of him ever doing. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 5-6.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES, THE: Henry Fonda, Jackie Cooper, Gene Tierney—This is still a good picture and drew very well on our bargain night. It's worth running again and the print is in fair shape for a picture as old as this one. Trade another for it, put on bargain night prices and you'll do all right. Played October 8-9.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne, Glenn Miller and his Band, Milton Berle—This is extra good, so step on it and get yourself some extra profits. Played October 5-6.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Carmen Miranda—This was a beautiful colored picture. Don Ameche did some grand acting. My patrons commented on him very much. Business was only fair. Played October 1-2.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Carmen Miranda, Alice Faye, Don Ameche—A real good musical. We played second run to average business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Gene Tierney, Charley Grapewin, Marjorie Rambeau—No good for this house, I am sure. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 1-2.—Saul Korman, Grant Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Colored patronage.

VERY YOUNG LADY, A: Jane Withers, Nancy Kelly—Didn't do business expected.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WILD GEESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett, Warren William—A big disappointment as we expected too much from the picture. Might have been a "best selling novel," but it lacks a lot of being a "best selling" picture. It'll stand a good one day run as the mouth-to-mouth talk won't hurt any picture one day. Played September 21-22.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

WILD GEESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett, Warren William—Good picture which pleased average business on Sunday-Monday. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 12-13.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WILD GEESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett, Warren William—We did about average business on this picture and there were no squawks and no walkouts. It's a good picture, not outstanding, but stood up for three days to satisfaction for all concerned.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BLACKOUT: Conrad Veidt, Valerie Hobson—Although a good title for exploitation, it failed to do business. Purely propaganda picture.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP: Martha Scott, William Gargan—Played two weeks. Comments good from everyone as it was enjoyed by all. Martha Scott excellent. I'd give her the Academy Award for this. William Gargan's best performance yet seen. This picture should be enjoyed by any public. Could use more of this type. Teachers should not miss it. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 29-October 19.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TOPPER RETURNS: Joan Blondell, Roland Young, Carole Landis—Not bad, but no drawing power. We still can't put over these U. A. pictures, no matter what we do. They don't seem to make pictures for small town trade, and charge too much for them. Played October 8-9.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

Universal

BUCK PRIVATES: Bud Abbott, Lou Costello, Andrews Sisters, Jane Frazee—If you show this one (and don't fail to book it!) you'd better bolster your seats because your customers will be rocking with mirth. One gale of laughter quickly follows another as these two cemedians (Abbott and Costello) join the ranks of Uncle Sam's army. The humorous incidents are multiple and each is a riot of fun. Now that our "patrons" have become Abbott and Costello fans, we'll be looking forward to seeing them again. Alan Curtis, Lee Bowman and Jane Frazee supply the heart-interest and they do a good job, while Nat Pendleton, cast as the hard-boiled sergeant, fills the role to perfection. The Andrews Sisters supply plenty of rhythm and harmony in their own distinctive style and we hope they will appear more often. For a pleasant, all-around picture of enjoyment, "Buck Privates" fills the bill. Running time, 84 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director, Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PRODIGAL CONTRIBUTORS

Three prodigals this week returned to the What the Picture Did for Me department:

R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D.

Read the reports from these and other contributors in the adjoining columns.

MODEL WIFE: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Charlie Ruggles—A fair picture that did only average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris—A very good western that did extra business on Friday and Saturday on a double bill with "Mountain Moonlight" and pleased my rural patronage. It is worth a playdate and not a high allocation so should prove profitable in most any run, except Sunday. It's just too rough for the better class of patronage.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—This would make a good two-reel color subject but Warners tried to stretch it into one of the longest features of the year and only succeeded in boring our customers to death. Lots of walkouts here as they got tired of all the bees humming. Played October 1-2.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye—This is plenty good and will do extra business for you. Build it up good and watch the profits roll in. It's just the type of picture our public wants now and let us know it by a swell turn-out. Played September 28-29.—Henley & Burris Smith, Imperial Theatre, Pocahontas, Ark. Rural patronage.

NINE LIVES ARE NOT ENOUGH: Ronald Reagan, Joan Perry—Good little action picture which did fair business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played October 7.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LAW OF THE TROPICS: Constance Bennett, Jeffrey Lynn—Very good. Played this on midweek to a good business and it pleased nearly all. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 9-10.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

GHOST TREASURE: Miniatures—Good and worth a date. Best with a musical feature.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAPPIEST MAN ON EARTH, THE: Paul Kelly—A fair short.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

Gothic "harness:" mechanized defense in the year 1480

While the country's defense forces are forming their first lines of defense with the vital metals needed for projection room equipment and its parts, what is the exhibitor's first line of defense against premature wear, premature wear-out of projection room machinery? The first line of defense is Altec Service: it prolongs the life of parts, makes them perform at high efficiency throughout their entire service life. Today, more than ever before, it's good business judgment to do business with Altec.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had a net operating surplus of $183,585 during the year, ended March 31, last, it is noted from the report submitted to war services Minister Thorson, by Rene Morin, chairman of the Board of Governors, in Ottawa.

Summary of income and expenditures, signed by Gladstone Murray, general manager, and Harry Baldwin, treasurer, listed gross income of $4,092,794 and expenditures of $3,909,209. Largest source of income was derived from radio license fees, amounting to $3,140,259. Revenue from commercials amounted to $895,066 and subsidiary hook-ups brought in $44,647. Program expenditures totaled $1,721,755, station network $725,969 and engineering $746,154. A surplus of $183,584 was recorded after allowance for depreciation of fixed assets and equipment.

It was said there was a steady expansion of war effort features, commentaries and special broadcasts. Service to French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec was increased through daily broadcasts of French program by short wave to the west and maritimes.

Odeon Link Seen In Procurement of Gaumont British

As a result of negotiations now in progress in London for the acquisition by General Film Distributors of control of Gaumont British, a closer link between Gaumont British and the Canadian Odeon Circuit of Oscar Deutsch is expected.

General Film, financed by Arthur Rank and headed by C. M. Woolf, is expected to purchase the shares of the Ostrer Brothers in Metropolis & Bradford Trust, which controls Gaumont British. The acquisition would give the General Film group a controlling interest in the Gaumont circuit and a larger share in the Gaumont Studios, which is currently controlled by Twentieth Century-Fox.

It is generally believed in London that Mark Ostrer and Mr. Woolf would be joint managing directors, while Maurice Ostrer is expected to remain in charge of the Gaumont Shepherd's Bush studio. The remaining 49 per cent of the shares of Metropolis & Bradford are held by Twentieth Century-Fox. Isidore Ostrer, chairman of Gaumont British, is expected to retire.

It is also understood General Film plans no further share interest in the company than is necessary to insure control.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

BOXOFFICE SYNONYMS

References here to managerial imagination-power are frequently tagged with such phrases as "fast-thinking", "lightning-quick" mind and sichlike. The phrases have mostly to do with tieing the theatre to the headlines. Since these instances of high-speed calculation invariably show the theatreman moving automatically to hook in to the headline, it would be proper, in Round Table usage, to label "thinking" as synonymous with "fast" and "mind" with "lightning-quick".

Currently, support arrives from Clayt Cornell, at Schine's State, Tupper Lake, N. Y., and from George Laby, at Western Massachusetts' Victory, in Holyoke, Mass.

Cornell had a quick booking on "Man at Large". He noted that the story bore closely upon the recent capture by an American police officer, in nearby Ogdensburg, of a Nazi aviator escaping from a Canadian prison train. Recalling the sensational news headlines, Clayt made swift arrangements to have the officer appear on the stage and tell the story of the capture. A vigorous campaign was pushed to spread the word. The result was business greatly increased over expectations.

In Holyoke, a recent dry spell was impressed upon the students at Mt. Holyoke, a girls' college, with restrictions upon bathing, issued on account of water shortage. The story broke conventionally, then picked up headline impetus with amusing offers of bathing facilities by undergrads of nearby Yale and Harvard.

Laby marched in with a letter to the editors of the college paper, extending the privileges of the theatre's showers and dressing rooms. In the communication, run prominently in the college daily, Laby had a bit to say about the elaborateness of the theatre's equipment offered as a taken of his good-will toward the student body. Results, according to George, were "unprecedented numbers of patrons" from the school and a lot of kidding comment about the Round Tabler's offer of cooperation.

The evidence that managers move with day-in and day-out precision to make boxoffice out of headlines may have to do with the too much of an industry taking-for-granted of these powers. Few businesses are blessed with such seemingly bottomless sources of ticket-selling inspiration. It is time that more consistent applause was heard in substantiation.

Word from one of our active members, on learning that he landed in the top brackets of the Third Quarter-Master listings, a goal he has pursued for quite a time. Sez he:

"Really you cannot possibly know how much this means to me and my chances of going up with my organization, especially after trying for so long. I believe that this will mean a better job at a nice increase. So you know just what I mean when I say thanks."

SAMPLES INTO SALES

Trying out a radio quiz program at the Brant, in Brantford, Ontario, Bill Burke persuaded one of the merchants to sponsor the broadcast. Returns were good enough to convince the Famous Players theatreman that the tiein was sound enough to stand tightening. He also convinced the sponsor. So what started as a one-time shot now develops into a strong weekly program of theatre advertising with costs cheerfully borne by the now enthusiastic merchant. "You never know when you make a tiein of this kind where it will end," Bill happily notes.

Obviously, every one-time shot, radio or otherwise, cannot be built up to something more permanent. The Canadian's experience does aim to prove that merchants willing to sample theatre promotion can also be sold for larger and longer orders.

CARRIED BY ACCLAIM

What with the coming of the cold weather, the Society for Abolishment of Winter Drafts In the Theatre has held its annual meeting, passed resolutions, raised voices in supplication for relief to bald-heads and tender-ankles from this seasonal inquisition.

It was duly moved, seconded, unanimously passed that theatre managers be informed of this danger to otherwise genial dispositions, to be cautioned that failure to stuff those cracks may lead to a perilous running amok by those so afflicted.

A-Mike Vogel

Done effectively in gold and silver on a black velour drop was the setpiece created by Al Reh ahead of "You'll Never Get Rich" at the Warner Stanley, in Philadelphia, featuring cutout figures of the stars.

Harold Evens of Loew's State, in Cleveland, got his "Superman" serial off to a good start by having the creators, Jerry Siegel and Joe Schuster, local boys, on hand in the lobby first two days of engagement. Artists did their stuff for the edification of the kids.

Teaser gag ahead of "Major Barbara" at Loew's Midland, Kansas City, brought guest ticket offer by Johnny McManus to the first ten men appearing at boxoffice with whiskers. Above may be seen some of the "takers" displaying their hirsute adornment.

Round Table In Pictures

With folks in his situation band-conscious, Van Roberts at the Majestic, Wichita Falls, recently put on a program of big name band shorts. To sell the special midnight swing session, Van featured attractive setpiece illustrated below.

Utilizing the cartoon talent of usher Dan Harrington, manager Ray Jones of the Majestic, Houston, and Bob Kelly, publicist, put the lad to work sketching local personalities coming into the house and using layout for build-up on "Unfinished Business". Sketches were planted on lobby board, as below, with guest tickets awarded those identifying their likenesses.

"It Pays to Aid" Manager Asserts

For some six years, the businessmen's association of Des Plaines, Ill., have been conducting a late summer event which in the past few years has assumed the form of a sort of County Fair. Always active in this work, last year as president of the Chamber of Commerce, Manager Joe Feulner, of the Des Plaines, has been conspicuous at the festivities as chairman of the entertainment committee and master of ceremonies. Since the importance of the doings were widely recognized, the Round Tabler did not attempt to compete with unusual counter-attractions at the theatre, preferring to wait until his cooperation earned him a boxoffice break.

That came about with this year's party, when the Fair committee decided upon a combination beauty and popularity contest to stimulate sales of tickets. Feulner thereupon promoted the idea of having the Queen chosen upon the stage of the theatre in advance of the Fair, and packed the house accordingly. Plenty of publicity in the local and Chicago papers plus a lot of extra goodwill for the team-work, also contributed to the manager's credit side of the theatre's ledger.

Posters in the surrounding area distributed by the association carried a strong plug for the theatre and Queen-crowning, the Des Plaines being featured, too, in the special tabloid gotten out on Fair activities. At the theatre, the Mayor was guest of honor during the crowning with other civic heads on hand to give the bow to the theatremen. Cost was nil, says Joe, "being a good fellow and working with the association certainly paid."

Rosenthal Lands Story On "Dragon" Animator

Cooperating paper also featured a four day coloring contest for guest tickets, schools were flooded with cards announcing a special Saturday morning show and Liberty magazine boys distributed heralds on their routes. For out-front attention, Rosenthal's sign shop made up an eight foot Dragon which created much attention, while a special shadow box display with the Disney characters was used a week ahead.

Father Talks with Son in R.A.F. On St. Louis Tiein for "R.A.F."

The first personal telephone made to England from America since the British first declared war on Germany, was the result of a promotion on "Yank in the R.A.F." at the F&M Fox, St. Louis, according to Les Kaufman, ad head, when a local father with a son serving overseas in the R.A.F. spoke with the boy from the stage of the theatre. Found after a well-publicized four-day search, the parent, a railroad engineer, immediately accepted the invitation—and then the theatremen went to work.

Through the New York office of the Hal Horne Organization, after many calls between Washington, St. Louis and New York, the British Embassy finally relaxed restrictions to approve the overseas call, since all telephone conversations between the two nations were confined to government business. The goodwill possibilities of the unique stunt and that it would be featured in a stage broadcast, contributed importantly in gaining consent.

The call, at 8:30 on the Saturday night ahead of the opening, was made in front of a capacity house that filled the 5,000-seat theatre. Coverage was had by the wire services in addition to the local press, all of which, writes Lee, bearing heavily on the success of the engagement.

Flex Features Contests On Current Attractions

Through the cooperation of the American Legion, Jack Flex at Schine's Keith, in Syracuse mailed postcards to each member within the city limits stressing the importance of seeing "Citizen Kane." Board of Education also aided by sending letters to all English heads over the signature of head of all English departments in the school system, urging student attendance. Station WAGE got behind a contest with prizes offered to those submitting largest list of names of army officers who had attained the rank of General in any war in which the United States had figured.

For "Sun Valley Serenade," Flex daily featured a slogan contest in which contestants were required to submit appropriate names with which to advertise Sun Valley as a summer and sports resort. Radio coverage here included a song memory contest over WOLF in which Glenn Miller recordings were played, entrants required to list titles. Stickers were pasted to juke boxes, orchestrations planted with bands at leading hotels and sporting goods shops came through with effective window displays.

A movie title contest was landed in local paper ahead of "Aloma of the South Seas," promoted prizes going to those submitting titles of past pictures in which Dorothy Lamour had appeared, same contest landed over WAGE. For his lobby, Flex created an atmospheric Hawaiian background with title and cast in block letters.

Waits Day and Night For "Jordan" Opening

Folks in Worthington, Minn. were treated to the rare sight of a lad planted in front of the State Theatre with all the comforts of home as part of Happy Hasselo's campaign on "Mr. Jordan." Cot, easy chair, clothes tree on which was hung overcoat, sweater, rain coat, bathing suit and other paraphernalia were at hand, while meals were served to the "patron" waiting for the picture to open. Stationed out front a full day and night ahead, the stunt is reported to have created much comment.

Two weeks ahead a glass encased teaser one-sheet A board was placed out front with permanent copy reading "Mr. Jordan will be here in Blank days." Each day the number was changed, up to the opening day when sign read: "Mr. Jordan is now in town and ready to meet the people of Worthington." Stair risers in apartment and office buildings were covered with title copy, and tieup with local dairy brought distribution of bottle hangers with copy: "Work hard, live right, drink Blank milk and it will be years before you actually meet Mr. Jordan, but you must see," etc.

Hamilton Acts as Referee On "Pittsburgh Kid" Bally

Equipping a trailer truck with miniature fight ring, John Hamilton ahead of "The Pittsburgh Kid" at the Schine Palace, Oneonta had two youngsters battling away as bally toured city streets. From one corner of the ringpost was sign "In this corner Billy Conn, from the other Joe Louis." While streaming down from both corners was copy "When the gong rings, be in your ringside seat at the Palace to see the idol of fistiana in action."

To complete the fight atmosphere, John had two lads in ring togs and boxing gloves, one white and the other colored to represent the two oponents, battle it out. Each of the boys had seconds in their corners and the Round Tabler himself acted as referee. Hamilton says they paraded up the main streets stopping at busy corners, where at the sound of the bell, the kids went at it for two one minute rounds.

Wooten Ties "R.A.F." To Local Pet Parade

Walking alongside the line of march on both sides of the streets, usherettes distributed thousands of handbills, while these were also dropped from the roofs of the other local Fox houses.

With Smiley Burnett doing a personal appearance at one of the circuit's houses, and present at the reviewing stand during the procession, Wooten prevailed upon the star to get in a plug for the picture over the public address system. In addition, other boosts for the picture were made at local lunches, etc. at which the star was guest of honor.

Elliott Distributes Kisses On "Million Dollar Baby"

After advertising that the "Million Dollar Baby" would be on hand to give a kiss to every male patron, William Elliott of the Palace Theatre in McAdoo, Pa., stationed an attractive girl at the door to hand out candy Kisses to which a card was attached. The card read: "Here's your kiss from the 'Million Dollar Baby' Make a date to see her at," etc., etc. Elliott also had an outstanding newspaper campaign on "Blossoms in the Dust," ads featured the adoption angle with pictures of babies. He asked, in the ad, "Will you adopt this sweet child?" along with other suitable material. Also included in the ad was an information blank which interested persons could fill out. Readers were urged to fill out the blank and hand to the Palace cashier.

Block Main Street On Double Date

The Capitol, in Waverly, N. Y., does not usually play two top-line attractions within three days of each other. That occurred recently at the two-change-a-week situation when the Will Rock-Thurston magic show was booked in for two days, immediately followed with a week-end date on "A Yank in the R.A.F." The handling of both as one in the advertising campaign proved to be the answer, according to the report from T. J. Cary and Ned Kornblite, Jr., who speeded up the momentum created for the first for the benefit of the second.

This was accomplished by such smashes as three-column full ads plugging both dates, followed by co-op pages for the magic show, one a tiein with a leading jeweler. This was built around the "watch trick" used by the magician, the store supplying the timepiece advertised to be given away after the performance. Another co-op page was made up of a misspelled word contest, with guest tickets given for the best complete lists of corrected words in the various ads, each of which carried a plug for the date. The theatremen also hit with a novelty envelope and card. Envelopes read "we dare you to hand this to your wife unopened," others reading "sweetheart" instead of "wife." Inside a small card addressed to "Dearest," said, "I have been neglectful of late and am making a date with you right now to see," etc., etc. Costs were taken care of by restaurant copy on the reverse side, tied in with an "after the show we'll go to" head.

The front and marquee stressed both magic show and "Yank" and over 600 posters of varying sizes were used in the area. The advance newspaper publicity was in keeping and other factors of the campaign aided in bringing out the biggest week-end in the history of the town which tied up traffic and one of the three biggest in the theatre's history.

Youngsters Vie To Dine With Star

Further details reported by Ev Callow of the premiere of "Nothing but the Truth" at the Warner Stanley, in Philadelphia spotlighted a unique contest idea for boys and girls tied to the Record for two youngsters between the ages of seven and 15 to have dinner with Bob Hope, in town for the opening, and to attend the premiere with him. Interested youngsters were invited to write letters to the paper telling why they would like to have dinner with the star, each applicant requested to include snapshot with letter. Mothers of the winners were also invited to join the party, contest running for best part of a week ahead with plenty of buildup given to it by the daily with generous art breaks.

The presence in town of Bobby Jones, Lawson Little and other golf greats allowed Callow an opportunity to hit the sports pages by arranging a foursome with Hope as one of the players. The golfers also appeared on the stage at the premiere and their presence duly advertised. The date hit the news columns again with visit by Bob Hope to the Naval Hospital, where he entertained the patients and had lunch with the officers. The Warner ad man also made capital of the personal appearance of Caroline Lee, Paramount's baby star, brought East for the doings, arranging for stops at leading children's shops, the stores taking large size ads to call attention to the starlet's appearance, newspaper photographer on hand to snap the proceedings.

IN COURTS

Court Reverses Disney Decision

The appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York reversed a dismissal on Tuesday of the $200,000 damage suit brought by Adriana Caselotti against Walt Disney Productions, Ltd., and RCA Manufacturing Co., and ordered a trial.

Prior to this action the appellate division last week unanimously reversed an order by Justice Peter Schmuck, made on June 12th, 1940, which granted a motion to dismiss the action brought by Miss Caselotti against Disney Productions, Ltd. Miss Caselotte, who "dubbed in" the songs and dialogue for "Snow White" in the animated cartoon film, filed a suit for $200,000, charging that the defendant corporation broke an agreement by which her voice was to be used as that of "Snow White" only in the film.

Miss Caselotti alleged that the corporation had removed the sound track from the film and recorded her songs in the production of phonograph records. At the original hearing it was asserted that Miss Caselotti had signed receipts which gave the corporation the right to use her voice for all purposes.

Fox Asks Tax Cut

Twentieth Century-Fox has filed a writ in New York supreme court against the New York City Tax Commission, claiming excess assessments for 1941-42 on three unnamed company properties. The writ seeks a reduction from $1,590,000 to $1,250,000.

Assessment Cut Requested

Petition for a reduction of assessments on 11 Newark, N. J., theatres are being considered by the Essex County Tax Board and the State Board of Tax Appeals.

Hope Files Injunction

Bob Hope, motion picture and radio comedian, has filed an injunction in superior court in Los Angeles against Jack Douglas, writer, seeking to prevent him from working for "Red" Skelton, also a film comedian, or anyone else but Mr. Hope. Mr. Hope said that Mr. Douglas is under exclusive contract.

Song Suit Brought

Sonart Productions, Inc., New York, producer of the ice revue, "It Happened on Ice," has filed suit in New York supreme court for $250,000 damages against Robbins Music Corporation for alleged breach of contract.

Film Starlet Sued

Kathrine Grayson, film starlet, is being sued by a music teacher who claims to have discovered her. The teacher, Walter Schumann, said he placed her under a ten per cent commission contract in 1939. Miss Grayson recently signed a contract that will pay her $100,000.

CBS Suit Dropped

A stockholders' suit against Columbia Broadcasting arising from the sale of its concert and artists management bureau was discontinued last week in New York supreme court by Calvin E. Fritts, plaintiff. No explanation for withdrawal of the suit was given.

Order Transradio Quiz

Justice Louis J. Valentine of New York supreme court last week ordered Herbert Moore, president, and Dixon Stewart and Wallace Q. Quisenberry, vice-presidents, of Transradio Press Service, Inc., to submit to examination before trial on Tuesday, October 21st. The order was obtained by Time, Inc., charged by Transradio with libel in 1940.

Censors Upheld on Sex-Film Ban

The New York State Board of Regents, at its October meeting at Albany this week, upheld the opinion of its motion picture sub-committee, composed of Susan Brandeis, Gordon Knox Bell and W. Kingsland Macy, when it denied the appeal of Cinema Service Corporation, which sought a license for "They Must Be Told."

Director Irwin Esmond, in bannning the film, called it "indecent", "immoral" and "would tend to corrupt morals" within the meaning of Section 1082 of the Education Law.

Meanwhile, it was learned that the appeal filed by Greenbaum, Wolff and Ernst, New York lawyers, for Pan American Films, Inc., on "Forgotten Village" will probably be heard early in November. This film was also denied an exhibition license under the interpretation of Section 1082.

An injunction was granted on Monday to John Milton, owner of the Morton Park Theatre, Cicero, Ill., by the Superior Court, Chicago, against the town of Cicero restraining local officials from prohibiting the showing of "The Birth of a Baby."

The film had been shown at the Morton Park Theatre for 14 months, previously to the theatre's shutdown for the summer on July 1st, without interference, but when Mr. Milton announced the reopening of the picture he was warned by the Cicero police that he would be arrested if he showed it.

Exhibitors Protest Tax Assessments

Theatre owners of Tampa, Fla., are protesting against the valuations that have been assessed against their properties by the County tax assessor. This spring the Florida legislature changed the tax law to require all property assessed at the full cash value. Formerly assessments had been made on a basis of 25 per cent of the cost valuation. Under the new law property owners could turn in their valuations to the assessor. Failure to do so put it up to the assessor to enter the property at what he considered a fair cash value.

The 1941 tax rolls have now been finished and there have been many protests against the figures. Below are the figures as entered by the assessor and the amount claimed by the building owners of theatres. Column one is the name of the theatre building; column two the valuation entered by the assessor and column three is the valuation claimed by the owners.

Tampa	$345,420	$259,200
Florida	160,380	73,775
Victory	164,100	79,697
Strand	124,240	54,271
State	74,400	46,972
Ritz	51,600	24,000

Two-Faced Woman

(MGM, 1941-42)

Garbo in a Double Role

For this picture exhibitors have the magic name of Great Garbo that has spelled box office so many times in the past to attract crowds to their theatres. In effect there are two Garbos in this film because she is the "two-faced woman," playing the innocent nature-loving ski-instructor and her invented twin sister, an international siren. As would be expected Miss Garbo, as the ski-instructor or the twin that she has created to check up on her husband and to make his love enduring, gives a splendid performance, bringing to life each of the distinct and opposed characters.

In a way this film seems to be the ultimate in the cycle of pictures in which the two principals are married at the outset and then the action begins. Here the ski-instructor and the New York magazine editor, played by Melvyn Douglas, are married at the beginning but the chief action begins when the wife goes to New York and poses as her own twin sister. Her husband falls passionately in love with the twin who is a woman of the world in every sense of the term. Naturally this picture, as much or more than others of the general type, is decidedly adult entertainment on account of basic situations, scenes and dialogue.

Miss Garbo dominates practically every foot of the film in one or the other role and her excellent acting is chiefly responsible for the high entertainment quality of the picture. One scene of perhaps special exploitation interest is when Garbo, as the twin, dances in a New York night club. Douglas gives a performance in keeping with other somewhat similar roles which he has played. The principal support is given by Constance Bennett, playwright and lover of the editor; Roland Young, as Douglas' partner; Robert Sterling, a young man; Ruth Gordon, secretary and Frances Carson.

George Cukor's direction has given the proper emphasis to the twin roles of Miss Garbo and brought out the humor which is not all of the double-entendre type. Gottfried Reinhardt was the producer and no production values are lacking. A number of beautiful skiing shots are particularly notable. It is on skis that the principals meet in the beginning and make up at the end of the picture after the husband learns that his wife and her bewitching sister are one and the same and that he loves both in the one. The story is an original by S. N. Behrman, Salka Viertel and George Oppenheimer, suggested by a play of Ludwig Fulda.

Previewed at the New York exchange before a small audience of press representatives and exhibitors that gave every indication of being entertained.—MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.

The Shadow of the Thin Man

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1941-42)

That "Thin Man" Is Here Again—Goody!

There is nothing shadowy about "The Shadow of The Thin Man"—it has definite entertainment appeal, judging from the reaction of the preview audience. From a story by Harry Kurnitz and based upon characters created by Dashiell Hammett, it is a scion worthy of the traditions established by its forbears. Again it is a murder mystery to the accompaniment of comedy, or vice versa, and who is there that can resist either?

William Powell and Myrna Loy, as "Mr. and Mrs. Charles" continue to enjoy their domestic life, and so does the audience, particularly their repartee with its split-second quality. Mr. Powell takes his son for a walk in the park and reads fairy tales to him from a book, or, more exactly, from the racing form. They return to the house where Mr. Powell indulges in cocktails and banter with his wife, and milk, on which he chokes, with his son. Mr. Powell takes his wife to the races and gets a ticket for speeding—just like Mr. and Mrs. Average American. They also go to the wrestling matches.

"Mr. and Mrs. Charles," however, have an uncanny faculty for always being at the scene of the crime. When they go to the races, a jockey is murdered. When they go to the wrestling matches, a newspaper man is killed. Mr. Powell is forced to don his role as detective and begins to investigate clues. Eventually, he assembles at the "Lieutenant's" headquarters all the persons involved or suspected—mostly from the racing and gambling underworld—and identifies the master mind behind it all, the person, of course, you least suspect.

William Powell and Myrna Loy retain their titles as the favorite Mr. and Mrs. of the silver screen. Sam Levene as "Lieutenant Abrams" is very amusing, and Stella Adler, of the famous acting Adlers, deserves special mention in her portrayal of a moll. The rest of the cast includes Barry Nelson, Donna Reed, Alan Baxter, Henry O'Neill, little Dickie Hall, Louise Beavers, and last, but certainly not least, Asta.

Hunt Stromberg, producer and Major W. S. Van Dyke II, director, are responsible for a picture that is both satisfying and entertaining. The comedy kept the preview audience laughing often and heartily and the unraveling of the plot kept them interested. It is another "Thin Man," as good as its predecessors.

You Belong To Me

(Columbia, 1941-42)

Farce Comedy-Drama

This film begins with a burst of farce, maintains its pace till the middle and then assumes some of the attributes of melodrama. It pleased, so mightily, that many gag lines were lost by an anticipative Yonkers evening audience.

Henry Fonda, wealthy and bored, meets the girl, Barbara Stanwyck, a doctor, at a skiing resort. Arranging the skiing accident which made their meeting, he also arranges a "sickness" which she can cure by staying at the place. They marry immediately and the real comedy begins. The man, with time and money, must stay in his mansion racking his mind and energy with jealousy, while his wife works day and night. She works so much that they do not even spend their wedding night together.

That wedding night is one of the comedy highlights. Others are Fonda's various frays with "Dr." Stanwyck's male patients, whom he fears for their effect upon his new wife. The tension mounts as each of her male patients is revealed to him in handsomeness—and the explosion sees Fonda running off, to work his way in the world. But the employees' organization in the department store in which Fonda clerks, obtains his dismissal—because he does not need the job. Still desperately trying to prove to his wife, that he can be of worth, the husband then buys a hospital which his wife can manage and in which they can both benefit the world.

Previewed in the Loew's theatre, Yonkers, N. Y. The audience roared approval. The patrons appreciated the situations of innuendo, and Fonda as the male mentally cuckolded.—FLOYD E. STONE.

South of Tahiti

(Universal, 1941-42)

Island Comedy

Showmen who use secondaries have in this property somewhat more in the way of names, and about par in the way of amusement, with which to piece out a program.

Principal scene of the enterprise is an island peopled by gentle folk who don't care for white visitors but are kind to them and put up, not without a struggle, with the doings of three sailors who, having drifted to the place in a calm, have some ideas about taking away with them a fortune in pearls. The things that happen are those which generally do in such cases, including the discovery that the native king's daughter is a white girl, etc., but the treatment is for laughs this time, some of which materialize.

George Waggner, who produced, directed and wrote the lyrics of the song number featured, appears to have had his hands rather more than full of enough to do, but the veterans on the acting side manage to supply a deal of entertainment without much benefit of script.

Previewed at the Alex theatre, Glendale, where a capacity attendance was present to see "A Yank in the R.A.F." The previewed product collected several rounds of laughter during its early stages, tapered off in midpicture and finished soft after quite a number of the citizens had gone away.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

The Apache Kid

(Republic, 1941-42)

Don Barry Western

Republic brings to the screen another in the series of Don "Red" Barry westerns incorporating all the elements of action, romance and comedy which have made the previous endeavors of this series so successful.

Don Barry in this is cast as the leader of a wagon train headed for the Oregon territory. As they near their destination their supply wagon is destroyed and the settlers are forced to work as laborers on a new road under the leadership of a crooked construction executive who refuses to pay them their wages. Ensuing adventures follow until Don exposes the gang of outlaws and its leader.

Supporting Barry is Lynn Merrick who has been the leading lady for the star in his last four pictures. Others in the cast, which includes Leroy Mason, Robert Fiske and Al St. John, do much to aid and abet the swift progression of the story. George Sherman, as associate producer, has kept this chapter of the series on a par with its predecessors.

REPUBLIC REISSUING OLSEN-JOHNSON FILMS

Republic is reissuing two Ole Olsen-Chic Johnson pictures, "The Country Gentlemen" and "All Over Town".

In "The Country Gentlemen" the comedians are high pressure stock promoters, one step ahead of the law in the small town where they are operating. MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S review of the picture in the issue of October 31, 1936, said in part: "The film is well mounted. It moves along at a pleasing pace. Yet it never makes any pretense of being other than it actually is — frothy, lightly exciting comedy, wholesome throughout."

"All Over Town" was reviewed in the issue of August 28, 1937. The reviewer said that in the second of the Olsen and Johnson films for Republic "their style of humor is not best brought out," adding that "the material afforded them in the story is not altogether adequate to display efficiently all their talents, although it seems likely that their special fans will go for it."

Gauchos of El Dorado

(Republic, 1941-42)

Western au Dumas

The Three Mesquiteers are in the tradition of their swash-buckling namesakes in a story well stocked with plot and action. Their merciless tracking-down of outlaws is matched only by their compassion for ladies in distress.

A dying bandit has entrusted to "Tucson," "Stony" and "Lullaby" the money to pay off his mother's mortgage. But the errand is not so simple, for the money has been stolen from the bank, the mother mistakes "Tucson" for her son, and the bank, as well as the bandits, doesn't want the mortgage paid. "Tucson" hasn't the heart to tell the lady the truth, but is exposed as an imposter when it suits the bank's purposes. Then the three set out to clear themselves and insure the future comfort of "Madrecita."

There is opportunity for a good performance by Tom Tyler and a comedy routine including fortune-telling by Rufe Davis, ably supported under the competent direction of Les Orlebeck. Louis Gray produced the film, a stand-out in this series.

Three Girls About Town

(Columbia, 1941-42)

Farce

Columbia's "Three Girls About Town" is a madcap farce done in the best of the tradition Columbia has established for its zany comedies. Done with split second timing. The picture is a merry melange of laugh lines and situations, some of them however being very much on the adult side and others not overly careful on whose toes they trod.

Joan Blondell, Binnie Barnes and Janet Blair are starred in the film, with John Howard, Robert Benchley, Eric Blore, Hugh O'Connell, Una O'Connor, Almira Sessions, Dorothy Vaughan, Paul Harvey, Frank McGlynn and Walter Soderling in support.

The story deals with the efforts of two hotel convention hostesses and the hotel manager to conceal the body of a man they thought was murdered, because of the effect of the publicity on the business. A reporter stumbles onto the scheme, gets an exclusive when he recognizes the "corpse" as a government labor mediator. The newspaperman settles the threatened strike. The body turns out to be alive. And all ends well. Much humor is based on the events taking place during an undertakers' convention, with some of the humor going ghoulis in spots.

The cast delivers well for an entire set of rounded performances. The standout being Miss Blair, a newcomer.

Production of Samuel Bischoff and direction by Leigh Jason were excellent, Jason milking every bit of business from the Richard Carroll original screen-play.

Flying Cadets

(Universal, 1941-42)

Air Drama

A topical piece, having to do with a phase of the national defense program, "Flying Cadets" is a moderate drama of pleasing proportions. The story provides the elements of romance, action and near tragedy neatly packaged and presented.

Located at a small private flying field, it tells of a group of young men who are attracted to the newly formed training school by the reputation of the flying instructor, a World War I ace. The ace, who has led an exciting but aimless existence since that war, is brought up sharp when he finds the son he never knew about in danger. The experience reunites him with the girl he married before going over seas.

Coupled with the main theme is the romance between the war hero's younger brother and a girl taking flying instructions. Edmund Lowe plays the aimless hero, Frank Alberston, the brother who runs the flying field, and Peggy Moran, the girl. William Gargan is the steadfast friend of the hero and the intermediary between him and his brother. Frank Thomas, Jr., plays the hero's son—he who knows everything in the book about flying but "freezes" at the stick in actual flying.

Paul Malvern was associate producer. Erle Kenton directed.

The Men in Her Life

(Columbia, 1941-42)

Ballet vs. Marriage

This is essentially a woman's picture, with even-paced and slow action, telling of the struggle of a ballerina to attain success and then the conflict between the career and her love of three men. In the end the dancer is reunited to her husband through the action of their daughter who wishes also to devote her life to the ballet.

Loretta Young takes the part of the dancer, rather an unusual role for her, which she plays with deep emotion. Conrad Veidt, the ballet teacher and first husband; Dean Jagger, whom the dancer marries after the death of her first husband; Eugenie Leontovich, the personal servant and John Shepperd, a life-long lover, all give fine performances. Critics may be expected to applaud the acting. Also ballet enthusiasts should support this picture for it contains more ballet dancing than any feature seen here in some time with the exception of a French film, "Ballerina." Although this picture is based on the novel 'Ballerina" by Lady Eleanor Smith it has no relation to the French picture.

"The Men in Her Life" was produced and directed by Gregory Ratoff with particular stress on ballet scenes. The central theme is the old one of career vs. marriage and home-life. The ballerina marries her first husband, the instructor, chiefly out of thanks for his services to her. She marries the second, an American, when she thinks that she can escape from the ballet forever. But she leaves him to dance again. She has a child but does not tell the father. When the baby is two years old the husband finds out and takes the child to America. Some years later, when her best dancing days are over, the ballerina comes back to her husband and child and begins to teach her the ballet.

They Meet Again

(RKO Radio, 1940-41)

Calling Dr. Christian

In its portrayal of small town life, one would imagine that "They Meet Again," another link in the "Dr. Christian" series, would appeal only to small town patronage, but judging from the reaction of the audience in one theatre in New York, the picture has more universal connotations.

This comedy, with a tear trickling through it, opens with "Dr. Christian" giving a party for little Anne Bennett, a motherless little girl of nine, with a fine voice. As Barton Yarborough, her father, is about to leave the bank to celebrate, a shortage is discovered in his books, for which he is held responsible, and subsequently, in court, found guilty. Little Anne is not told that her father is going to prison, but finds out from her playmates, and becomes very ill. Dr. Christian gets his friends and household together, and they decide to "cherchez la femme," in order to establish Yarborough's innocence. This is eventually accomplished, and the picture ends with little Anne winning the state-wide singing contest.

The cast, although perhaps not of stellar proportions, fills the histrionic requirements most satisfactorily. "Dr. Christian" is sympathetically portrayed by Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Lovett is pretty as his nurse and assistant, and little Anne Bennett sings pleasantly and isn't too saccharine as the little girl. Some good comedy is contributed by Mamie Eburne, "Dr. Christian's" housekeeper, who solves all problems by astrology, Robert Baldwin, the town druggist, and little Leon Tyler, telegram messenger, singer and hoofer.

The story by Peter Milne is a mixture of comedy and tears, music—operatic, semi-classical and swing—and drama, and as such, has something to offer to everyone.

If the exhibitor has been praying for a good family picture, he can stop praying. Here is the supply to his demand.

"They Meet Again" is a Stephens-Lang production, directed by Erle C. Kenton.

Musical Story

(Artkino)

Russian Opera Story

Produced in Russia by the Lenfilm Studios "Musical Story" concerns a taxi-driver who becomes a great opera singer. Unlike a few of the film sent to this country it is without apparent propaganda and seems to have been produced for the purpose of entertainment. However, since the dialogue, the musical lyrics and the comedy lines are in Russian much of the entertainment value of the story is lost.

The musical presentations were arranged by D. Astradantsev and includes selections for such operatic shows as Bizet's "Carmen," Chaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "May Night," Borodin's "Prince Igor" and Flowtow's "Martha." Sergei Lemeshev, one of the Soviet's better-known opera singers, makes his film debut in this presentation as the singing taxi-driver, while Zoya Fyodorova, who appeared in "Three Women," another Lenfilm importation, is co-starred.

Directed by A. V. Ivanovsky and H. Rappaport, "Musical Story" should find a market in those situations where previous Russian productions have been tried and proven. For other exhibitors the picture will be just a story of the Russian Opera since it has little to offer patrons who do not understand the Russian language although English subtitles aid in clarifying the trend of the story.

Reviewed at the Stanley theatre in New York where a noon-time audience of only a few people understood the Russian dialogue and enjoyed the comedy angles of the picture.—G. S.

SAILORS WITH WINGS (RKO)

March of Time (23,103)

The March of Time, in its latest issue, presents a dramatic picture of the Fleet Air Arm, past and present. While the emphasis is on the new amphibian weapons, fighters, torpedo-carriers, scouting-bombers and giant, four-motored Coronada's, the background of naval aviation since before the last war is sketched in a series of shots from the archives of the Navy Department. The short is titled "Sailors with Wings," but the men who guard the fleet from the air are dwarfed beside the huge flying boats which they pilot and service. There are breath-taking scenes of squadron flights, dive-bombing, planes taking off from air-craft carriers, and catapulting down from the clouds. The excellent photography and vitally interesting material is not enhanced, however, by a melodramatic commentary.

Take Off That Blindfold!

YOU'VE GOT A SHOW TO SELL!

★ Use your eyes... use your ears... use your head. If pictures sold themselves, life would be one sweet song. You'd book your pictures and let the money pour in. ★ But friend, what a price you'd pay for your product. ★ Pictures must be sold and you're the fellows who must do the selling. You've got the quick contact with the people who buy. ★ SELL THEM...Don't wait until they come to you. Don't rely on the grapevine. Spread the news so that everybody, everywhere, old enough to be interested in entertainment will know. ★ That means ADVERTISE . . . put on a show to sell your show...and let the PRIZE BABY help you.
